TWO INKY WAYS.

(New York Sun.)

There was a man who advertised
But once—a single time.
In spot obscure placed he his ad
And paid for it a dime.

And just because it didn't bring
Him customers by score,
"All advertising is a fake"
He said, or, rather, swore.

He seemed to think one hammer tap
Would drive a nail clear in;
That from a bit of tiny thread
A weaver, tents could spin.

If he this reasoning bright applied
To eating, doubtless he
Would claim one little bite would feed
Ten men a century.

Some day, though, he will learn that to
Make advertising pay
He'll have to add ads to his ad,
And advertise each day.

TALK about the "intrinsic value of gold." Where is it when men have to eat horse meat while they dig it?

WHAT has become of Senator Keller and his beet sugar manufactory? Also the state's investment in beet seed?

WARDEN WOLFER denies the rumor that a man named Doyle escaped from the penitentiary a couple of weeks ago. It is claimed that such a man left the supervision of the county lockup, at Stillwater but not the penitentiary.

THE steamer Acte on Lake Minnetonka caught fire, supposedly from her fires not being properly extinguished Saturday night, at Excelsior, and burned. The boat was owned by Capt. Charles Cheeley and was one of the most popular on the lake. The boat is said to have been insured for $800 which will nearly cover the loss.

MINNESOTA has secured a chairmanship of a committee at the hands of Speaker Reed, the committee on ventilation and acoustics. Mr. Heatwole is the chairman appointed. What does he know about either ventilation or acoustics of buildings? If it is meant to let off the profanity for the House he's the man.

EDWARD EGGLESTON is reported as being in a hospital at Yonkers, N. Y. suffering from a compound fracture of the skull, caused by a fall from a horse he was riding. Rev. Eggleston formerly preached for the M. E. church, at St. Peter, St. Paul, and other appointments. He was also an author of renown, Hoosier Schoolmaster being one of his first stories to attract attention. He is 60 years of age.

SPECULATION in tickets to Alaska seems about as paying as the best diggings would. It is said that a few days ago when a ship which had sold 111 tickets was about starting on the trip, the last of the season, to make connections with the Yukon steamers, that three times the original price was freely offered to ticket holders for their tickets, and that one passenger after being offered $1500 for the ticket for which he paid $150 concluded to sell.

SPEAKER REED has finally announced the appointment of the Congressional Committees. It is said that at the united request of the Minnesota delegation Congressman Morris was appointed on Rivers and Harbors; Fletcher re-appointed on interstate and foreign commerce and territories; McCleary to his old place on banking and currency committee and committee on labor; Heatwole, foreign affairs and chairman of committee on ventilation and acoustics; Eddy, public lands, mines and mining and Indian affairs; Tawney, ways and means; Stevens on public lands and pensions.

SOME of our gold standard friends should explain to the people how it is that Brown University compels President Andrews to resign or quit talking for the free coinage of both gold and silver. Last fall they were quite prompt to deny that employers were compelling their employes to vote for gold standard; but this case hardly admits of denial; and we believe that many of the denials referred to above could now easily be proven false. The employer may not consider it compulsion but where a poor man with a family depends on his daily work at his trade for a living [illegible] to understand that in case a certain party don't win he will lose his job it comes pretty close to being compulsion these times.

THE gold fever comes periodically, something like 17 year locusts, and probably does as much harm to most of its victims as do these pests to Western farmers. A generation ago, covered wagons were numerous pointed for the west and labeled "Pike's Peak or bust." Some of them reached the neighborhood and wished they hadn't come. A few years ago "To the Black Hills" was the cry. Gold was to be picked up plentifully. Many went. Some of them, not far from here, we understand, after they had reached there got hungry and came home afoot. There may be gold in Alaska. The probabilities are there are now men enough on the road to dig it. Let those who have anything to do at home attend to it and when the gold is shipped into this country you will have something to exchange for a fair share of it.

MARYLAND Democrats are said to have come to an agreement to once more take their place as the controlling party of the state, and have adopted resolutions declaring that the fundamental principles of Democracy have remained unchanged.

The Democracy of Maryland, in common with the Democracy of the Union, believe now, as they always have believed, in honest money, the gold and silver money of the constitution and the coinage of both metals without discrimination against either, into standard dollars of final payment and redemption.

They express gratification at the fact that the six and a half millions of votes cast for bimetallism has brought the administration to appoint a commission to provide for international conference and express a belief that bimetallism must come, sooner or later.

THE Minneapolis Times in replying to a question by "A Few Readers" gets caught in its own trap. The question asked was "we would like to ask why he (President Andrews) as president of Brown University, should be deposed and criticised for publicly expressing his views in favor of silver, while President Northrop of the University of Minnesota at the same time publicly championed the gold cause and escapes criticism?" The Times argues that Brown University is run by donations from wealthy men who don't believe in the free coinage of silver and gold, and that they have a right to turn him off for talking and teaching such doctrine. Who hires the President of the Minnesota University? And is he hired to advocate gold standard? And can't the Professors at the "U" have their own politics? We don't want a University professor muzzled. Not so long as they properly discharge their duties. And President Northrop is pronounced a model President.

Liability of Bondsmen.

General Laws of 1887. Chap. 6.

SECTION 1. Any person applying to the county commissioners of any county, or to the municipal authorities of any city, village, town or borough in this state for a license to sell intoxicating liquors shall, before the same is issued, file with the clerk of said board of commissioners or with the clerk or recorder of such city, village, town or borough, a bond, with two or more sureties who shall be freeholders of the county and who shall justify in twice the amount of said bond, to be approved by the said board of county commissioners or by the common council or other governing body of any town, village, or borough, or the common council of any city to which such application is made, in the penal sum of two thousand dollars ($2,000) conditioned that the said person so licensed will not sell or otherwise dispose of any intoxicating liquors at any place other than the room named in such license, nor on the Sabbath, nor on any general or special election day, and that gambling with cards or with any other means or device for money or its representative, or other thing of value, in the house or place of business of such person, and will not sell, barter, give away or otherwise furnish or dispose of such liquors to any minor person, or to any pupil or student in any public school, academy, seminary or other institution of learning, nor to any intemperate person nor habitual drunkard. No person shall be accepted as sureties on any such bond who are already on any other bond given pursuant to the provisions of this section.

From the reading of the above law it would seem little likely that a saloon keeper would break his contract, made in his license from the proper authorities. That intoxicating drinks could be had on election day, or on Sunday, or after eleven o'clock at night; that old drunkards, or minors would ever get intoxicated; that cards and other games would be permitted in any saloon; or in case he did that he or his bondsmen would not pay the penalty. And yet, strange as it may seem, men supposed to be clothed with the usual amount of intelligence go to the saloon and help violate the contract for which they are surety. Business men on the bonds allow buckets of beer brought by children and often, sold to boys of tender years, into their shops, offices or houses. In Minneapolis some surities have been made to feel the responsibilities they had assumed, and how responsible men can sleep soundly at night while their names are affixed as surety to a bond they know is being broken about every day and night in the year, and which they often assist in breaking, and which any minute they may be called upon to make good in these pressing financial times we don't understand; unless it be they are well under the hypnotizing influence of the stupefying liquors themselves.

Village officers, Justices, Constables and others are, for neglect, or refusal to do their duty in enforcing liquor laws or the issue of license therefor, "deemed guilty of malfeasance in office and shall thereafter be disqualified from holding the same for and during the remainder of the term for which he was appointed and shall be liable on his bondin an amount not more than (500) dollars nor less than (100) dollars, recoyerable in any court having jurisdiction." It looks then as if officers and their bondsmen would look out a little for their own interest. At any time a mine is likely to explode all along the line, officers and bondsmen are liable to wake up to the realization of the fact that Minnesota has a license law, for the regulation of the liquor traffic, and which may be used for its regulation and not exclusively for its protection.

Penalties on saloon keepers for violating their license contract are very heavy; for several offences they may even loose their license. It looks as if people wished to continue in the business they would not have their saloons full of boys playing cards and other games; that they would not keep open Sundays; that they would not have a gang of boisterous, chronic drunkards, shouting in their places; that they would endeavor to keep the contract made with the village, according to law, to furnish adult citizens at certain hours of the day, and not on Sunday, with what intoxicating drinks they can take without becoming drunk.

Somebody may read up the liquor laws and conclude to enforce them. They are peculiarly strong laws, and the penalties are not light, and they are quite plain and can be enforced if anyone goes about it properly.

So long as the letter or the law is observed, the saloon keeper is well protected in his business. But unless he wants the law looked up for his case we would advise him to keep the boys out; to close on time; and on Sunday; to stop games; to not have drunken men about, nor furnish them with drinks; and to not lay himself and his bondsmen liable from any breach of his contract.

Double Dose.

It is bad enough for poor folks to be obliged by law, to pay protective tariff prices for what they wear, and what they use, to help build up rich monopolies and trusts which are continually cutting down the wages of their help, until unable longer to bear it they must either become regular slaves or quit work. But when it comes to the trusts aiding in getting up strikes to lay their wage earners off for weeks or months while the bosses take their summer vacation, and turning them out to live on the charity of the people it is kind of doubling the dose. Farmers and people of the Northwest generally have enough to eat, and when necessary are willing to aid those in need. But when the trusts hire men when they please, and then turn them off during hard times, by cutting wages below living rates, expecting people to keep them while paying protective rates for what these same workers have produced, they are asking a good deal. It looks as if the laborers and those who stand by them in need might get together about voting time on some questions.

Dingly Tariff Bill.

The Dingly tariff bill with which Congress has been juggling for lo, these many moons, has finally been passed, and the signature of William Mc Kinley, President, has been affixed; and the Dingly tariff is now in operation.

Of course we want see much of the benefits to be derived from such a protective tariff until we go to lay in our winter's supply of clothing and find our woolens have gone up; that the shoes for the whole family have advanced; of course we may feel it a little on sugar and a few little things.

We may be brought to a realization of the fact that Dingly bills are as poor revenue raisers as any too, when the fact develops that every importer that could and that had faith that Congress would eventually pass the high protective tariff bill has stocked up with all the goods he can carry, that high rates are placed on, and that imports for months will not reach what they have for several months past, and consequently, in order to keep the gold reserve in the Treasury. More government bonds will have to be sold or some other way provided to meet the running expenses of the country.

If prosperity don't come at once of course the new tariff bill will be blamed with a portion of the reason therefor. We don't think it can possibly injure the country as much as can the contraction of the currency to the smallest point; but the two together must be terrible.

Rumor is that Whitelaw Ried may succeed John Sherman as Secretary of State in the near future.

Alvah Eastman, of St. Cloud, has received a recess appointment of Receiver of the St. Cloud land office.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 16, 1897

The Senators who opposed the tariff bill began their kicking several weeks too late. Had they not allowed themselves to be tricked by the trust-bound supporters of the bill while it was being considered in the Senate they might have had everything that they kicked too late for, and might even have succeeded in defeating the bill. When cotton ties, cotton bagging and burlaps were put on the free list, and the duty on white pine lumber was reduced to $1, the trust-bound Senators did it merely to keep the opposition quiet and with no intention of allowing them to remain. Had the kicking been done at that stage of the game it would have been easy to have secured pledges that would have insured those items being let alone in conference. To kick on the conference report could accomplish nothing, unless backed by votes enough to reject the report, because the report had to be accepted or rejected as a whole. The new tariff will do more for the democrats than any idle kicking on the floor of the Senate could do.

The fight against the confirmation of J. V. Powderly to be Commissioner General of Immigration has become so warm that Mr. Mc Kinley has requested republican Senators not to have a vote taken upon the nomination until the regular session of Congress. The labor leaders who are fighting confirmation say they have pledges from a sufficient number of Senators to make the rejection certain, if the vote were taken now, and Mr. Mc Kinley regards rejection as so probable that he has promised to give the place to another man. He wants Powderly to hold it during the recess of Congress, in payment of campaign obligations.

Senator Tillman was a very mad man when Czar Reed made the House committee on Rules refuse his request for a special order for the House to vote upon his Dispensary bill, already passed by the Senate, at this session. Representative Elliot, of S. C., opposed the granting of Senator Tillman's request.

According to an expert business man, the following is the tax that will be paid to the sugar, tobacco, and leather trusts, on account of the new republican tariff: An average of 50 cents more for each pair of shoes; from 25 cents to $1 more for every leather satchel or trunk; from 15 to 25 per cent advance in price of belts, straps, harness and other leather goods, ¼ to 1 cent a pound more for sugar, and a general advance in prices and deterioration in quality of all candies and preserves, an advance of 50 cents a box on imported cigars and a general lowering of quality in all grades of cigars and cigarettes.

Some of Speaker Reed's admirers are very sore because they accepted that little fairy story about the House conferees standing out for a sugar schedule that would operate against the trust, and played sugar stock to fall. Its tremendous use, which is now history, caught them for large amounts.

Although Senator Wolcott, Mr. Stevenson, and Gen. Paine may not know it they are, unless all indications are at fault, being used as tools by the single standard gold men. While they suppose themselves in Europe for the purpose of making friends for international bimetallism it looks as though they were there merely to help the single standard gold men retain their grip on the United States. It will be remembered that these gentlemen were instructed before their departure for Europe that all their negotiations must be conducted through or in conjunction with the U. S. Ambassadors. Therein lies the whole plot. The U. S. ambassadors to Great Britain, France and Germany are each as strong advocates of the single gold standard as Secretary Gage is. They had privately made known the situation in the United States to the governments to which they are accredited before the arrival of the silver commission - that unless the single gold standard countries came to the rescue the silver men would elect a majority of the next House, the Senate already having a silver majority, and be in a position to pass a free coinage bill. Nothing more substantial was asked than that those governments should agree to the holding of an international conference next year, and now the announcement has been made that one will be held next fall. The date will be specially arranged so that the Congressional elections will take place before it is known that the conference is a failure as it is certain to be.

The conference is relied upon to keep those republicans who believe in the possibility of international bimetallism in the party traces. It is quite a nice scheme, but its success depends upon the willingness of many voters to allow themselves to be hoodwinked into the belief that the international monetary conference will do something.

What's the Matter with These Three?

Washington, July 24.—(Times Special)—Among the nominations that failed of confirmation by the senate are the following: Terence V. Powderly, of Pennsylvania, to be commissioner of immigration; Thomas Fitchie, of New York, to be assistant commissioner of immigration, port of New York, and Alvah Eastman, to be receiver of the St. Cloud, Minn., land office.

Fight Them With Finances.

Mr. Towne is so indignant over the President Andrews affair that he calls upon the friends of liberty for another subscription.—Duluth News Tribune.

Should Mr. Towne succeed in securing a larger amount than that said to be already offered Brown University and for which President Andrews lost his place because of his financial views perhaps the President of the Free Silver Republican party could induce the Brown University Board to give President Andrews his old place as head of the school. When things are for sale there's nothing like raising the price.

Mr. McKinley's Betrayal.

The President still withholds his Currency Commission message.

The excuse is that it might interfere with the Tariff bill.

But the President was elected on a pledge to reform the currency. That was the only real issue in the campaign. It was on that pledge alone that hundreds of thousands of Democrats voted for him who did not and do not believe at all in his policy of a tariff for trusts only.

His failure to make the currency issue a matter of primary concern is already a scandal. His persistent and insistent subordination of that vital buestion to the tricky political problem of getting through a trust tariff bill for the rewarding of campaign contributors, in face of the fact that the men who gave the votes that decided his election are utterly opposed to any such bill, is a shameful betrayal of trust.—N. Y. World.

Exemplary Leaders.

Inasmuch as State Auditor Dunn, Warden Wolfer, and Editor Wheelock were the three most pronounced and the three most conspicuous friends of the Youngers in this raid they are certainly entitled to all the honor and all the credit they can get out of it. But since their course in this matter was actuated entirely by that sublime sense of human love so characteristic of these three champions let us leave it to their own personal acquaintances to award the merits. At the same time it is strictly proper that raiders on public sentiment should be made an example of as well as bank raiders. If murderous outlaws and hypocritical leaders of public opinion are permitted to control state affairs what will become of society? There ought to be something done to deter others from championing the cause of robbers and murderers in the community.—Midway News.

HOT ONE FOR PRATT.

Rev. Thomas McClary Mentions No Names, but—

Rev. Thomas McCleary of the Western Avenue M. E. church was the speaker at the gospel temperance meeting at No. 20 Hennepin avenue yesterday. In touching the financial side of the liquor question, he said:

"Give us the money that the saloon receives and controls and we can let the Goulds and the Vanderbilts and the trusts and monopolies keep their money, for we can build railroads and conduct business that will give employment to our industrious idle people. One billion two hundred million dollars, put into the channels of legitimate trade, would start the busy hum of industries that would furnish employment for all the idle who wish occupation. It is a business whose blighting influence on every worthy object in life is such that, if society is to be perpetuated, it must die. And the church must swing into line. Within her she has the power to destroy the horrible damnable business; for, after all, the church is the greatest, strongest influence in our civilization. She has the numbers, she has the brains, she has the wealth, and if she would be true to her Master, she must strike down this abomination that is carrying souls for whom Christ died to drunkards' graves and drunkards' rewards ten times as fast as the church can save them."

He digressed to touch on the local situation, upon which, among other things, he said: "It is time we see to it that the man who is elected to enforce the laws obeys the law himself. How can we expect that those who make gain out of the violation of the law, and those who have no regard for the law, will obey it if the chief executive who is sworn to obey and enforce the laws fails to do his duty? But God is marching on, and sooner or later, perhaps sooner than we think, the curse will go. Peacable if it can, but forceable if it must. But it will go."—Minneapolis Times.

MONOPOLY'S IRON HAND.

The Dismissal of President Andrews Pointed Out as an Evidence of Plutocracy's Power.

London, July 28.—The Daily Chronicle this morning devotes an editorial article to the dismissal of E. Benjamin Andrews from the presidency of Brown University, which action it regards as the most serious blow the capitalist oligarchy has yet struck at social, economic and intellectual liberty in America. The Chronicle says: "There is no doubt that, like Professor Bemis, who was dismissed from the University of Chicago, President Andrews was dismissed because he warned his countrymen against the growth of great monopolies. It seems certain that a conflict is approaching that will shake the Union as it was shaken by the great slavery question. It looks as though the splendid millionaire endowments of American Universities had the unworthy motive of the promotion of the interests of the monopolists. We anticipate a great wave of opinion against the pretensions of the monopolist class as dangerous to freedom. This movement will lead to the substitution of public for private control and ownership of the big trusts and monopolies and the substitution of state for private universities and colleges.—Minneapolis Times.

Our Third Senator.

The Republicans persist in laying to the influence of Charles A. Town with the U. S. Senate, most everything that don't go just to suit them. While ago they claimed Towne had gor the tariff on lumber from $2 down to $1 per thousand feet. Now they are claiming that he is keeping Editor Alva Eastman, of St. Cloud, out of a land office business. Senator Towne must be bigger than Congressman Morris.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

Wet weather most of the time; poor weather for making hay, but good for catching frogs and going fishing.

Out in the country we do not have good roads anymore, it keeps so wet.

Oscar Nelson has a very interesting Bible work that he is canvassing the town for. It is just the thing for students.

Numan Hall, of Montana, was calling on friends in Independence last week.

Can't see as times have improved any during the last week, but perhaps they will come along soon.

The mosquitoes and black flies have not been so bad for ten or fifteen years. They make it very hard on the milk man.

B. L. Hall, of Fargo N. D., was calling on friends in our town one day last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Calos Blodget, of Waubay, South Dakota, was calling on friends in Independence last Saturday and Sunday. They were on their way home from old Va. They seemed to like the South very well and talk some of locating there.

Can't see much change in business or times since the passage of the Dingley bill and the moving of Mark Alonzo Hanna into the white house.

If good times and prosperity comes by promise, only, then we should have had them long ago. Our last administration was a failure, and should it be repeated again our country will be in a bad fix.

Not much news this week, Mr. Editor, everybody is busy working between showers.

Late Literay News.

With five delightful stories in the August Cosmopolitan, one might judge that it was intended solely for light reading in mid-summer; but a second glance shows that it contains as well much of serious interest. The second paper by the special commissioner sent by the Cosmopolitan to India tells a tale the like of which has never before appeared in any periodical. We have in histories second hand accounts of great famines, but they lack that startling destinctness which comes from beholding at first hand the sights described. Twenty millions of people slowly starving to death, many of them in sight of the railways! No American can form any idea of the state of affairs now existing in India. Mr. Hawthorne has gone into the interior and stood amongst the dead and dying. It is the first time that we have had an American investigation of the condition of affairs in India. The report will open the eyes not only of the civilized world, but of the English Parliament and the Queen herself to the necessity of extraordinary exertion in behalf of these unfortunate millions.

President Dwight, of Yale, furnishes this month's consideration of the question, "Does Modern College Education Educate in the Broadest and Most Liberal Sense of the Term?"

A charmingly illustrated and charmingly written article on "Japan's Stage and Greatest Actor," by Robert P. Porter; the second part of Le Gallienne's "New Rendering of the Rubaiyat;" a sketch of that most wonderful crusader Godfrey de Bouillon, and a new poem by Bret Harte are also part of the contents of this August Cosmopolitan.

Brooklyn estimates from a new directory that its population is 1,350,000. It is the largest city that has ever given up its identity.

The city of Cambridge, Mass., with a population of 85,000, has had no saloons since 1886, the people voting no license for 11 consecutive years.

The money that was raised to give Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe a statue will probably be applied to the purchase of the old Hartford home of the family for her daughters.

The fellow who points "an empty gun" at you, or "rocks the boat to hear the girls scream," should have the hose turned on him at the very first indication of an outbreak.

New York city is running ten vacation schools this summer on the lines of manual training. They provide moderate studies for 100,000 children who would otherwise be in the streets.

Thomas A. Edison says he can close the Golden Gate against the navies of the world by "torpedoes propelled by an endless chain." He declares that electricity will be the great agent in the next great war.

A Florida man has experimented with the sugar in watermelons until he can produce an ounce of fine candy from eight ounces of melon pulp. The idea of Americans spending $100,000,000 a year abroad for sugar is one of our national absurdities.

During the last few years nearly 150,000 Hebrews have entered Jerusalem, and the arrival of another host is said to be imminent. Already the railways are opening the country between the coast and Jerusalem and Damascus, and a Hebrew migration on a large scale may cause Syria to become once more of vast importance in the east.

The frequent desertions from the navy during the last few years and the evident growing disinclination of men along the seaboard to enlist in that service has prompted the department to open recruiting stations in Duluth and Chicago for the purpose of augmenting the navy from the interior states. The pay is considerably above that in the army and the work not much harder.

The reclamation of submerged land in Jamaica bay, Long island, has now been in progress for about four years. In this bay are about 40 or 50 small islands which will be gradually reclaimed. The present plan of improvement includes about 22 islands, embracing about four square miles of territory, and some of this land is now ready for occupation. The land lies within Greater New York.

A waterspout in and about Lake Erie picked up a vast volume of water and picked up also an assortment of fish, water snakes and turtles, and after carrying them for miles dropped all upon Middle Sister island, much to the astonishment of the keeper of the lighthouse, Capt. West, and his family. Lake Erie this year has been famous for waterspouts, and half a dozen have been reported by hosts of witnesses whose veracity cannot be doubted.

A writer in answer to the question, "Where is the hottest place on earth?" names "the lower valley of the Ganges, where the daily summer temperature is from 105 to 110 degrees. During the monsoon the Euphrates country registers from 115 to 120 degrees. The sandy wastes of Arizona frequently send the thermometer to 110 and 115 degrees, but Massowah and the Red sea country lead all. In the sun the thermometer reaches 170 degrees, and in the shade 130 to 145 degrees, and life in the open air is sacrificed."

Twenty-five years ago scientists predicted that abundant coal fields would be found on both sides of the British channel, and the predictions have been fulfilled. Besides the great Kentish fields discovered several years ago and yielding bountifully ever since immense tracts of coal have been recently found between Calais and Cape Grisnez. The French discoveries were the result of those in England, geologists being sure that the same belt of coal extended under the water from one country to the other. This last discovery is of the greatest importance to industrial France.

Australians are figuring up their losses as the result of the severe drouth of the past summer. It is found that sheep and cattle have died by thousands and tens of thousands, and every colony is poorer by hundreds of thousands of pounds. It would seem as if Australia had had its full share of ill luck. For three years past things have gone awry because of unprecedentedly unfavorable weather. The full amount of the losses will probably never be known, and the reputation of the colonies has suffered more than all. Better fortune should be in store for one kin of the antipodes.

Edward Hanlan Ten Eyck, the first American to win the Diamond sculls, the coveted prize for amateurs at the annual Henley regatta in England, comes of a rowing family. He is descended from a race of watermen who have lived for many generations at Peekskill-on-the-Hudson. His grandfather ran or rather sculled a ferry across the river at this well-known point. His father was an oarsman of the first class. And as if heredity were not enough to make a waterman of Edward, christening was called in to lend its suggestive aid to the exercises which was to lead him to fame.

As an outcome of old wars and differences in South America all diplomatic relations between Brazil and Colombia and Ecuador were severed 27 years ago, and none of these countries has since been represented at the capital of the other by a minister. The governments have come to the conclusion that this state of affairs has lasted long enough, and Brazil has sent a special envoy to reopen negotiations and put matters upon the usual footing. South American pride has stood till now in the way of such a compromise. Brazil has taken the initiative and the other countries will meet it half way.

FIFTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

Proceedings of the Special Session.

The United States senate on the 21st concluded the formal reading of the tariff conference report. The debate was spiritless in the main. In the house a joint resolution was passed requesting the president to make such investigations as will elicit all the facts in reference to the restrictions put upon the sale of American tobacco in foreign countries.

The debate on the tariff conference report in the United States senate on the 22d was participated in by Senators Chilton, Jones and Pettigrew in opposition, while Senator Aldrich defended the report against their criticisms. Mr. Turley, the new senator from Tennessee, took the oath of office. In the house Mr. Dalzell (Pa.) introduced a bill to authorize the president to suspend in part or in whole the discriminating duties imposed on the vessels of foreign countries which impose similar duties on our vessels, and Mr. Stone (Pa.) presented a measure to authorize the appointment of a monetary commission and to provide for its expenses.

The tariff debate came to an end in the United States senate on the 23d and it was decided to take the final vote on the 24th. A house bill was passed authorizing the president to suspend discriminating duties imposed on foreign vessels and commerce. In the house the senate bill to ratify the compact entered into between the states of South Dakota and Nebraska relative to the disputed boundary line was passed.

The Dingley tariff bill as amended is now the law of the country. By a vote of 40 to 30 the United States senate at 3:04 o'clock on the afternoon of the 24th accepted the conference report and at 4:07 the president signed the bill. A currency reform message was received from the president and referred to the finance committee, and then the senate adjourned sine die. In the house Speaker Reed signed the tariff bill, the currency reform message from President McKinley was received and a bill was passed putting the president's recommendations into execution, and then, after the committees were announced, a final adjournment was taken.

IS NOW A LAW.

President McKinley Signs the Dingley Tariff Bill.

Senate Gives Conference Report a Majority of Ten—New Rates Took Effect Midnight of July 23—Congress Adjourns.

Washington, July 26.—The tariff bill passed its last legislative stage at three p. m. Saturday, when the senate, by the decisive vote of 40 to 30, agreed to the conference report on the bill. The announcement of the result was greeted with enthusiastic applause by the crowded chamber. The bill was at once sent to President McKinley, who signed it at 4:07.

The Vote.

Yeas—Aldrich, Allison, Baker, Burrows, Carter, Clark, Davis, Deboe, Elkins, Fairbanks, Foraker, Frye, Gallinger, Gear, Hale, Hansbrough, Hawley, Hoar, Jones (Nev.), Lodge, McBride, McEnery, McMillan, Mason, Morrill, Nelson, Penrose, Perkins, Platt (Conn.), Platt (N. Although the result was a foregone conclusion, yet this did not abate the eager interest attached to the close of a great contest. Early in the day the debate was listless, though enlivened at times with virulent criticism by Senator Allen and by a speech from Senator Burrows of the finance committee.

Senators Caffery, Morgan and Stewart occupied the time up to three o'clock, when the vote was promptly taken. Then came a long parliamentary battle over final adjournment. The opposition endeavored to score a point by compelling a vote on laying the president's message before the senate, and, succeeding in this, attacked the majority for refusing to act on the president's recommendation. The main desire of those opposing adjournment was to secure a vote on the Harris resolution calling on the president to stop the sale of the government interests in the Union Pacific railroad. For four hours an acrimonious parliamentary contest was waged. Gradually the tactics of the opposition were overcome, and shortly before seven o'clock Senator Morgan withdrew further opposition and the resolution for final adjournment was passed. Complimentary resolutions to Vice President Hobart were adopted and at nine o'clock the final scene was enacted by the formal adjournment of the session.

Last Session of the House.

Washington, July 26.—The last session of the house was marked by many interesting events. In addition to the final act of the speaker in affixing his signature to the Dingley tariff bill, a bill providing for the creation of a currency commission was crowded through in the closing hours and the spectators who thronged the galleries were treated to a continuous, if not very brilliant, fusillade of oratory for several hours.

THE DATE FIXED.

New Tariff Rates Took Effect Midnight of Friday, July 23.

Washington, July 27. — The secretary of the treasury holds that the new tariff act was in effect at the beginning of the day on which it received the approval of the president, and therefore became operative after midnight on Friday, July 23.

Sufficient data upon which to base a close estimate of the amount of duties involved have not been received, but it is stated roughly that it probably will be between $100,000 and $200,000. The internal revenue department probably will save even a greater amount by the new ruling than the customs branch of the service. During the five days from Tuesday, July 20, to and including Saturday, July 24, the internal revenue stamp agencies sold approximately $5,181,800 in beer stamps alone, and of this amount it is estimated that not more than one-third, or $1,727,266, reached their destination before the act went into effect. The saving to the government on these sales of beer stamps alone is expected to aggregate not less than $183,000. Commissioner Forman Monday telegraphed all stamp agents to settle only on the basis of the increased rate of 7½ cents per barrel, and it is expected that these instructions will apply to all cases where the stamps were not actually affixed to the packages before the rate became operative.

Glucose Companies Unite.

New York, July 27.—The long-anticipated combination of the half-dozen glucose companies in the United States is understood to have been consummated. The combination was effected through the foundation of one large company, which will be chartered under the laws of New Jersey with a capital of $40,000,000. This company has purchased the American Glucose and Peoria Grape Sugar companies at Peoria, Ill.; the Chicago sugar refinery, the Rockford sugar works, the Davenport sugar refinery and the Fermenich Sugar company, of Marshalltown, Ia.

Low Price of Silver.

New York, July 27. — The market price of bar silver reached low water mark Monday. Government assay bars were quoted at 50 cents, which made the silver in a standard silver dollar worth 45.63 cents as against 45.70 in 1894. The market opened at 59.18 cents an ounce and later declined to 58⅞ cents.

Gets a Recess Appointment.

Washington, uly 27.—The recess appointment of Hon. T. V. Powderly as commissioner general of immigration was signed by the president Monday afternoon. Mr. Powderly's nomination for that office failed of confirmation in the senate because of the opposition to him on the part of labor organizations.

President Andrews Resigns.

Providence, R. I., July 23.—President N. B. Andrews, of Brown university, has sent a letter to the faculty resigning his office. The letter was in response to a communication sent to President Andrews by the special committee appointed by the trustees and fellows in June, who at that time called him to account for his silver utterances.

McCord Qualifies.

Washington, July 24.—Myron H. McCord took the oath of office as governor of Arizona before Associate Justice Harlan, of the United States supreme court, Friday. Secretary Bliss has notified Gov. Franklin and directed him to turn over the office to the territorial secretary.

A SPECIAL MESSAGE.

President Asked Congress to Create a Currency Commission.

Washington, July 26.—Immediately upon signing the new tariff law President McKinley sent to congress a message asking for the creation of a special non-partisan commission to make recommendations regarding our banking and currency laws. The house quickly responded by passing the Stone bill, introduced some days ago. The senate, however, adjourned without taking any action. Following is the full text of the document:

"To the Congress of the United States: In my message convening the congress in extraordinary session I called attention to a single subject—that of providing revenue adequate to meet the reasonable and proper expenses of the government. I believed that to be the most pressing subject for settlement then. A bill to provide the necessary revenues for the government ahs already passed the house of representatives and the senate and awaits executive action.

"Another question of very vast importance is that of the establishment of our currency and banking system on a better basis, which I commented upon in my inaugural address in the following words:

"'Our financial system needs some revision; our money is all good, but its value must not further be threatened. It should all be put on an enduring basis, not subject to easy attacks, nor its stability to doubt or dispute. The several forms of our paper money offer, in my judgment, a constant embarrassment to the government and imperil a safe balance in the treasury.'

"Nothing was settled more clearly at the late national election than the determination upon the part of the people to keep their currency stable in value and equal to that of the most advanced nations of the world.

"The soundness of our currency is nowhere questioned. No loss can occur to its holders. It is the system which should be simplified and strengthened, keeping our money just as good as it is now, with less expense to the government and the people.

"The sentiment of the country is strongly in favor of early action of congress in this direction, to revise our currency laws and remove them from partisan contention. A notable assembly of business men with delegates from 29 states and territories was held at Indianapolis in January of this year. The financial situation commanded their earnest attention, and after a two-days' session the convention recommended to congress the appointment of a monetary commission.

"I commend this report to the consideration of congress. The authors of the report recommend a commission 'to make a thorough investigation of the monetary affairs and needs of this country in all relations and respects and to make proper suggestions as to any evils found to exist and the remedies therefor.'

"This subject should receive the attention of congress at the special session. It ought not to be postponed until the regular session.

"I therefore urgently recommend that a special commission be created, non-partisan in its character, to be composed of well-informed citizens of differnt parties, who will command the confidence of congress and the country, because of their special fitness for the work, whose duty it shall be to make recommendations of whatever changes in our present banking and currency laws may be found necessary and expedient, and to report their conclusions on or before the 1st day of November next, in order that the same may be transmitted by me to congress for its consideration at its first regular session.

"It is to be hoped that the report thus made will be so comprehensive and sound as to receive the support of all parties and the favorable action of congress. At all events such a report cannot fail to be of value to the executive branch of the government as well as to those charged with public legislation, and to greatly assist in the establishment of an improved system of finance.

"WILLIAM M'KINLEY.

WORK OF A CLOUDBURST.

Flood at Youngstown, O., Disastrous to Life and Property.

Youngstown, O., July 23.—At seven o'clock Thursday night a terrific cloudburst struck this town, flooding the entire valley, and causing great damage to property, both in the city and along the railway lines. Many persons are supposed to be drowned. The entire country east and west for 20 miles was flooded, and the damage will be enormous, the railroads being the heaviest losers. The Erie railroad west of Warren, 14 miles, and north of Sharron for the same distance, was washed out and orders were issued to discontinue all trains. Many residences here were flooded out, and the occupants were taken away by the police and fire departments. The Mahoning valley electric lines were washed out, and all the bridges washed away.

The Cathoiic church at Niles was struck by lightning at the same hour, and nearly destroyed by fire, while business houses and manufacturing concerns were washed out. Henry Myers, a tailor, while standing at his residence in Mill street, was struck by lightning and killed instantly.

Along Crab creek, running into the city from the northeast, along the Erie and Lake Shore railroads, and emptying into the Mahoning river, near the Lake Shore depot, a cloudburst occurred about ten miles out, and the water did not begin to rise much in the city until after nine o'clock. At about ten o'clock the water came down the valley into the city and formed into a flood, sweeping everything before it. The bed of the creek was not more than 20 feet wide, and the flood spread out to a width of about 2,000 feet. It rose quickly, and in less than 30 minutes the water was up to the second story of all the dwelling houses in the flooded districts and was still rising. It was a certainty at 11 o'clock that none of the people escaped from the houses.

Operations Resumed.

Providence, R. I., July 27.—The cotton mills in the Blackstone valley, operated by the Goddards and Chaces, which were shut down a week ago, throwing out of work a large number of employes, started up on full time again Monday, and at the same time the dye works and bleacheries connected with the Lonsdale mill also began to run on full time. The shutdown was ordered on account of the dull condition of the cotton market.

Loss of 120 Lives.

London, July 24.—A dispatch from Singapore says that the Chinese steamer Srihengann, bound from Singapore for Malacia with 190 passengers, was wrecked in a squall off Malacia on June 19. One hundred and twenty persons, including the captain of the steamer, were drowned. The remainder of the ship's company were rescued by a passing steamer.

Ten Stores Burned.

Wiarton, Ont., July 27.—Ten of the largest stores of this town were burned Monday. The fire was in the heart of the business portion of the town. It was controlled with great difficulty. The loss will be heavy.

Harvesting in South Dakota.

Sioux Falls, S. D., July 27.—Harvest commenced in all the southern counties of the state Monday. The oat fields received first attention, but some wheat was cut. Wheat is a large yield, but oats are above the average.

Important Decision.

Chicago, July 24.—A decision was rendered Friday by Judge M. F. Tuley in the circuit court of Cook county recognizing the right of fraternal benevolent societies to change the rates of assessment against members for death benefits. It was made in the suit involving the supreme council of the Royal League and seeking an injunction restraining that body from enforcing a recent law which raised the amount of the assessment upon the members. The court gave a full opinion in denying a motion to enjoin the supreme council. As this point has never been passed on before by an Illinois court of record and as there are only a few decisions in other states covering the question, Judge Tuley's finding will be of interest to every member of a secret society in this state which has a mutual life insurance feature. It affects probably more than three-fourths of the voting population of the state, and many societies composed of women.

Has Liabilities of $1,000,000.

Chicago, July 26.—The liabilities of Theodore H. Schintz, the lawyer and real estate dealer who assigned last week, have been found to reach $1,000,000, while the available assets have dwindled down to less than $100,000. Only one mortgage has been found among the papers in Schintz' office of the scores that were given to him. Schintz is now believed to have got about $125,000 out of four or five banks in the city on collateral that is almost absolutely worthless. The best that can be realized on any of it was stated by one of the banks which held it to be less than 50 cents on the dollar.

Massacred by African Natives.

Lisbon, July 24. — In the chamber of deputies the colonial minister, Senor Candido, announced that the crew of a Portuguese gunboat had been massacred near Chinde, on the Zambesi river, East Africa. He said the government had instructed the local commandant to punish the rebellious natives.

SHADOW PICTURES.

When twilight shadows gather and the evening lamp is lit,
A troop of tender memories amid my dreaming flit.
I recollect when I, a child, within a blissful nest
At eventide was rocked to sleep upon my mother's breast.
And all the thrilling stories that were so entrancing then—
Those legends of the nursery world—steal through my mind again,
And with a gleam of youthful joy my clinging thoughts recall
The wondrous shadow-pictures that she drew upon the wall.

Long since were stilled the hands that formed those figures quaint and rare,
Yet come they never back to me amid the lamp-light's glare;
As dew to thirsting flowers, so within their spell is felt
A soothing, blissful presence from the home where mother dwelt.
And oftimes from my reverie I rouse me with a start,
Half-dreaming I shall find again those witching works of art,
And when I see but gilded frames, I sigh: "I'd give them all
For just those shadow pictures that she threw upon the wall."

Romance of the Golden Bass.

THROUGHOUT the Thousand lakes region of northern Wisconsin Dave Gallup is famous as a guide and angler. The submerged secrets of ten scores of tiny island seas have been wrested from their pellucid depths by this remarkable native of the great pine belt.

If there be a shaded pool in all this region where dwells the mighty muskellunge or the fighting bass, a hidden bar where lurks the green-coated, wall-eyed pike, or a bed of reeds from whence the voracious pickerel darts at spoon or minnow, to which Dave Gallup cannot pull his client, no man has discovered it. In his day he has conducted many famous men to such royal sport that falsehood fell into disgrace and truthful yarns of rod and reel are bitter fruit and held up their relators to scorn and contumely.

Men of well-known voracity like W. S. Forrest, Jacob Newman, Moritz Rosenthal, A. H. Darrow and Tom Prior, when telling of catches made in waters to which Dave Gallup had led them have been outrageously derided, and friends of ancient standing have gazed with stern reproach ere they fled from the presence of the returned pilgrims to the north woods. But the fame of Dave Gallup did not rest entirely upon his abilities as a guide. In the region round about his prowess as a slayer of muskellunge or bass or as the successful caster for speckled trout was a subject of familiar gossip, and over the camp fire in the black depth of the wilderness or in the ruddy glow of the barroom grate such tales of finny battles and victories were recounted that would have driven the late Mr. Walton into retirement or a madhouse.

More than all, Dave Gallup was a specialist in the art of angling. From distant lakes frequently came stories of "strikes," of "muskies" of prodigious size, or of mammoth bass that gave the merry laugh to the cleverest of fishermen and swam away, carrying in their noses adornments of pretty spoons with triple hooks and gaudy feathers. Well-authenticated stories of this character coming to Dave Gallup's ears were but signals for immediate preparation on his part for a journey. Then his acquaintances would lay bets, even to the extent of all their possessions, as to the size of the fish Dave would bring back with him. So great was the man's success that the fortunate outcome of his ventures carried heavy odds.

It was in the spring of 1890 that the "golden bass" of Clear lake was first heard of in the Tomahawk region. According to the story a Chicago man of the name of Finnegan, while trolling along the west bank of the southern bay had received a strike that set his sporting blood on fire. The whizzing reel, the tremendous pull that met his attempt at snubbing, as well as the mighty dashes made by the fish, told him that he had a battle before him entirely beyond anything he had ever experienced. Finnegan was a sportsman of rare accomplishment. The fight was magnificent. Twice the great fish leaped in the air, but the silken thread-like line, reeled by a master hand, remained taut and the battle went on. A half hour passed. The great bass—eight-pounder at least—was the fresher of the two. At last, while Finnegan was reeling home his catch his tired thumb momentarily relaxed its pressure on the shining spool and in that instant the great bass leaped three feet above the surface of the water, shook himself clear of the spoon and darted into the depths.

While the monster bass was in the air a ribbon of sunlight fell upon his shining sides. Finnegan was astounded to notice that his body back of the gills for at least three inches and extending in a band across the belly was a brilliant gold color, while the middle and tail of the fish were of the dark green which distinguishes the full grown black bass.

The story of Finnegan's lost "strike" was received by Dan Gallup with contempt. That part of it concerning the golden band was what prejudiced him. In all his experience he had never met with such a freak of nature. The following fall two men came to Gallup's camp and told a story almost identical with the one that concerned Finnegan's experience. This set Dan to thinking, but the band of gold caused doubt. Next year the "golden bass," as it had now come to be known, was heard of five times, always in the southern bay of Clear lake. By this time the bass was declared to weigh at least 12 pounds and to measure three feet. But Gallup made no move, much to the wonderment of his friends.

The autumn tints gave way to winter and the spring came again ere Gallup emerged from the logging camp to accept the position of head guide at Darrows, on Kewaunquesaga lake. And here something happened that brought disaster to the golden bass and wrought a great change in the life of the famous guide. With the opening of the resort came on the last day of May a quartette of Chicago men anxious to take advantage of the first day's legal fishing. Gallup was busily engaged in looking over the tackle to be used on the morrow when the train from the north rolled up to a little station and paused long enough to permit one passenger to alight.

It was a woman—more, it was a cook. And anybody who knows about these things knows that a cook in the Wisconsin woods is a mighty important personage. The entire population of Darrows turned out to welcome her, Gallup with the rest. The lady looked over the group and then, raising her hand as if to request—or command—silence, gave speech in these words:

"My name is Matilda Jones. I can cook anything and cook it well. I can catch fish with any man that lives, can lick my weight in panthers and consequently am not to be trifled with. There is no chip on my shoulder, nor anything like that. I'll 'tend to my business, treat everybody right, and expect the same from everybody. Now let's all be good fellows and let it go at that."

This little speech, delivered with the utmost good nature, as well as unembarrassed emphasis, created a profound sensation with everybody in general and Dave Gallup in particular. He gazed upon her with a species of awe. In detailing to himself, later in the evening, her "points," he declared her to be probably 25 years old, features regular, body supple and indicative of great strength, lips thin and nose aquiline. On the whole, not bad looking. On the whole, "well put up." On the whole, "the right sort." Just one possible objection, Miss Jones had fiery red hair, and she twisted it in a vicious knot on the extreme top of her head.

And that night Dave Gallup dreamed of a red-headed woman. Yes, gentle reader, Cupid had taken to the woods.

The courtship was unique, although characteristic. Dave cut the dryest cedar for kindling the kitchen fire and Miss Jones was pleased to acknowledge the courtesy. The finest fish that Dave caught in early morning hours was "especially for you, Miss Tilly"—for Dan progressed rapidly in the matter of addressing his lady love. At night they would sit out on the porch and, between killing mosquitos and telling fishy yarns, got along very comfortably. Several times Dave and Miss Jones went out for bass or "muskies" together. Dave's love grew to adoration when he found Miss Jones handled a rod as well as any man he knew.

All this spring the stories of the "golden bass" kept coming to Dave and Miss Jones became deeply interested in the mighty inhabitant of Clear lake. She urged Dave to go, but he jealously regarded her requests. Miss Jones was not without admirers other than Dave. The green-eyed demon whispered that were he to pack off to Clear lake another might capture the prize at home. Red hair was more potent than the gold band about the body of a 14-pound bass. The fish had grown.

One day Miss Jones landed a 30-pound "muskie." She did it in most approved style. Dave's heart seemed to beat within him. He threw himself on his knees in the wet bottom of the boat and, disregarding the struggles of Miss Jones' catch—he being in great danger from the monster's fins—announced his passion.

Miss Jones heard him calmly. Dave demanded that she ask him to prove his love. And Matilda "took him up" with a promptness that made his head swim. "Go bring me the golden bass and I'm your'n," is what she said.

"Darn'd if I don't," replied Dave.

And this was the betrothal.

A blood red sun rose majestically from a dense mass of green. It forced through the gently waving pinetops, bars of carmine light and glinted the indigo ripples of Clear lake. On the rare morning air arose the song of the marten and the hum of millions of insects. Partridge, kissed by the morning light, drummed in the swamp or with a whirr swept along the bank. Across the southern bay a little craft cut the blue waters. The sun lit up the features of Tilly Jones and Dave Gallup. The former rowed. The latter held a bending rod.

The west bank was reached and the woman slowly and noiselessly held the craft in a parallel course along the shore. The morning passed. Exciting sport at other times, Dave hauled in a score of fighting bass and muskellunge, and cursed each strike. The one strike dear to his ambitious hopes came not.

For three days the couple patroled the home of the "golden bass."

On the morning of the fourth day it happened. Tilly at the oars saw something leap at the whirling spoon 20 yards behind in the wake of the craft. She saw Dave Gallup's face turn white, saw the slender split bamboo bend in a graceful curve and then, with eyes glistening, sat quiet to witness a battle such as never even she dreamed possible. The "golden bass" was a reality. The "golden bass' had been hooked. Standing in the stern of the boat Dave Gallup, his coolness all returned, played that bass in a way that sent Tilly's heart to thumping. With the point of the supple rod high above the water so that the line played well upon the jeweled bearings of the reel Dave gave the bass its head. The flimsy silk cut the water with a razor-like slash as the fish darted for midlake. The reel seemed propelled by electricity. It gave a whirring sound that denoted tremendous speed. Held tight against the punctured mouth of the great bass was the cruel spoon. Not a thousandth part of an inch was given slack. The line was almost run out ere Gallup pressed his thumb to turn the bass' course. The fish kept flying toward the main waters. Tilly saw her lover's danger. She grasped the oars and with all her strength began to back water. It saved the day. Just as the last yard of line was leaving the reel the bass turned suddenly. Then came the fastest reel work she had ever seen. The bass swam like a devil. It came so fast that Dave yelled for her to pull. She gave way and what with the momentum of the boat and the work of Dave's fingers they kept the line taut. Twice on that inward run the bass leaped in the air, once at least four feet above the water's surface.

For more than one hour the fight went on. The fish was still wary. Thrice he was brought within ten feet of the boat and then he was off again. At last Dave cried: "I am most beat." To this she replied: "Land that bass and I'm your'n."

"Do you, David Gallup, take this woman to be your wife?"

"Do you, Matilda Jones, take this man to be your husband?"

And both answered: "I do."—Chicago Chronicle.

HAY AND HOG RACK.

A Combination Structure Which Seems Hard to Beat.

A late number of the Canadian Farmers' Advocate contained the accompanying description and illustrations of a combined hay or sheep and cattle rack by one of its correspondents:

"The accompanying figures represent a combined hay and sheep rack which is easily detachable and convenient to store away under cover. Any ordinary strong wagon box will answer if cleats are put on to hold the double end and center-boards. Fig. 1 represents the side of the box, 1½ inches thick and any desired width and length, with cleats on each end and in the center, nailed on with 3-inch wire nails to receive the cross pieces of the sides of the rack. Fig. 2 represens the front board, which is double. The lower portion of the figure is removed from its proper position to show how the sides are held in place. A is of 2x4-inch scantling. B is of 2x6-inch hard wood. The stake is to build the front of the load against and hold the lines while loading. These double boards are bolted or nailed with heavy wire nails, well clinched. C is of 1½x4-inch hard wood. The center and hind boards are made the same as Fig. 2 except that no stake is needed. Fig. 3 shows one of the sides held together with bolts or wire nails. A 7-foot rack requires side pieces 3 feet 7 inches long. Fig. 4 represents the hay rack complete. It is necessary to have a good, strong bottom. It is also well to have wagon rods having thumb nuts pass through the box across the center and ends to hold it firmly. A long rack should have four cross pieces. Fig. 5 shows how the sides are lifted off or placed in position. A boy can readily do this. The box is shown 13 inches deep, but 11 or 12 will answer. Fig. 6 represents the end boards for the sheep rack. Standards A are 2x4-inch scantling 3 feet 7 inches long. D is the double backboard 12 inches wide which holds the hind shelving or hurdle in place. B B are nailed to standards A on the outside. Fig. 7 shows the sheep rack. The end boards are placed in position, and the right-hand shelving is put on the left side of the box and the left on the right. The end uprights of the sides slip down between standards A of the end and the sides of the box. This holds the shelvings upright. The end boards slip up and down on C, Fig. 7. The rack is my own contrivance. I gave it a good trial last year and am well satisfied with it."

COMBINED HAY AND HOG RACK

HINTS FOR STOCKMEN.

It is claimed that there are not enough heavy draft horses to supply the market. Make that plain and the supply will be coming.

Misrepresentation as to the pedigree of a stallion is a crime that should be severely punished. Yet it is harmless if people will only investigate.

There is complaint against the work done by dehorning clippers and preference expressed for the saw. The clippers are all right if used according to directions.

The balky horse and the swearing driver are two nuisances where the horse should have the monopoly. Keep your temper and in some way get the horse to think of something else. As soon as you do he will go.

Hard roads bang up the feet of the horse, and it is a question if hard roads are not as wearing on the horse as soft roads are. But independent of that hard roads are desirable when they can be had without too much burden to the farmer.

The 1,200-pound hog—and one man claims to have one—is not desirable or profitable. We once saw a pen of ten hogs where aggregate weight was 10,000 pounds. Hogs to weigh must be kept until the second year, and that of itself is not advisable.

Secretary Wilson thinks that hog cholera can be "abolished" and will study the thing from A to Z. It has been studied already, but the more it is studied the worse it is. Feed less corn, breed from more mature stock and keep the hogs under healthful conditions are all the science there is to the subject.—Western Plowman.

Small Hogs Pay Best.

Immense size is no longer sought as in former times. Smaller animals are made ready for the shambles more economically, the meat is more palatable and maturity is gained in a shorter time. It has been the constant aim of intelligent breeders to produce an animal that will fatten at any age and a great measure of success in that direction has been attained. Formerly the farmer believed it to be necessary for his pigs to be farrowed in August or early September for his pork supply in the autumn of the next year. Thus they would be several months more than a year old when slaughtered, while now, by the aid of improved breeds and a better system of feeding, a 200-pound hog can be produced in less than half time, better, more salable and of course at less outlay.—Rural World.

Home Market the Best.

What would a farm be that did not contain a flock of hens? The eggs are considered adjuncts to the farm, and they enter into many of the household dishes. In estimating the profits from poultry the eggs and poultry consumed by the family should be given the same value as though such supplies were purchased. The "family" markets in the United States excel all others, and no farmer should sell his eggs and live on something less desirable, but enjoy the same luxuries as those who are willing to have the best in the cities. Supply the home market first.—Farm and Fireside.

CULTIVATING GRASS.

No Crop Grown on the Average Farm Pays Better.

There is no part of farming at the present day so much neglected as the meadow, and there is no crop grown that pays better. The general idea of the farmer is that the meadow does not require any cultivation or care. "The meadow," he says, "is all right. I seeded this field three or five years ago; but I cannot see why I get so light a crop."

It is quite plain you have been robbing the land for three years and returning nothing. Worse than that; you have allowed the moss to creep in and smother the roots which you have robbed of their natural sustenance, without returning anything to them or driving off the moss from the root-bound grass. What kind of a corn crop would you get if you did not cultivate it? To insure a big crop of hay cultivate it. Haul, during the month of December, say from six to eight loads to the acre of barnyard manure and spread it while hauling as evenly as you can with a fork. Then as early as you can get on the meadow in March, or as soon as the frost is out and the ground dry enough to get on with a team, take a good harrow and drag it thoroughly, and then cross-harrow it. You will imagine you are going to ruin your meadow, but you are simply loosening the roots and giving them a chance; and when harvest time comes you will find you not only did not injure your meadow, but greatly increased your crop of grass, and also improved your ground. This matter of cultivating grass is not a mere "theory." It is a principle, proved to be correct by actual trial with profitable results. In 1882 Josiah Bagley, of Serena, from a six-acre meadow took 12 loads of hay, with no after-crop. The following season he manured and cultivated the same six acres substantially as outlined above. Some of his neighbors laughed at him; but about the 10th of July, 1883, he cut 19 loads of grass from these six acres, and in the last of September cut a second crop of nine loads. He says: "I am an advocate of cultivating grass."—J. E. Porter, in Prairie Farmer.

TREATMENT OF MANGE.

Recipe for a Salve Which Is Said to Produce Good Results.

Scurf or mange is sometimes difficult to cure. It is caused by a small mite that burrows in the skin, and to get rid of it the mite must be destroyed. The treatment mentioned has such a tendency, but as the application is most effective when applied locally there has been too much reliance upon the internal treatment. The sulphur internally is not harmful, but it will take too much time; the process is too slow, says Breeders' Gazette.

In the first place, the pens and sleeping quarters should be frequently disinfected with crude carbolic acid and lime. The surface affected should be treated with a salve made as follows: Four ounces of salicylic acid, the same amount of hyposulphite of sodium, eight ounces of cosmoline or lard; and if the lard is used a small amount of beeswax should be added to make the mixture firm. The cosmoline or lard should be melted over a slow fire, and while it is warm enough still to remain a liquid stir in the other ingredients slowly until they are thoroughly mixed. When cold apply to the diseased skin of the hogs every day until a cure is effected. If many hogs are to be treated the amount should be doubled or quadrupled, as the necessities may require. In stirring in the salicylic acid care should be used to keep the face away from the mixture, or the person who does the work will have a violent case of sneezing. The salve mentioned is good for man or beast where there is a violent and persistent eruption of the skin. Do not forget to disinfect the pens and sleeping quarteres of the animals. The crude carbolic acid is good, but when applied strong enough to be effective it is likely to make the animals sick.

FOR CUTTING STALKS.

A Homemade Contrivance That Does Its Work Well.

A cheap stalk cutter is made by taking a sound log, A, about 4 feet long and 18 to 24 inches in diameter. Blades of steel, B, 3 feet long and 4 inches wide, edged as in sharpening a plow, are secured to the log as shown in the cut. The shanks that hold the blades should be set forward so that in revolving the edge will strike the ground perpendicularly. A common roller frame is put on and the tongue (C) is fastened behind a cart or wagon, and it is ready for operation. The number of blades to put on depends on the size of the log and the length pieces the stalks are to be cut into. For a log 18 inches in diameter 5 blades will suffice. The log must be heavy enough so that the weight will cut through the stalks.—G. W. Waters, in Ohio Farmer.

STALK CUTTER.

Our Wealth in Grass.

Mr. Scribner, of the department of agriculture, has recently collected some very interesting facts about American grasses. He says: "We have better grasses and a greater variety of them native to our soil than we can ever get from Europe." Of clovers we have no less than 60 species, all native to the country, and there is an equal number of different "blue grasses," besides 20 "grazing grasses" and a great variety of others. Yet, Mr. Scribner says, hardly more than a dozen of all these kinds of native grasses have been brought into cultivation.

Barometers on the Farm.

The farm is full of barometers, all more certain than the best almanacs ever concocted. Before the rain comes the dog is lazy and wants to sleep, the cat washes its face, and the horses are restless and easily frightened. The geese are noisy, the poultry seek their roosts, ants are in a hurry and skurry laying in supplies, spiders crowd together on the wall, toads and snails and slugs are on the garden paths and birds cry "weet, weet," the frogs croak, and peafowl become very excitable and talkative.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Unearthed by Storms.

The very severe storms of the past week have brought to light some strange things in Stearns county. During the freshet the stream along the township line between St. Augusta and Fair Haven tore out its banks, and there has been disclosed there a collection there of some 50 heads of bison, which had been lying underground from time immemorial. It is supposed that the animals were overtaken by a flood similar to that which uncovered their bones, or that they perished from cold during some hard winter. In times past buffalo bones have been found in that locality, and it is history that they were as thick in that section at the time of La Salle and Hennepin as on the plains further west.

Gold in Minnesota.

Gold has been discovered on one of the famous sections in St. Louis county.

State Auditor R. C. Dunn was waited on the other day by one of the best known men of St. Louis county, who wanted a lease on that section, saying that he had discovered gold there in paying quantities. He went on to tell how he had made the discovery. With a couple of gold miners of long experience he has been conducting a series of experiments on and near section 30 for several months. Finally a rich vein was discovered. The auditor refuses to make public the exact location of the find, but says there can be no question as to the entire reliability of the information.

Peculiar Suicide.

B. Neuman, a German about 52 years old, committed suicide by strangling himself with a bed sheet at St. Cloud, and in a manner that showed considerable eccentricity. Neuman was the proprietor of a confectionery store and bakery, and together with his two daughters, lived over his place of business. Previous to committing the deed Neuman had dressed himself in women's clothing from the underwear to the outer garments. He had then tied the sheet to the bed post, and laying himself down on the floor, had placed his head through the sheet and allowed the weight of his body to accomplish the desire.

Still Crowded.

The state insane asylums are being much overcrowded. Fifty patients were sent from Rochester to Fergus Falls, and yet there are 25 patients sleeping on the floor at Rochester. At the present time, Rochester has 1,150 patients, St. Peter and Fergus Falls, 1,000 each. The management of the asylums weeded out the number some time ago by sending away those who were not entitled to treatment because of non-residence in the state, and yet the condition is one of congestion. The two new wings at the St. Peter hospital, for which bids are to be let, will relieve the condition somewhat, but more room will soon be needed.

A Good Appointment.

Dean Liggett, of the University Department of Agriculture, announces that Mrs. Virginia C. Meredith will be the dean of the woman's department at the farm school, when it opens in October.

This appointment is considered a most excellent one, and the regents and the dean are much pleased that they have been able to get such a competent person to take charge of the young women.

Mrs. Meredith comes from Indiana, where she is known as one of the best farmers in the state, and one most interested in the social life of farm women.

Can't Retaliate.

The insurance commissioner has been advised by the attorney general that he cannot retaliate in the Iowa cases, and as a result the commissioner has decided to withdraw all action for the present, or until the Bankers' Life, of St. Paul, brings a suit in the Iowa courts to test the right of the state auditor to shut it out of that state. In passing upon the case, the attorney general says the only legal question presented is whether a case has arisen for the application of the Minnesota retaliatory law. This question he answers in the negative.

Will Go to Duluth.

A. D. Thomson & Co., grain dealers of Duluth have purchased 11 country elevators in Iowa on the Sioux City & Northern road. This territory has heretofore been tributary to Chicago. Its grain crop will now go to Duluth. The Independent Elevator Co. has purchased 20 elevators in northern Minnesota and South Dakota and shipments from these points will now be made to Duluth instead of Minneapolis.

News in Brief.

Fire at Rush City destroyed several business houses, causing a loss of $10,000.

The St. Paul police arrested Wm. Wall, a laborer, for drunkenness. Upon being searched at the station $600 in cash was found in his clothes.

The postoffice at Walnut Grove was broken into by burglars and the safe containing $200 in stamps and $35 in cash, was blown open.

The Great Northern passenger train ran into and instantly killed a farmer named Martin Lubbermeyer near St. Augusta, five miles east of St. Cloud.

Rev. Dr. S. G. Smith, of St. Paul, will preside at a social reform convention, to be held at Battle Creek, Mich., on Oct. 12 to 17.

Word comes from the country districts that there is some one traveling about the state, victimizing the farmers under a claim that they represent certain supply houses. The scheme is to collect a dollar for twine, which is to be delivered at once, the balance to be paid on delivery. Many people have been victimized in this way already.

The annual festivities of the Austrian and Polish societies at Tower drew a large attendance and passed off peaceably.

Lightning struck the barn of Jim Cain, of Clifton. It burned the barn, horses and a quantity of grain.

From the present outlook there may be no Duluth entries in the Minnesota-Winnipeg regatta this year. The dates that have been finally settled on between Winnipeg and the Minnesota boat club are Friday and Saturday, Aug. 6 and 7.

The Typographical union has established a branch in Winona, starting in with a charter membership of twenty.

In anticipation of the new federal law which will do away with the 7½ per cent discount, the Minneapolis brewers purchased $45,000 worth of stamps, which means a saving of about $3,000

CHANGES WROUGHT BY TIME.

Not So Noticeable When Relatives See Each Other Daily.

"There ought to be a law that families shall live in communities, and not go straggling apart to the ends of the earth," said the woman who was reading a letter in the car to her friend who accompanied her.

"What led to that remark?" asked her friend; "anything in that letter?"

"Yes. It is from my sister Amy, whom I have not seen since she went west. That was 15 years ago. She writes me that her hair is perfectly white and she weighs 50 pounds more than she did when I last saw her. As she only weighed 100 then, she will not be immense now, but I think of the change. A slight, fragile young woman of a fairylike physique and the loveliest black hair—why, she is simply another person."

"But she would have changed as much if she had stayed here, in all probability," said her friend, trying to comfort her.

"Yes, but the change would have been so gradual that I would not have noticed it. Now I seem to have two sisters, one with coal black hair and one with snow white. One is a stout, healthy, middle-aged woman, the other a dreamy-eyed romantic girl whose waist I could span with my two hands. Probably her face is lined with care and her character changed as much as her features."

"What of yourself?" inquired the friend; "has time stood still with you?"

"I? Myself? I never thought of that. Yes, I have changed, too, and no doubt Amy will be as much disappointed in me as I will be with her. But that gives another argument in favor of families keeping in touch. Or if that is not possible then let them remain separate or as strangers. There is enough of the pathetic in life without these shocks of reunion."

And she thoughtfully folded her letter while her friend looked out of the car window and was silent.—Chicago Times-Herald.

WANTED HER MONEY'S WORTH.

Something Lacking from Her Repair Kit.

Anyone who had not seen the woman with an angry eye wooble just before she dismounted from her wheel would have taken her for an experienced rider; a heroine of century runs. She strode with majestic confidence through the store, and so impressed another woman that she forgot herself and let the newcomer be waited on first.

"I suppose," she said to the clerk, "that I looked rather new at bicycling, and you thought that there wasn't very much use of bothering about me, because I wouldn't know the difference, anyhow."

The clerk assured her to the contrary, and said he was sure there was some misunderstanding.

"There was a misunderstanding," she answered. "I understand that when I bought this repair kit I was getting all that a repair kit ought to contain."

"Certainly," he answered. "Isn't it all right?"

"Didn't you expressly state that it contained everything that would be required for repairs in an ordinary accident?"

"Yes."

"And I bought it with that implied guarantee, didn't I?"

"Undeniably, you did."

"And if things didn't turn out just as you represented them it's your business to make good the deficiency?"

"I suppose so."

"All right. There's your repair kit. You can either put in a paper of pins and some sticking plaster, or else give me back my money."—Washington Star.

B. & O. Fast Freight Schedule.

The Baltimore & Ohio, in connection with the Continental Line and Central States Dispatch fast freight lines, has inaugurated another fast freight schedule to the west, to be known as Train 95. It will be made up at Baltimore, and is put on especially to accommodate import business by way of Locust Point, and at the same time gives to Eastern manufacturers and wholesale dealers a rapid service to the west. The running time of the train is so arranged that it will make 50 hours to Chicago, 30 to Cincinnati, 30 to Cleveland, 34 to Columbus, 118 to Dallas, Tex., 50 to Detroit, 98 to Duluth, Minn., 37 to Indianapolis, 78 to Kansas City, 75 to Memphis, 50 to Louisville, 74 to Milwaukee, 83 to Minneapolis, 61 to Peoria, Ill., 20 to Pittsburgh, 50 to St. Louis, 81 to St. Paul, 39 to Sandusky, 231 to San Francisco, 44 to Toledo, and correspondingly quick time to other western and southern points.

The Freight Department expects to make 95 as popular and reliable a train as 97, which makes the run from New York to Chicago and St. Louis in 60 hours.

The Trials of Genius.

Friend—Why, what are you in such a fuss about? Anything happened?

Artist—Oh, botheration, yes! Everything! I was just getting some of my latest pictures ready for framing, and that confounded housekeeper of mine has so mixed them up I'll never in the wide world be able to tell the top from the bottom again.—N. Y. Truth.

Man's Two Best Friends.

Man's two best friends are said to be a gun and a dog. It is easy to get a good dog, but hard to get a good gun. The guns made by the Winchester Repeating Arms Co., New Haven, Ct., are not only always good, but they are acknowledged the best made in the world. For years the Winchester has been the standard of the world, and to any one who has studied or examined its many points of superiority its popularity is not hard to understand. The repeating rifles and shot guns made by the Winchesters are in demand all over the world. Although they cost comparatively little, they are better than the highest priced hand made guns in every way. Winchester ammunition is of the same high grade as Winchester guns and can always be relied upon. Send for a large illustrated catalogue free.

Thunder-Like Tones.

"I really couldn't afford to let you board with me this summer," said an old farmer to a city man with a very deep bass voice.

Homeseekers' Excursions to the Northwest.

August 3d and 17th and September 7th and 21st, 1897, the Great Northern railway will sell from and via St. Paul and Minneapolis round trip tickets at one fare for round trip, plus $2.00, to points in Northern Minnesota, North Dakota and South Dakota. No tickets will be sold at a less rate than $9.00. Tickets good for 21 days. This will enable homeseekers to visit the famous grain belt during the harvest. For further particulars apply to any railway ticket agent, or address F. I. Whitney, G. P. & T. A., St Paul, Minn.

The Pill that Will.

"The pill that will," implies the pills that won't. Their name is legion. The name of "the pill that will" is Ayer's Cathartic Pill. It is a pill to rely on. Properly used it will cure constipation, biliousness, sick headache, and the other ills that result from torpid liver. Ayer's pills are not designed to spur the liver into a momentary activity, leaving it in yet more incapable condition after the immediate effect is past. They are compounded with the purpose of toning up the entire system, removing the obstructing conditions, and putting the liver into proper relations with the rest of the organs for natural co-operation. The record of Ayer's Pills during the half century they have been in public use establishes their great and permanent value in all liver affections.

DELANO, FRIDAY, JULY 30, 1897.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE VILLAGE OF DELANO.

DELANO DIARY

—Dr. C. B. Ames is moving his office into the building lately vacated by J. Brandser.

—Dr. Niven will be in Delano, Aug. 9 and 10, Wayerly 11, and Howard Lake 12 and 13. 44-2t.

—Rev. Fairbanks, of Cedar Mills exchanged pulpits with Rev. Morrison last Sunday.—Litchfield Independent.

—How is it that shingles come up on the Soo Road instead of the G. N., for Delano. Is Jim Hill loosing trade.

—The hand organ man was around town Monday. It must be nearly time for the annual visit of the bears and Italians.

—Rain delays farmers considerably in their work; but they manage to save hay and other crops by working between showers.

—George P. Schaffer and John E. Borsch are each doing business in their new stores. Two of the finest stores in Wright County.

—John Brandser has the latest device for showing up how a suit of clothes will look when made up. It is real handy in his business.

—Rev. M. N. Ray, of Litchfield, will hold Episcopal services at the City Hall, Sunday, August 8, at 9:30 a. m. and 8 p. m. Everybody is invited.

—There seems to be no limit to the number of hogs raised in this section of the state; they continue to come to market regularly in small droves.

—Frank Roban has received a car load of ice from Minneapolis, for use in his restaurant business. Of course his goods will be city style now, at least city ice.

—Good beef cows now bring $30 a head. The creamery business shortens the supply of beef in the country. How long will it be before horse steak will be fashionable?

—Professor Bohn has painted and beautified his tonsorial parlors and his residence in great shape; and he claims his wife has the finest garden in the neighborhood. Surely the professor is prospering.

—Street Commissioner Martin has finally lowered the tiling that was put beneath the sod around the corner of Third and Bridge streets so that the water may now run through it. A much needed improvement.

—Strawberries and raspberries have been successfuly grown in this neighborhood for some time. Wonder if black berries and blue berries couldn't as well be raisd? Apples are again becoming more numerous. Plums are fine, and currants have entirely outdid themselves this year.

—George W. Bolton has found his horse. It seems he got out of the barn in the night and in some unaccountable way got shut up in the livery barn in the rear of the Gilmer Hotel, where, after about a day, some one discovered him.

—Horseback riding is daily growing more popular, as the roads are kept too moist for easy bicycling. Unless a motive power is soon made for the bicycle, it seems doomed to be thrown into the rubbish pile with roller skates, etc., etc.

—On Wednesday, Justice Frazee decided the case of State of Minnesota vs L. M. Meister for assault in the second degree, F. L. Scherer complaining witness, by binding Meister in the sum of $500 to appear at the December term of District Court.

—Tuesday morning was one of the finest we have had for weeks. The sun shining brightly in a cloudless heaven after the heavy shower of the evening before; The air the finest of the Minnesota kind; birds singing happily from the tree tops all served to make life enjoyable.

—On Monday morning. F. L. Scherer was taken to Waverly to be tried on complaint of L. M. Meister, for assault. Capt. Greear, O. L. Billings, M. A. O'Hair, Baron Von Kruger, and Frank Zahn, accompanied them. Justice Cullen heard the case and on motion, discharged the defendant from custody.

—Talk about hunting a new location for farming. C. J. Crandall who, in the interest of "Lo, the poor Indian," has traveled over western country, through Oklahoma, Indian Territory, Wyoming, Arizona, etc. from Texas to the Dakotas, says for farming purposes, he has seen nothing to suit him as well as Wright County's big woods.

—Saturday nights train left something like a hundred travelling men in town. They were bound for the West and their car must have got switched, as they remained after the train pulled out. Most of them, so far as we have heard, behaved very decently, a few imbibed a little to freely of Delano's intoxicants, but left town in good form.

—What's the use of government ownership of railroads when J. J. Hill can as well command his employes to wear regulation caps and pay for them themselves, and buy them where he says? It is a wonder he don't oblige them to patronize the company butcher, barber, doctor, preacher, etc. etc. Perhaps he will send out a cooking car and supply the men with their daily rations soon, buffet attachment, and then of course the men will know how to vote.

The Episcopal ladies took in $10.50 at their lawn sociable last evening.

—Delano and Watertown play ball at Watertown to morrow, Saturday afternoon.

James E. Brothers has sold his residence on North Third Street to A. Rewaldt. Mrs. Dugan sold her old home to C. G. Roosen.

—"The Serious Family" by home talent under the supervision of Sanford Dodge, next Friday evening, Aug. 6, at the City Hall.

—Liveryman Jones is out his best team of horses. On Tuesday evening, as his man accompanied Mr. Hill, were going around the horn, the man tried to ford the Crow River near Helvetia while Mr. Hill remained on shore, expecting to cross in a boat. The water was too deep and both horses were drowned and the man had a narrow escape.

—The Rosser Family entertainment, at the City Hall Saturday evening was poorly attended, and the weather was warm, placing the company under difficulties; but they gave a good entertainment. The band music was good, the zyther solo, fine. The quartette singing, as well as the solos by one of the young ladies were well rendered. "Where is my wandering boy tonight? Down in a licensed saloon." should have been heard and would have been appreciated by a good many of our citizens. and was, alone, well worth the price of admission. Should the Rosser family ever come this way again we hope our citizens will give them a better house.

—Among some of the carnivorous animals it seems natural to pounce upon, and destroy the life of one maimed or injured, and unable to help himself. We hear of whole packs of wolves attacking comrades that may get wounded and tearing them to pieces. This may do for wolves, but when boys, men, and even the gentler sex indulge in tongue lashing, brow beating, and insulting and provoking to wrath those who are in some ways apparently less fortunate than themselves, it doesn't look just human. People helpless, unprotected, and needing assistance, should be kindly treated and have the cares of life smoothed over as much as possible for them. If those about them cannot or will not do this, village authorities should at least see that peace is preserved.

Personal.

John Shower, of Greenwood, was a Delano visitor Monday.

Alfred Holstrom is spending the week at Lake Beebe.

Valentine Eopel, jr. took a trip to the State capital yesterday.

George P. Schaffer made the twin cities a business visit Wednesday.

William Quinn, of Waverly, made Delano a business visit this morning.

Vernon Wilder made a flying trip to see the folks at home a few nights ago.

Charles Kaemer is receiving a visit from his sister, from the southern part of the state.

Miss Emma Holstrom, of Minneapolis, is the guest of her friend, Miss Annie Parslow.

Mrs. I. H. Grant, of Hamline, was the guest of her daughter, Mrs. C. J. Buckley this week.

John Badorf, one of Independences independent farmers, visited Delano on business, Tuesday.

Rev. B. F. Kephart, of Hamline a former pastor at Delano, visited old friends here Monday.

Mrs. Wilson and son, Lyle, from Minneapolis, were visiting this week with Dr. and Mrs. Soper.

C. J. Crandall and son, who has been visiting at Rockford, returned yesterday and took the train west.

Mrs. John Walker and daughter, of Minneapolis visited her parents Mr. and Mrs. T. S. Kerr, last week.

Miss Grace Davis returned home from Hamline, last evening. She left her grandmother McCarter poorly.

J. H. Mc Gary, of Independence, was a visitor, Monday. John says it is hard for a fellow to know just where he is at now-a-days, politically speaking.

Messrs Roy Sutton, and John Steffes and Misses Grace O'Hair, Annie Parslow, and Francis Bauman drove over to Buffalo, Tuesday evening, to hear President Northrop's address.

Miss Mary Reinhart and Miss Lizzie Peterhansel, of Cleveland, Ohio, who have been visiting Mrs. Bauman and family for several weeks, returned home Monday morning. Misses Theress and Mary Bauman accompanied them as far as Minneapolis.

County Cullings.

The board of equalization met last week at Buffalo and proceeded to raise and lower the figures made by assessors. Many changes are noted.

From the Journal's account we judge that Moses E. Clapp made a fine speech to the School Institute at Buffalo, last Friday evening. Delono people will remember when the same gentlemen addressed our citizens from a republican stand point a few years ago. His was one of the best, most honest, and most sensible speeches of that campaign. Eaton nominates him on the Republican ticket for governor. Eaton ought to know better than suggest such a thing to his former bretheren. Does he think the counsel to Shanghai and Tim Byrns want any such man as Hon. Moses E. Clapp for Governor?

Last Saturday one of our young citizens came into town, filled up on booze got into a quarrel with his brother, frightened his sister from the house, and smashed dishes and famp chimneys. There is no honorable nor useful future for such young men.—Buffalo Journal.

Too true. Yet didn't he buy his booze in a saloon that pays $500 into the village treasury which helps fix up the streets? And didn't the saloon keeper agree not to sell to drunken men? And hasn't Buffalo some officers whose duty it is to see that such things don't happen, and that the contract is kept? And don't the people vote to license the saloon of booze? And ain't it a nice advertisement for the County Seat?

Duluth Herald: —John D. Rockefeller has notified the Des Moines Baptist college that he will give $3 for every dollar the college will raise from other sources. It is safe to say that the president of this college agrees with Mr. Rockefeller in his financial views.

St. Cloud Times:—Mr. Perry Belmont, who has just returned from Europe, says neither Germany nor France will join the United States in international bimetallism, unless England first does so, and that England has no idea of doing so.

Courier Journal:—Mr. Bailey, the Popocratic leader in the the House, openly confessed on the floor that he changed his principles every time that his party changed its platform. The only principle on which Mr. Bailey seems to do his own thinking and his own sticking is the principle against wearing a dress suit.

The St. Peter Tribune reports that Venetian red is a sure cure and preventative for hog cholera. We have no hog cholera here, so far as reported, but as the country goes more into the hog business the disease is liable to appear. About St. Peter thousands of hogs have died from cholera during the past few years.—Litchfield Independent.

Why didn't they paint them red?

Courier Journal:—There is a great deal of gold in the Yukon region and somebody is going to get it out, but the average man had better stay away. If he is ambitious to tempt fortune he can do so at home with as good chances of success and with a great deal more comfort, not to speak of safety. Half the labor and privations that mining demands would yield a certain and comfortable return in the ordinary walks of life.

Minneapolis Times:—Rev. Dr. Shutter "rang the bell" when, in his sermon on "The Human Providence" he said: "When a Christian president goes to the sanctuary and prays that his administration may promote the prosperity of the nation at home and its dignity and honor abroad and then pays his personal political debts with appointments that offend the moral sense of the community—does it ever dawn upon him that his pious supplications are a sham and a mockery?" President Mc Kinley ought to paste that in his hat.

LIVING AND DEAD.

(Written for the Courier-Journal.)

If we gave unto the living as we lavish on the dead,
Kindly thoughts and gentle phrases, tender words and lavish praises;
Blotting out all imperfections, holding virtues up to light;
If we spared no daily token of our love and care unspoken,
Then life would be well worth living in a world so glad and bright.

If we offered to the living as we heap upon the dead,
Fragrant flowers of affection, blossoms of sweet recollection;
Waiting not till hands are folded on the quiet, pulseless breast:
Then the passion of our pleading would not fall on ears unheeding,
Nor our tears drop unavailing on the weary form at rest.

If we gave unto the living as we lavish on the dead,
All our heart's long-hidden treasure, all love's full, unstinted measure;
Adding, day by day, new jewels to the crown of human bliss,
Then life's burdens would weigh lightly, and the sun would shine more brightly,
And not Heaven itself were fairer than a world so glad as this.

WONDERFUL SALES.
$10 Every Day Can Be Made by Agents.
To prove it, we give a few items from actual sales made within the last few weeks: One agent sold 27 copies in two and a half days. Another sold 15 copies in two days, and another 30 in three days. One agent in Indiana sold 15 copies in two days. An agent in South Carolina sold 43 copies in three days. One agent in Georgia sold 25 in two days. An agent in Central Georgia sold 82 copies in ten days. When you consider the commission we allow agents, and the immense popularity of this wonderful book, and the ease with which it sells, there is nothing in which a live, pushing man can engage which will yield such profits. For instance: one agent made $108.25 in ten days selling "Thunderbolts." Another made $39.60 in three days; another $9.25 in one day; another $33 in two days; another $56.75 in three days.

THE AUGUST RAIN.

In an open mist enfolded
Stood the green and stately corn,
And the hills were veiled in vapor
At the breaking of the morn,
Till a gray cloud, slowly spreading,
Blurred the blue above the vane,
And it dropped in threads of silver
From its heart,—the August rain.

All day long it poured and pattered
On the ivy at the eaves,
And the thrushes in the orchard
Hid beneath the thickest leaves;
But at eve across the meadows
Flushed the yellow sun again,
And a bow of brilliant promise
Arched above the August rain.

Lo! the wealth of ancient princes
Sparkled forth on every side:
Pearls were in the lily's bosom,
Rubies crowned the rose's pride,
And a thousand liquid diamonds
Sparkled on the golden grain;
For it stole an angel's jewels
As it came,—the August rain!

MINNA IRVING.

—From Demorest's Magazine for August.

MR. CUTCHEON seems to be about the only "National Democrat" of prominence in Minnesota now.

THE "National Democrats" ought to have taken the broader name of "International Democrats" when they concluded to assist those who are willing to be dictated to by Old England on the bimetallic question, to defeat William Jennings Bryan last fall.

MAJ. M. R. BALDWIN, of Duluth, has, according to a special to the Duluth Herald, been removed from his government position as Chippewa Indian Commissioner, civil service or no civil service. Dar S. Hall succeeds him, and the Maj. in a public letter advised Democrats to not vote at the last election.

THE Fairmont News thinks J. J. Hill a fine man from the fact that he advises people not to go to Klondyke until next spring, although they would ride over his road. That may be all right, but we suspect he will then have a way of getting their money for crossing the Pacific in addition to the fees over his rail road.

SOME of the newspapers are admonishing those not in perfect health to keep away from the Alaska gold mines. If a man has good health and thinks more of it than gold he had better stay at home and keep his health. While the invalid who thinks his sands of life about run might venture out after gold and gain his health if not his wealth by rusticating awhile.

THE Cubans appear to be gaining ground on their island. They have, it is claimed, captured some suburbs of Havanna. It looks as if President McKinley had decided to let him fight it out to a finish for all of them. So long as they are whipping their adversaries out, and that's what Americans want, perhaps it is as well as any other way would be. They surely can have their independence if they win it themselves.

THE Globe has come to the final conclusion that "the inability of communities of the American people to govern themselves after a century or more of experience is the most striking phenomena of American life today." It does look that way when such papers as the Globe switch over to the "National Democrats" right at the critical point in a campaign like that of last fall, and aid in defeating the people. Wonder if the Globe thinks country folks don,t know any more than to sit down and be steered into the gold camp by such would be leaders as it has proven itself to be.

ON account of failure to secure an appropriation, work on the Government building in St. Paul, is discontinued. Unless it is built at a more rapid rate than it has been, that first built will be old when the building is finished. When another appropriation for public buildings is made, Delano should be remembered. This way of giving them all to cities able to build their own isn't right. If the government must build public buildings, let her distribute a few thousand dollars to each of the little villages throughout each county, where they will be appreciated.

SAVOYARD, in the Louisvill Courier Journal, says: "The silverites in the Senate are the authors of the new tariff. Without the assistance of men who voted for Bryan, it could not have become a law." Neither Savoyard nor any one else believes that if William Jennings Bryan was President of the United States that he would have signed any such a tariff bill. And if the Courier Journal and other papers, and some people had not worked against Mr. Bryan perhaps he might have occupied the White House now. Don't try to crawl out from under the responsibility of saddling this protective tariff on the country, Courier Journal, by having your correspondents write this kind of stuff. The people about here are not ready to swallow that kind of talk any more than they are the Dingley bill.

IN a lengthy article on the Youngers J. Adam Bede in his budget says: "We must take things as they are, not as they might have been." That is just the view the pardoning board took of the matter when they decided to allow the Youngers to remain in Stillwater. But J. Adam goes on to say: "And the real question is whether society derives any benefit from the detention of the Youngers. Our best judgement is that it does not." It hasn't been shown that society would derive any benefit from not detaining them. And it has been pretty well advertised that they are behaving themselves admirably where they are, and that before they took up their residence in Minnesota they behaved far otherwise. We think on the whole, in this case it is about as well to allow them the privilege of Mr. Bede's saying: "We must take things as they are, not as they might have been."

THE Delano Eagle says: "Silver is a dead issue." What an eye for business that old bird has! Silver a dead issue! And the Louisville Courier Journal, St. Paul Globe, Delano, Eogle, and a lot of other papers puffing and blowing like porpoises about the question every week! To say nothing of the columns upon columns of stereotyped editorials peddled out all over the country to such papers as the Monticello Times, the Annandale Post and others to try to convince the dear people that a gold standard is the thing for this country! And the Minneapolis Tribune which hopes President McKinley's International money commission will keep things warm for "bimetallism by international agreement," at least until after this fall's election in Ohio, Iowa, and other doubtful states. Silver dead! And Henl Watterson growing black in the face, so to speak, denouncing it, in Kentucky; and Billy Breckenridge helping him. They evidently haven't found it out; and an election is to be held there too, soon. Editor Wharton ought to make a pilgrimage to that country and announce the "death" to the people. It is really too bad to have them taking on so terribly. And then in the dark and bloody Kentucky there is apt to be bloodshed over the question. If the Old Bird has authentic evidence that "Silver is dead" she surely will be "particeps crimines" to anything that may occur over the question if she doesn't hasten to shut off such fellows as those mentioned, who are taking on so over the question which they evidently think a "live" issue. "Silver dead"! Who ever heard of such a lively corpse? We don't believe it. Not even though we saw it in the Eagle.

Gold vs Silver.

It is claimed that Dr. Stephen H. Emmons, of New York, has manufactured gold from silver and other metals. If this is a fact it seems strange that the price of silver is down to the lowest notch for years. If Dr. Emmons, or anybody else can make gold from silver it seems, unless it is a very costly process that silver would be worth more. It should be worth as much as gold minus the cost of changing it into that metal and a small margin for doing the work.

Then extraordinary efforts have been made to make people believe that piles of gold is to be found in Southern Africa, a place a good ways from here. Now it is claimed that millions of gold lie under the snow covered Alaska, and that it can't be reached until next spring. The last boat of the season having sailed for that region.

Then there is the talked about international agreement to have bimetallism some of our republican papers, notably the Minneapolis Tribune are harping on the probability of an agreement to go on to an international use of gold and silver as money of final redemption.

How inconsistent! If the world's supply of gold is sufficient; If the miners are turning out untold millions of gold; and chemistry is turning silver and other metals into gold, what do we want of bimetallism?

The trouble is the millions claimed as being mined are so far away and hard to get, and the chemist said to have knowledge of how to make gold is not known and accessible to most people, and the new stock is as hard to get into circulation as that gold standard people claim is hoarded away.

The fact we believe is that most of this kind of talk is to influence the coming elections of states that vote this fall.

Money.

Many people seem to have a wrong conception of the term money. They appear to think it is the main object in life, and act as if they thought it would buy them all they ever want; health and pleasure here and hereafter; as if they thought it would clothe and feed them and keep them warm; as if all they need, to have friends, is money. Some learn that such is not the case. Lately, the wealthy Rockefeller expressed himself as believing that the wealthiest man is not he that has the most money. The Holy Scriptures teach us that "For the love of money is the root of all evil." And yet many are scrambling to get the glittering gold.

Webster defines "MONEY. A piece of metal, as gold, silver, copper, etc., coined, or stamped, and issued by the soverign authority as a medium of exchange in financial transactions between citizens and with the government: also any number of such pieces; coin."

Money then is coin, is metal; all promises payable in coin, Webster says, are called money. But money itself is the metal, the coin, stamped and issued by the souverign authority, the government, as a medium of exchange in financial transactions between citizens and with the government." Between citizens and with the government, not a word about "international money" no hint that one people or one government are to make money for another or for all others; But simply for themselves; their own government.

Money is simply a medium of exchange; something to take for what you work, or for what you sell, and to keep as long as you please, or until you have occasion to buy something from someone, or to pay your taxes to the government.

Money, in itself, is of no use to anyone. The more one has the more trouble it is to take care of it. It is only when it is put to some use; when it is spent, that it's benefits come.

A man might freeze to death hugging his heap of gold, while a few dollars spent for coal would have warmed him and kept him alive. He might starve with his pockets full of coin of the wealthiest nation on earth, while a few cents would have purchased a full meal. It is only when money is used for its purpose, a means of exchange, that it is of good.

The better adapted to the purposes for which it is intended the more convenient it is. Gold and silver serve the purpose better than other metals.

It is sometimes more convenient to have paper, small pieces representing large heaps of money are more easily taken care of in traveling. But they must be redeemable in coin, according to our Constitution, which makes gold and silver the coin of the country.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 30, 1897

It would be difficult to find a more disappointed and disgruntled gang than those republicans who hoped for some sort of appointment up to the hour of Mr. McKinley's departure on an extended vacation. They had expected that a large number of appointments would be made as soon as Congress was out of the way, but only a few were made and some of them were those whose nominations had failed to be acted upon by the Senate. He added to their disgruntlement by amending the civil service rules so that no office holder in the classified service can be removed except for cause and upon written charges, and then only after a failure to make a satisfactory defense. He pleased some of the republican Congressmen by excepting from the civil service rules some of the confidential employes in each of the internal revenue and customs districts, but offended others by extending those rules to the smaller Custom Houses that were left out by Mr. Cleveland.

Boss Hanna and Mr. McKinley are said to be 'on the outs," and the big boss left Washington without saying good bye to the man he made President and whom he has been bossing. There are different stories as to the cause of the strained relations, but it is safe to say they will be patched up by the time Mr. McKinley gets to Ohio, where he expects to be during the latter part of August. As soon as he takes time to think, Boss Hanna will realize that he will need Mr. McKinley in his business before that Ohio campaign is ended, and if necessary will pocket a snub or two to get his active assistance.

Mr. Mc Kinley appointed F. V. Powderly to be Commissioner General of Immigration before he left on his vacation. This appointment was made necessary by the failure of the Senate to act upon Powderly's nomination for this position, and a bargain made before Mr. McKinley's election. It has been hinted by personal friends of Mr. McKinley that he will be rather glad than otherwise should the Senate reject Powderly's nomination next winter. In giving him the recess appointment the bargain that put Powderly on the stump for McKinley has been lived up to. If the Senate declines to let him stay there, Mr. McKinley will have another good appointment at his disposal.

Representative Prince, of Ill., may find it difficult to square himself with the editor of the republican organ at Moline. He had endorsed the editor for the postmastership of the town, and, according to the rule in vogue at the Post Office department, that endorsements should have been equivalent to the appointment. But this week Mr. Prince changed his endorsement from the republican editor to Geo. H. McKinley, a nephew of Mr. Mc Kinley. He says he was virtually compelled to change his endorsement, and gives the following as the conversation that took place at the White House between himself and Mr. Mc Kinley: Mr. Mc K. "I wish you would endorse my nephew for the place, Mr. Price." Mr. P.: "But, Mr. President, I have already endorsed Eastman (the editor), and if I go back on him now I will be held responsible politically." Mr. McK.: "Well, say to them that you endorsed him at my request." Mr. Price says that there was nothing else for him to do after that but endorse Mr. McKinley's nephew, but he may find that the editor thinks differently, and if he cannot satisfy him in some way he may also find that he has to pay a big price for having obliged the President.

A study of Czar Reed's committees of the House, announced just before adjournment, shows that Pennsylvania and New York, with nine chairmanships each, got one third of the fifty-four chairmen of House Committees, while twenty-three states got no chairmen at all. The Eastern states got twenty-eight chairmanships. When it is remembered that the legislation of the House is practically in the hands of the chairmen of committees this division is significant of controling power.

If proof were needed that Mr. McKinley was virtually compelled by campaign promises to send that currency commission special message to Congress it is easily furnished by the positive statement of prominent republican Senators that no attempt will be made to push the currency commission bill, which was jamed through the House, to a vote in the Senate. It has further become known that Speaker Reed would not have allowed the bill to get through the House had he not been certain that it was to be allowed to die in the Senate. When Mr. McKinley has paid all his campaign debts he may possibly do something because he believes in it, but it seems that there are still a lot of those debts unpaid.

Farmer Politics.

MAPLE PLAIN, August 2, 1897.

BUFFALO GAZETTE,

Mr. Editor: In the days of the monarchial kingdoms the right of possession was acquired by sword and ancient chivalry, but now days it only takes the assembling of Legislative bodies, trusts and combines, and with a stroke of the pen its done. There is and old adage or proverb which says the pen is mightier than the sword, and this proved true in the days of the Revolution, when the best men of the Colonies signed that masterly document written by Thomas Jefferson, the Declaration of Independence, which says "all men are created free and equal." What legal right has our Congress to give large grants of land to corporations and syndicates, taking it away from the native born citizen. And English lords are appropriating large tracts of our public domain for their private use. God did not make this continent for a mere hunting park, nor its public domain to be monopolized by trusts and corporations. The yeomanry of this country should have the right of way and not be side tracked at every little flag station.

But, Mr. Editor, amid all our trials and afflictions, we have some good news. First, there has been gold discovered in large quantities in Alaska, and hundreds of men are going there to dig for the hidden treasure, but they say all is not gold that glitters. Many a poor fellow will leave his bones to moulder in the frozen zone of Alaska, or wish himself home tucked up in his little bed and his mother singing to him: "Hush my darling, lie still and slumber; Holy angels guard thy bed." I fear there is a large quantity of humbug mixed in with a small quantity of gold in this Alaska excitement; transportation companies and dealers selling supplies and outfit; is nobody reaping a large harvest in this gold excitement. I think perhaps it would be as well to wait awhile and see where the leviathan's head is.

Another bit of news is that Congress has adjourned, over dog days at least, and we are thankful for this. But to many, the best news of all is the passage of the Dingley tariff bill. Just before the adjournment of Congres a high protective tariff passed by the Republicans of the 55th Congress, and considered by them a saving ordinance against all financial ills that this country is heir to. But, Mr. Editor, that Dingley tariff bill will proye to be only a one horse power concern; it will proye to be the head of a financial conspiracy and the tail to our nation's prosperits. There are thousands upon thousands of men in this country who do not believe the new tariff bill is inductive to good morals, long life, good health, or prosperity. The Republicans kept the Dingley tariff bill on deck until wheat harvest when money always comes out of its hiding place, and there being a shortage of the wheat crop in many parts of the old world, wheat will no doubt come up a little and money will be more plenty for a while at least, then the Republicans will raise the cry and say: "See what the new tariff bill is doing for the farmers." But my brother farmer, do not allow yourself to be betrayed with a kiss. This theory that the more you tax a fellow the better it is for him, and the more money he can make, is neither logical nor common good sense. I know part of the people can be fooled but not all of them, too many men put confidence in their leaders and think they will guide them to the waters of the Jordan and the promised land, but put not your trust in princes, nor in things of this world, etc. This Dingley tariff bill was brought forth in sin and conceived in iniquity, it is a blind to the people, and is calculated to do away with the real issue, the money question; it raises the tax on staple goods when the income of the people is reduced one third or one half.

Now, Mr. Editor, this country can not be successfuly run on a high protective tariff, under the Dingley schedule; the farmer will pay more for lumber; more for sugar; more for boots and shoes and many other things too numerous to mention, while the farmers produce has gone down, land value has decreased one third or one half, and if the farmer gets a loan, (which many of them have to do) it will be stipulated in the contract, payable in gold. It was claimed when Congress was convened in extra session, that the tariff schedules must be revised in order to get revenue to run the government but this was only a false pretense for the day the tariff bill was passed there was in the treasury $231,301,430 this is besice the gold reserve fund, and besides there were other assets the government could have made use of, there being $60,000,000 in silver bullion at the mints, which is lying idle. Who was it that fathered this new tariff bill, was it the farmer, the producer, or the laboring man? No! it was the trusts and combines, then my brother farmer be not longer blinded by tradition, believing that the moon is made of cheese and that the earth is full of ghosts and hobgoblins.

Thousands of people are getting tired of seeing it quoted in the papers that a high protective tariff is such a great blessing to the farmer, but if there is any truth in the Decalogue, we know that a high protective tariff is not the thing between man and man.

There is a commission of three which was apppointed by the president and they are to confer with other nations in regard to international agreement upon the money question, but this is only a blind and an empty pretense; all it will amount to, the commission will have a good time and draw their pay. Then there is a currency commission appointed, which is to look after our finance, another fox and chicken game.

The Bankers Association of the state of New York held their annual convention last week, and in their deliberations, declare that it will be necessary to retire all green backs, all silver certificates and all Sherman notes, amounting in all to $936,000,000.

They recommend the retirement of all government paper, and the substitution of bank currency under government control. The greenbacks are the best paper money we ever had and why should they be retired.

A banker can count money, figure interest, bust the bank and skip to Canada or Mexico with the depositors money, but is not a fit man to dictate to this government what her money should be.

All this talk about the interest of the poor farmer and laboring man is like the devil making confession at a revival meeting; only wan't to get another grab.

If scarcely the righteous are saved where shall the sinner and ungodly appear?

A FARMER.

Wright County Times:—We wish the state editors a good time on their annual excursion this year, as we are sure they will have. We wish we could go along too, but can't spare the money this year.

Among Our Exchanges.

St. Cloud Times:—Said a St. Cloud lady yesterday. "I do not know much about the new tariff law, but I do know I received two pounds of sugar for $1.00 less than I did a month ago.

Broad Axe:—Almost the moment after the Dingley bill was signed by the president, sugar and other articles controlled by the trusts were advanced in price. This is what the republicans call prosperity.

Duluth Herald:—It is shown by the annual report of one of the largest mining companies in Colorado that since the organization of the company the average cost of producing $1 in gold has been 37 cents.

Sherburne County Star News:—With the price of wheat steadily climbing up to the dollar mark, a good farm that produces it is much better property than a doubtful gold claim up in the frozen regions of Alaska,

World:—Thirty-five years after the passage of its first war tariff bill the Republican party has passsd another with an average rate of taxation nearly 60 per cent. higher. This is the central fact of the situation, and Mr. Dingley is not touching it in his explanations.

St. Cloud Times:—Even the most obtuse gold bugs ought to know that compelling a man to resign the presidency of a college because he believes in free coinage is not a good way to make gold converts. It isn't a free country where one is compelled to accept ready-made opinions as his own.

Litchfield Independent:—Congressman Page Morris, of Duluth, secured the place held by his predecessor, Charles A. Towne, on the river and harbor committee, but only by the unanimous request of the entire Minnesota delegation. The people of the sixth district made a poor trade when they swapped Towne for Page Morris.

Duluth Herald:—The Springfield, Mass., Republican suggests that as "gifts and legacies" are what determine a successful pesidency in Brown university, why not include the name of John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in the list of eligibles to succeed Dr. Andrews? The graduation of the young man last Junewith high honors failed to bring expected endowments; perhaps his elevation to the presidency would be more effective.

W. J. Bryan hasn't been heard from since he entered Yellowstone Park. Probably he has burst himself trying to outspout the great geyser.—Pioneer Press.

Considering the source and the subject the aboye is not even funny. Can't the old P. P. find any other kind of arguments with which to attempt to refute those advanced by William Jennings Bryan? When a man is known as a powerful and effective orator why try to belittle him in such manner? Can't they get satisfaction out of the gold standard arguments?

From the Minneapolis Times we clip: J. J. Hill closed up the depot at Volin, this state, because the stock dealers at that place shipped over the Northwestern line. This is the mighty Jim's method of punishing all towns on this line whenever they do something that does not please his august majesty. The railroad commissioners will probably make him reopen the depot.—New Paynesville Press.

Tariff vs Finance.

The New York Times is correct in remarking that "how the foreigners would feel about it" was one of the considerations which was ommitted from the new tariff. The American constituency was the one most vitally to be looked after.—Duluth News Tribune.

And yet they want us to believe the foreigner has the tariff to pay.

If the News Tribune thinks the American constituency was the one 'vitally to be looked after," on the tariff question, why not take the same grounds on bimetallism? Why wait for England, or Baron Rothschilds to tell us what kind of money to make?

An eastern scientist has d.scovered that "love is a disease." He doesn't say whether it is contagious, or whether the treatment will come best under "similia similibus curantur," or some other "bus." In Florida, the land of the hungry alligators and phenomenal snakes, the idea of humor differs slightly from other states. The other day a man there asked two boys if they wanted to see something funny. On being told that they did he called them into his room and there cut his throat in their presence. Unfortunately the account does not tell how the boys enjoyed the treat.

The new gold discoveries in the north may not add to the gayety of nations, but it makes trouble for the philologists. The difficulty is to know how to spell the name of the region which has suddenly become famous. There appears to be no rule governing the matter, and therefore it is a go-as-you-please. Klondike, Clondike, Klondyke and Clondyke are the principal variations. As the simplest way is always the best, Klondike seems most likely to find favor.

There are no remaining public lands in any of the states of New England, in New York, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Kentucky or Texas. There are 25,000,000 acres of public land in Ohio, 37,000,000 in Florida, 32,000,000 in Alabama, 28,000,000 in Louisiana, 36,000,000 in Michigan and 34,000,000 in Wisconsin. The other public lands are in the western states and in the territories.

As Europe's wheat crop in 1897 will be from 100,000,000 to 120,000,000 bushels smaller than that of 1896, and as the reserves of wheat on hand at the present time are lower than they were at this season in the past eight or ten years, the wheat market for the next six or eight months is likely to be strong. This is a decidedly fortunate circumstance for the United States wheat grower. He will, from present crop indications, have from 75,000,000 to 100,000,000 bushels more to sell than he had in 1896.

The death of Mrs. Aldrich, of San Diego, Cal., removes another of the women who are widows of revolutionary soldiers. A few years ago there were no less than 13 such drawing pensions from the government. Now there are but six, and it cannot be long before the last one is gone, for they are, of course, all very old. Mrs. Aldrich was born in 1800, or not till 18 years after the British evacuated New York. Her husband was, therefore, at least 40 years her senior. It is only such a discrepancy of ages which would permit a woman whose husband was one of the original patriots to survive to this day.

Had it not been for Mrs. Amelia Kohler, who died recently in Mount Vernon, N. Y., aged 92 years, Tom Moore might never have written "The Last Rose of Summer." The poem was of her suggestion, and the first line was from her lips. She was early in the century a close friend of Moore's sister, who kept a private school in London. While walking in the garden of the school with the poet one day Mrs. Kohler, so the story runs, plucked a rose, remarking: "'Tis the last rose of summer; why not write about it, Mr. Moore?" The incident suggested the thought that was afterward woven into verse.

The anxiety of some medical men at St. Louis that a murderer sentenced to be hanged should die a sane man resulted in his death before the time for his legal execution had arrived. He had received an injury to his skull which had rendered him insane. The medical men were greatly shocked to think that the law should hang an insane man and they proposed to perform an operation which would restore his reason. The operation was a success, but the man died. Tender-hearted people are thus consoled by the knowledge that if the murderer had survived the experiment he would have been hanged.

UNDER ARREST.

President Dolan Charged with Riot and Unlawful Assembly.

Army of Strikers in Camp at Turtle Creek, Pa., Greatly Incensed, and Trouble Is Threatened—The Situation Elsewhere.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 2.—Patrick Dolan, district president of the miners' organization, has been arrested by the order of Thomas P. de Armitt, superintendent of the New York & Cleveland Gas Coal company. The charge against him is riot and unlawful assembly and the warrant was served at 1:15 o'clock this (Monday) morning as he was at the head of a marching column of strikers, proceeding to the De Armitt mines. District Secretary Warner, Organizer Cameron Miller and other leaders of the strikers were included in the warrant, but Mr. Dolan was the only one arrested.

Mr. Dolan was leading 500 strikers to the Sandy Creek mines when the warrant was served. Five hundred more were marching to the Plum Creek mines by another route. The deputy who served the warrant was surrounded by threatening strikers as he did so, and but for Mr. Dolan's counsels a conflict might have occurred. He told his companions he would soon be free, and went away with the deputy, while the strikers continued their march. A citizen of Turtle Creek stands ready to furnish bail for Mr. Dolan, and it is presumed he will soon be released. The incident has caused a very ugly feeling among the strikers, and if the other leaders included in the order of arrest should be stopped in their work decidedly vigorous action will probably be taken at the big meeting this morning.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 2.—All roads led to Turtle creek Sunday. Marching miners from all over the district were converging toward Camp Determination, and if all those reported as being on the march reach the scene there will be at least 6,000 diggers present at the big meeting which is scheduled for 11 o'clock this morning at McCrea's schoolhouse. The miners expect 8,000 to be on hand. The borough of Turtle Creek experienced the liveliest day in its history with its large transient population of miners and curious visitors, but the day passed without trouble of any kind. Burgess Teats, of the borough, visited the miners' camp Sunday and said he had no reason to order the crowd to disband, and as long as peace prevails he will not disturb them.

There was a complete shift in the make up of the campers. The men from the Wheeling division of the Baltimore & Ohio, who have been on guard ever since the big movement against the De Armitt men was inaugurated, left during Saturday night for their homes at Finleyville, Gastonville, Snowden, Whitehall and Banksville. These same men, after reaching home and recuperating somewhat, have formed new divisions and are returning to the seat of war in order to attend the big meeting in the morning. While the old guard was flitting new men were taking their places, and took charge of the watch that is being kept up until all of the New York & Cleveland men quit work.

Saturday's guard was noticeable for the absence of foreigners. The gathering on watch now is just the reverse and is composed almost entirely of the foreign element, which is much more excitable than the others and much harder to control. This phase gives to the situation a more serious aspect. Over 1,000 weary strikers were quartered at Camp Determination Sunday, about 100 at Camp Desperation and about 400 lounged about the hills above and in the bed of Turtle creek. When the first batch of 650 marchers arrived on the scene they were very hungry and clamored for food. There were provisions enough left for 200 men, and a grand rush was made for the provision wagon, and the result was many went hungry. About this time Organizer Miller arrived on the scene and announced that a Pittsburgh baker had donated 1,000 loaves of bread, and a grocer had given a dozen cheese. To prevent another rush Miller organized a guard, and all were satisfied for the time being. As large donations of food have been promised, there is not likely to be a repetition of the scramble.

Wheeling, W. Va., Aug. 2.—There has been a decrease in the amount of coal coming out of the Fairmont region on the Baltimore & Ohio road compared with the same period last week. Last week the average number of cars received at Bellaire was 200; now the average is probably not over 100. Last week the Wheeling & Lake Erie was handling 75 to 100 cars daily; now not more than 50 cars are handled. The Cleveland, Lorein & Wheeling comparison is the same as the Wheeling & Lake Erie. In the Wheeling district the condition is full of uncertainty.

Sent to Prison.

Simla, Aug. 2.—Maulvi Sidayat Rasoul, who was recently arrested at Lucknow on the charge of insulting Queen Victoria and the British government at a meeting of Mohammedans, called to congratulate the sultan on his victories over Greece, on which occasion Maulvi told the assembly that "But for the sultan's forbearance, the old woman's ribs would have been broken years ago," has been sentenced to a year's imprisonment.

Four Boys Drowned.

Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 2.—Four small boys were drowned here Sunday while swimming. Willie and George Young, brothers, aged 16 and 18, were drowned in Brush creek. Henry Hall, aged 11, perished in the Kaw river, and Fred Bridgeford, aged 14, was drowned in a little creek emptying into the Missouri.

BLOOD IS SHED.

Nonunion Iron Workers Killed at Scottdale, Pa.

Scottdale, Pa., Aug. 2.—William Cummings, the leader of the nonunion men brought here by the Scottdale Iron and Steel company to take the places of the strikers, was shot and instantly killed Saturday night in front of the Commercial hotel. Cummings and three companions, all nonunion men, encountered a number of strikers as they came out of the barroom, and a war of words ensued. Some one fired a revolver and a dozen shots followed in quick succession. Cummings dropped dead with a bullet in his right temple and his three companions fled to the mill, hotly pursued by an angry crowd. When the nonunion men reached the inclosure the deputies on guard surrounded them and the mob was forced to retreat. Reports as to how the shooting occurred are conflicting. James Dolan, one of the nonunion men who were with Cummings, was arrested and other arrests will follow. The situation is very much strained and no one can predict the outcome.

Coroner Owens held an inquest over the remains of Cummings. A large number of witnesses were examined, but the only one who gave positive testimony was Constable Longanecker, who testified that he was standing within a few feet of the parties when the shooting took place, and plainly saw the flash and smoke from the revolver beside William C. Hubbs. The jury found Hubbs guilty and he was at once arrested. Hubbs was a roller in the employ of the Scottdale Iron and Steel company before the strike, and is one of the best-known young men in the town. While opinions differ as to the effects of Cummings' death, it is generally believed that the trouble will end the rioting and bloodshed, and that both sides will be more guarded in their actions.

FOUND GUILTY.

Charles W. Spalding at Last Convicted by a Chicago Jury.

Chicago, Aug. 2.—Charles Warren Spalding has been declared guilty of embezzlement. A verdict to this effect was returned before Judge Horton Saturday, and the only thing that stands between the former president of the Globe savings bank and a term in the state penitentiary is the intervention of the supreme court. The length of his imprisonment depends upon the clemency of the board of pardons. Under the indeterminate sentence law he cannot serve less than one year nor more than 15. His conviction was not attained before two other juries had declared him innocent of the same crime in cases that were practically the same as the present. It was the third attempt the state had made to secure 12 men who would believe that Spalding became guilty of embezzlement at the moment when, as treasurer of the state university and custodian of its funds, he hypothecated its bonds to raise money. The particular indictment under which Spalding was tried charged him with embezzlement in the hypothecating of 32 Macoupin county bonds on September 14, 1896, with the First national bank to secure a loan of $25,000. This loan was also secured by his own note, and the aggregate value of the bonds was $28,000.

FELL FROM A GREAT HEIGHT.

Terrible Fate of a Trick Bicycle Rider at a Brooklyn Park.

New York, Aug. 2.—A man known as Prof. Arion, but whose real name is supposed to be McDonald, was killed at Ridgewood park, Brooklyn, Sunday night. As a part of the entertainment which was being given during a Hessian festival the professor was advertised to ride a bicycle on a wire strung about 75 feet from the ground. When half way across the wire the professor lost one of his pedals, causing the bicycle to topple over. The bicyclist fell to the ground, bringing with him an electric wire which he carried with him for the purpose of giving an electrical display. In the fall he fractured several ribs and sustained internal injuries. He died soon after his removal to a hospital.

DETERMINED TO DIE.

Desperate Attempt at Suicide of a Cleveland Man.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 2.—Thomas Cushing, a molder, aged 33 years, Sunday afternoon stood before the mirror in his room at a boarding house and cut his throat with a razor. When taken to the operating room on the third floor of a hospital, he made a rush for a window and threw himself out, falling 50 feet to the roof of the engine-room. His body crashed through the skylight, struck an iron bar in its descent and rolled to the floor of the engine-room. Cushing is still alive but it is believed he will die.

A SAD FATE.

Two Indianians, with Their Wives, Drowned at Carlisle.

Terre Haute, Ind., Aug. 2.—Carlisle, a town about 30 miles south of here, is in mourning. It was a tragic Sabbath for the quiet place, four of its inhabitants meeting death by drowning. The dead are Mr. and Mrs. Grant Hammond and Mr. and Mrs. Abner Morris. The Hammond and Morris people were seen to go in bathing, and later their clothing was found on the river bank. It is believed one of the women was seized with cramps, and the others were drowned in trying to rescue her.

Fierce War in Africa.

Cairo, Aug. 2.—The Egyptian intelligence department has received word of heavy tribal fighting up the Nile between the dervishes and the Jaalins. The dervishes, under one of the generals of the khalifa, defeated the Jaalins in a pitched battle and occupied Metemneh on July 1. The losses on both sides were very large. The Jaalins are said to have lost 2,000 killed.

Six Killed.

Berlin, Aug. 2.—As a result of a mountain slide on the southern slope of the Koppen, one of the Risen-Gebirge peaks, six persons were killed.

Wonderful New Gun.

New York, Aug. 2.—The national government is building a new ten-inch wire gun for coast defense that will astonish the world. It will weigh 30 tons and hurl a 600-pound shell with a muzzle velocity of 2,988 feet per second. It will be wrapped with 75 miles of wire weighing 30,948 pounds.

Nominates Grant's Successor.

New York, Aug. 2.—Mayor Strong has announced the appointment of Col. George Moore Smith, of the Sixty-Ninth regiment, to succeed Col. Fred Grant, as police commissioner. The new commissioner will be sworn in to-day.

HEAT AND DROUGHT.

They Have Nearly Ruined the Corn Crop in Kansas.

Topeka, Kan., Aug. 2.—Reports as to damage to the corn crop in Kansas, Oklahoma and the Cherokee strip as a result of drought and the prevailing hot winds are pouring into headquarters here of the Santa Fe and Rock Island roads, whose lines practically cover the state. A summary of these reports indicates the conditions to be as follows: In Oklahoma it is estimated that the damage will amount to 20 per cent. The damage in southern Kansas east of Winfield is slight, upland fields being the only ones hurt. West of Winfield the damage is estimated at 50 per cent. Along the Santa Fe for 100 miles west of Emporia, on the main line, a 60 per cent. damage has been sustained. The Hutchinson branch reports 50 per cent. gone. From McPherson to the Nebraska line and in eastern and northeastern Kansas the railroad reports state that the crop has not been seriously injured. It is estimated that the damage to the crop generally throughout Kansas, Oklahoma and the Cherokee strip is about 40 per cent. Railroad officials here state if the hot winds continue two days longer the damage will amount to 60 or 70 per cent.

Chicago, Aug. 2.—Extreme heat prevailed Sunday throughout the country. Rain in the Rocky mountain region and showers in Springfield and Cincinnati reduced the temperature in those places somewhat. The temperature in different parts of the country ranged from 64 degrees at San Francisco to 102 degrees at Kansas City. For three days Kansas City has sweltered with thermometers at 102 degrees. Throughout Kansas intense heat has prevailed, and reports as to the condition of the corn crop are gloomy. Hot winds have swept across the state, and in the southern and western parts, where rain has been needed for many days, farmers are losing hope. In addition to the damage from the heat, chinch bugs have made their appearance and threaten the crop.

St. Louis, Aug. 2.—Ninety-eight degrees in the shade was registered by the weather bureau at four o'clock Sunday afternoon. This was the maximum temperature for the day. On the streets where the full force of the sun was felt the thermometer showed 100 and over. There were several prostrations, the most serious being Herman Moss, aged 23, and Arthur Gumness, aged 43.

Chicago, Aug. 2.—A gale of 56 miles an hour, carrying with it a terrific thunderstorm and some hail, swept across from Lake Michigan to the Mississippi valley early Sunday morning, damaging crops, wrecking buildings and causing loss of life. It was followed later by extreme heat, which resulted in many prostrations. The storm extended only from the eastern border of Lake Michigan through the lower part of Minnesota.

Telegraphic reports show the storm to have been unusually severe at several points. At Baraboo, Wis., wheat and corn fields were laid low and washouts occurred on railroads. The residences of William Marriott and William Wallace were considerably damaged by lightning. At Butler, Ind., the steady downpour saved the crops, which were suffering from drought. At Valparaiso, Ind., residents claimed that never before had there been so severe a storm. In the city 500 trees and telephone poles were blown down. Many head of live stock were killed by lightning and the crops suffered greatly.

HE SEEKS THE TRUTH.

Government Expert Dunham Off for the Gold Fields.

Washington, Aug. 2.—Expert Samuel C. Dunham, of the federal bureau of labor, left here Saturday for the gold belt of Alaska, where he will make an investigation and report in time for the projected spring migration. Mr. Dunham is well equipped for the work, having spent much time in the mining camps of the west, and for 11 years he has been one of the corps of experts of the labor bureau, being engaged in the investigation of special problems. He has been instructed by Commissioner of Labor Wright to make a critical inquiry into the opportunities for business, for investment of capital, employment of labor, wages, cost of living, climate, best means of reaching the gold fields and kindred subjects. He will go direct to San Francisco and will sail from there August 9, taking the Juneau overland route and reaching the Klondyke region about the middle of September. He will watch the winter and early spring work and is expected to send material for a special report, which it is hoped will be published about March 1.

FOUND DEAD.

Prominent Citizen of Sheboygan, Wis., a Victim of Apoplexy.

Milwaukee, Aug. 2.—A special to the Sentinel from Sheboygan, Wis., says: William J. Mallman, a well-known business man and chairman of the republican county committee, was found dead on the street Sunday morning. He went to Milwaukee Saturday and returned apparently in the best of health. While walking to his home he was stricken with apoplexy. His body lay in the driving rain all night and when found was hardly recognizable. He was the presidential elector from this district during the recent campaign.

Rich Lead Mine in Heart of City.

Joplin, Mo., Aug. 2.—A rich lead mine has been struck on Main street, within a few blocks of the business center of the town. H. D. Graves and Sam Vaughan, two miners who found it, took out, at the depth of seven feet, over a ton of ore. Machinery will be put in and the mine will soon be in operation right in the heart of the city.

Reaches the Age of 103.

Moorestown, N. J., Aug. 2. — Mrs. Christiana French celebrated her one hundred and third birthday at her home here Sunday. In honor of the event there was a family reunion.

Ex-Senator Doolittle Buried.

Racine, Wis., Aug. 2.—The remains of ex-United States Senator James Doolittle were laid to rest in Mound cemetery Sunday afternoon. Services were held at the First Baptist church, Rev. David B. Cheney preaching the sermon. Between 3,000 and 4,000 people paid tribute to his memory.

Revival in Diamond Market.

New York, Aug. 2.—The Times says: A great revival in the diamond trade is predicted here. It is said that within the past few days from $1,000,000 to $2,000,000 worth of diamonds have been ordered in the European markets.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Tied-up Money.

State treasnrer A. T. Korner has compiled a statement showing the amount of money the state has in suspended banks, and it is highly gratifying. He says that every dollar of this money will be collected before his term of office expires.

Since Mr. Koerner came into office there has been tied up in the St. Paul banks $157,188.79, of which $130,112.70 has been paid, leaving a balance of only $27,076.00. The Minneapolis suspended banks had a total of $57,687.83 state money, of which $43,987.03 has been paid, leaving a balance of only $13,700.80. Outside the cities, the amount of state money tied up in suspended banks was $55,709.43, and of this sum $27,144.32 has been paid, leaving still to be collected $28,565.11.

Mysterious Robbery.

J. C. Kenyon, a returning delegate from the Christian Endeavor convention at San Francisco, was robbed of money and jewels aggregating nearly $300, at the Metropolitan hotel, at St. Paul. The victim returned from Lake Como at an early hour and retired to his room. Mr. Kenyon secreted $70 in the toe of one sock and placed the latter in a shoe. His gold watch and chain, a highly prized present from a deceased son, and valued at $130, he laid under his pillow. In the morning all his valuables were gone, including a pair of solid gold cuff buttons. The door to his room was locked and the mysterious movements of the thief cannot be explained.

Work of Tramps.

Some tramps went to the house of J. Baumgarten, of Lyons, and finding only a 12-year old boy at home, at once took possession. They found some whisky, and holding the boy tight, they forced it down his throat till he was crazy with the liquor. They then ransacked the house from top to bottom. They took money, hunting in drawers, pocket books, and bureaus for any articles of value. They took their departure, carrying away sacks full of plunder. On the return of Mrs. Baumgarten and daughter, they were driven from the house by the boy maddened with whisky.

Acquitted.

Capt. Albert Scheffer was acquitted of the charge of larceny in connection with the failure of the Allemannia bank, of St. Paul. Mr. Scheffer was on the stand the greater part of one day and gave his explanation of how the money had been appropriated. The transactions, he said, had all been for the bank's account and not for personal gain. The verdict, as returned, was ordered by the court and appeared to give general satisfaction.

Fifty Years.

The First Baptist Sunday school of St. Paul, celebrated the fiftieth anniversary of the first Sunday school session ever held in that city. A. H. Canvender, a venerable gentleman of 82, the first Sunday school superintendent of St. Paul, delivered a brief address to the 300 children present, and related the incidents connected with the organization of the first school of St. Paul, July 25, 1847.

Deadly Gasoline.

By the explosion of a gasoline stove at New Richmond, the 3-year old son of S. O. Wangen was burned so it cannot recover, and Mrs. Wangen was also seriously burned about the arms, face and chest. The mother could not save the child and was forced to jump from a second story window to save her own life. The loss on the building and furniture is $150.

Hurt the Bridge.

The steamer Robert Fulton, towed by its tug, Abbott, ran into the Duluth-Superior bridge, knocking the center draw 30 feet out of plumb and damaging the center pier and abutments. The vessel was uninjured. The draw to the bridge has been open for a week, owing to breakage, and was wide open when the accident occurred.

Mormon Proselyte.

A Mormon missionary has been detailed from Utah to convert the people of Minneapolis to the faith of Brigham Young. The representative is Elder Robert Murdock, and his commission to establish a branch of the faith in Minneapolis was signed July 9 by Seymour B. Young, son of the noted Brigham Young.

News in Brief.

The electric light plant at New Prague is complete.

Dr. Stebbens, coroner of Polk county, was accidentally drowned.

The house of John O'Connell, near Marshall, was struck by lightning. The house was burned and O'Connell with it.

Eisenmenger's slaughter house, at St. Paul, was totally destroyed by fire, causing a loss of $1,500, partially covered by insurance.

Burglars visited the Omaha depot at Pipestone for the second time within a week. Several packages were stolen; value unknown. No clue.

The dwelling house of Felix Rocheleau, of Green Prairie, was totally destroyed by fire. The loss will be several thousand dollars; partially insured.

James H. Bradish, one of the brightest men who ever sat in the city council of Minneapolis, committed suicide by hanging, while temporarily detained at the police station.

The sturgeon catch in the Lake of the Woods shows a decided decrease this year.

The American Hoist and Derrick company, of St. Paul, has a contract amounting to $80,000, for the making of eight carriages for mortars for coast defense for the United States government.

The large barn on the state experimental farm at Crookston was struck by lightning and totally destroyed by together with five valuable horses, a lot of farm implements, harness, etc. Loss on building, $3,700; insurance, $3,000; loss on stock and machinery, $2,000.

At the meeting of the state board of health the salary of Dr. H. M. Bracken, secretary, was reduced from $3,500 to $2,500 at his own request.

The eighteenth annual fair of the Southern Minnesota Fair Association will be held at Rochester Aug. 31 to Sep. 3.

A car load of tow consigned from Madison, S. D., to eastern parties caught fire just as the train pulled into the railroad yards at Jackson. The car was switched down to the water tank and the water poured on but the fire could not be stopped. The cause of the fire is unknown.

A RIGHT TRUE FAIRY TALE.

I used to scoff at fairy lore and tales of magic spell,
Of jeweled caves and palaces where kindly spirits dwell.

I deemed it folly to believe the stories that I heard
Of knights who found their strength renewed by talismanic word;

Of desert places made to bloom with flowers sweet and rare,
Of sudden riches brought to them whom fate had bid despair.

I thought, indeed, our modern world too sad a place to hold
The hosts of fay who gave so much to simpler men of old.

And yet—oh, inconsistency!—I sometimes half confessed
That evil spirits with wicked wiles poor humankind distressed.

In foolish wisdom, so I scorned what little children knew,
By birthright of their innocence, to be exactly true.

But now my unbelief is helped in glad and wondrous wise;
The fairy queen herself has struck the scales from off my eyes.

And all the glories that I held to be an idle dream,
Before my sight are spread abroad to dazzle with their gleam.

The desert is a garden blown, the princess walks in light,
My arm is powered with the strength the fairy gave the knight.

Sweet music tinkles in the dells; I know a palace lies
Within the wood, and jewels drop from weeping maidens' eyes.

The cruel giant, whom I feared, lies dead upon the plain,
The moonbeams light the elfin dance, the world is glad again.

So high my new-found faith is grown that no one may conceive
A thing too strange or wonderful for me to quite believe.

And all this change is brought about by one small magic word—
My lady spoke it yesternight—the sweetest ever heard.

MRS. PERCY'S SPEECH.

BY ANNIE H. DONNELL.

"OH, IS it you, Myra? Come up here and sit down in the hammock. You're just the person I want to make my speech to!"

"Mercy! is it long and dry, and has it a moral?" cried Myra, retreating slowly down the path.

Mrs. Percy Penley then ran down the wide veranda steps and dragged her gently back.

"Bless your innocent heart," she laughed, "it's all moral! I've just been working out the most beautiful peroration. Oh, you needn't look for my writing things. My speeches are always in my head. They never get a chance to get out at folks, unless some innocent victim like yourself happens along unwarily. No use to try to escape now, my dear—you're caught!"

"Then here's for making the best of it," said Myra, making a grimace of meek resignation, and curling up cozily in the hammock. "Go on, Mrs. Percy!"

She was quite used to this small woman's ways, and not at all loth to hear what new notion was buzzing behind the small woman's pretty brow with the runaway curls on it.

Mrs. Percy hitched her rocker a trifle nearer the hammock, and let it begin again its gentle swaying back and forth.

"I'm in sober earnest, Myra. There's common sense in it as big as its moral!" she said.

Myra groaned under her breath. "I feel a little sleepy already," she murmured. "I'm accustomed to snooze during speeches. You are forewarned, my dear."

But Mrs. Percy kept on undismayed.

"Snooze during my speech at your peril, madam!" she cried. "And now I shall begin. You will find my text in —Jersey City! I guess by this time she's there—she went on the fast express, you know. The words of my text—Cousin Hortensia Additon. Subtext—How to Entertain One's Hostess."

Mrs. Percy paused impressively, Myra sat up straight, decidedly interested.

"I'll postpone my nap—go right ahead," she urged.

"Well, you know we hear a good deal of good advice about entertaining our visitors—making them feel at home, and all that. Good idea, too—I believe in it; but where's the other side of the question? I don't believe you realized there was another side. 'Me, either,' as Jacky-boy'd say. That is, I didn't till Cousin Hortensia came and lived it out before my very eyes—the dear old soul! She taught me a good many things—but to stick to my text—How shall we entertain our hostesses when we go a visiting, you and I?"

"Mercy! I—I thought we were the ones to be entertained then!" exclaimed Myra.

"Naturally. That's because you are yet in the darkness of—well, we'll call it ignorance, my dear. It mightn't be polite to call it anything so dreadful as egotism. If you'd had Cousin Hortensia for a guest three beautiful weeks, you'd be a wiser woman. You'd know that the guest herself has something to do besides being entertained. She has her hostess to think about and 'entertain.' How? Why, by being easily entertained herself, that's one way. By being thoughtful of her hostess—that's another. By remembering that she is hurried and anxious, and troubled about desserts, soups and suppers. She may be without help in her work—instance, myself—and nearly beside herself sometimes with keeping things running 'company' fashion.

"Now, just suppose the guest to be one of those languid, indigestible—yes, that's just the word I want!—persons who toy gracefully with their forks and say 'no, I thank you,' to most of the dainty dishes you've taken so much time and pains—goodness me!—to get up for them. The I. G.—indigestible guest, you know—nibbles a bite here and a bite there, and mostly doesn't even nibble. Haven't you seen just such I. G.'s many the time? Haven't you had the worst kind of internal fidgets to see your pet pudding slighted, and only a feeble mouthful or two of your beloved cheesed macaroni eaten? And haven't you ached to think of the meals and meals still to be planned and cooked?"

Mrs. Percy stopped to take a long breath. Her rocker creaked with honest indignation, and her fair cheeks were quite flushed.

"Haven't I, though?" cried Myra, warmly. "Didn't I ache and fidget just so, the very last month that ever was—when—well, somebody visited me? No names mentioned. But, oh, dear, isn't it a tug, though?"

"Then you know that kind of a visitor. Then let me introduce Cousin Hortensia. She's the other kind—blessings on her! Maybe she's an old maid and homely—and maybe her sleeves don't balloon much, but she's the model guest for me! And she had a good time herself, too—I verily do believe—as good as I had.

"What did she do? Well, some of it was what she didn't do. She didn't say, 'now do let me help you with the dishes. I can as well as not,' and wait till you said 'no, indeed,' and then go off resignedly. Of course, you'd say 'no, indeed!' But Cousin Hortensia quietly possessed herself of the wipers, and clattered away over the tumblers and cups as if it was the most ordinary thing in the world to do.

"At the very first, when she saw it embarrassed me, she didn't say much about helping; she just waited till we got acquainted a bit, and then did it without any saying.

"But, best of all to me, she seemed to 'relish my vittles,' as old Aunt Pamele would say. That was such a comfort! Why, it took away all the trouble and harship of fussing and stewing and brewing. It was a perfect delight to cook nice things for Cousin Hortensia! She 'took right holt an' eat 'em up,' according to Aunt Pamele again. She appreciated them and liked them. It warmed the cockles of my heart to see my dainty desserts being enjoyed."

"Enough to warm anybody's cockles!" murmured Myra.

"If all the guests were Cousin Hortensias in that respect," continue Mrs. Percy, thoughtfully, "how it would help the hostess."

"Amen," murmured Myra, again.

She got up slowly and stood before Mrs. Percy, making her a little sweeping bow.

"It's been a beautiful speech, my dear," she said, "it ought to be in print."

"Well, it's commonsenseful enough to be printed, anyhow, if that's all. And of course you see the moral, Myra?"

"I should say so! Moral: Eat what's set before you, now, do, for conscience sake!" Mrs. Percy laughed a little.

"That's the gist of it, I guess, so far But that was only one of the ways Cousin Hortensia entertained me. She liked the places we went to and the things we did, and she wasn't afraid to say so, too.

"She didn't sit down in one of my chairs and fold her hands with a now-what-are-you-going-to-do-for-my-benefit air. Bless you, no! and don't you believe that was a relief? I didn't have to keep wondering what in the world I could think of next to interest her—pictures, books, what?"

"Cousin Hortensia just settled quietly down amongst us as if she were at home, and did her own entertaining. There wasn't a minute that she looked bored or unentertained. She found so much to interest her, and seemed so happy all the time that I hadn't a qualm of uneasiness about her. I threw care to the winds and was happy, too. Cousin Hortensia was a comfort. I cried real tears instead of drawing a long breath when she went away; why, I didn't feel tired a bit, except a twinge or so in my egg-beater arm!"

They walked down the path together, with their arms around each other, girl fashion. At the gate, Myra said, regretfully: "I wish I hadn't been away while your Cousin Hortensia was here. If I'd met her, I might have had a visit, too, some time, you know. I never had such a satisfactory visitor."

"Well, it's your loss, my dear," said Mrs. Percy. "I'm sorry for you."—Housewife.

Surpass It.

If your seat is too hard to sit upon, stand up. If a rock rises before you, roll it away or climb over it. If you want money, earn it. If you wish for confidence, prove yourself worthy of it. It takes longer to skin an elephant than a mouse, but the skin is worth something. Don't be content with doing what another has done—surpass it. Deserve success and it will come. The boy was not born a man. The sun does not rise like a rocket or go down like a bullet fired from a gun; slowly but surely it makes its round, and never tires. It is as easy to be a leader as a wheel-horse; if the job be long, the pay will be greater; if the task be hard, the more competent you must be to do it.—Detroit Free Press.

The Safest Ice Water.

An old physician considers this the only safe ice water to be used during the summer months:

"Procure some nice looking bottles which will hold about a quart, and fill them with water which has been running for some time. Water which has run through a filter attached to a faucet is preferable. Then cork them tightly and place them directly on the ice for some hours before you need to use them, turn them two or three times, so that they will become uniformly cold, and you will find that you can drink more of this water with less after discomforts than you can the water which has been cooled by being directly iced."—N. Wordsworth's "Business."

When the poet Wordsworth died, an old lady at Ambleside lost no time in telling the mournful news to an old and confidential man servant. "Ey, ey!" quoth Thomas, "it's a gret loss, nae doot. But efter a' it may not be sic a parlish loss as you're coonttin' on. Mrs. Wordsworth, they say, is a gey, clever body, and she'll be carryin' on t' business, we may be sewer."—San Francisco Argonaut.

YUKON GOLD FIELDS.

Events Which Led Up to the Present Boom.

The Route to Klondyke—Hardships to Be Encountered—Surprising Figures as to Distances—Cost of Living.

The excitement caused by the discoveries of gold in large quantities along the Klondyke river and the waters tributary to it, near the Alaskan boundary, has aroused a spirit of wealth-hunting which will not be allayed for many a day. Determination to become possessed of the riches of the cold and dreary Yukon basin has impelled thousands to go forth, in many instances with very imperfect preparation, to secure the yellow metal, which, it is known, this region so largely conceals. The gold fever has taken such a hold along the Pacific coast that breathless haste to reach this new land of promise has dominated all considerations of prudence and even of safety. The tales told by miners returned from the Klondyke fittingly rival the stories of California's golden period.

LANDING AT THE KLONDYKE DIGGINGS.

As far back as 1860 a deposit of gold was found in the basin of the Yukon by a prospector named George Holt. He also reported the finding of coarse specimens along the Hootalinqua river. But it was the discovery of gold near Sitka in 1873, followed by the finds in the vicinity of Juneau in 1880, that drew attention to the possibilities of the newly-acquired territory of Alaska as a gold-producing country. The great abundance of gold was first made known by Joseph Juneau, who prospected in the region around the city bearing his name. In 1885 mining prospectors began to scatter themselves along the Rivers Pelly and Hootalinqua, and in the year following much mention was made of the Stewart river as a field for the enterprising gold hunter. Rich strikes were made in 1892 by prospectors along Miller creek, a tributary of Sixty Mile creek. The progress made in finding gold along the Alaskan and British Columbian rivers, although giving high promise of future discoveries of gold, was not followed by anything which created a widespread adventurous spirit among people who were outside the mining region.

The Klondyke and its aptly named golden tributaries, the Bonanza and the Eldorado, have again turned the heads of Americans and Canadians, starting them in pursuit of the metal which has been described as "bright and yellow, hard and cold, heavy to get, and light to hold."

The reports from this locality of riches would indicate that the gold diggers have comported themselves in such an unexampled manner in times of great excitement as to somewhat revolutionize the traditions of gold-mine prospecting. Systematically and orderly did they go about their work, and when the harvest was reached each one appears to have rested content with the measure of his luck.

Encouraged by their tales of success, thousands of others are crowding the outgoing steamers in the hope that similar good fortune may be awaiting them. So dazzling appears the prospect that distance and hardships are insufficiently measured, and the long wintry Alaskan day which will have dawned upon the fortune seekers before they reach their intended destination has, it is to be feared, been little taken into consideration. Few setting out from San Francisco, Seattle or Vancouver have stopped to think that when Behring sea has been reached and a distance of 2,500 miles traversed over the waters of the Pacific, the journey is but beginning. The cliffs of St. Michael's, however, can only remind the traveler that there is still before him a voyage almost as long, much more perilous, and from Dawson City, has told the world that the dreaded mosquito finds a home there, and that he is "our worst enemy."

The landing place by the Yukon river route is St. Michael's, about 60 miles from the mouth of the Yukon. From this point, before the gold fields are reached, it is necessary to plow the waters of this great river for a distance of 1,890 miles, leaving behind the territory of the United States as the destination is neared. To reach Dawson City, states a recent writer, "one must traverse ley plains, climb steep, snow-clad mountains, and invade treacherous rivers."

In the shorter route, by way of Juneau, on the southeastern part of the Alaskan territory, difficulties are also encountered. When the Pacific inlets and straits have been left behind and the vessel enters the harbor of Juneau a diversified method of travel lies before the gold hunter. It takes 90 days to reach here from Seattle. Then Dyea, at the extremity of the Lynn canal, is made. This town reached, the great passes of the Chilkoot, Chilkat, and Moore, with their frequent snowstorms, next invite the weary traveler to continue his journey. This is not a path of roses he is about to tread.

To save themselves when caught in the terrible storms which overtake wanderers in these passes above the Lynn canal, men have been known to crawl under some overhanging rock and remain there without food until the danger was past. The storms sometimes last for several days. From Juneau to Dyea is 100 miles. Crossing the Alaskan line one goes to Lake Linderman, 30 miles, on foot. Then across the lake for about five miles, after which an overland journey to the head waters of Lake Bennett, 28 miles long; on foot again to the Cariboo river; four miles to Tagish lake, from whence 21 miles may be traveled on boat. Continuing through a mountainous country, Mud lake is reached; thence to White Horse rapids, and on to Lake La Barge, where 31 miles of navigable water is found. After a further journey of 200 miles along the Lewis river the Yukon is reached at Fort Selkirk.

From Juneau to Dawson is a distance of 650 miles. The following advice has been offered to parties intending to take this route to the gold creeks: "No one should venture without eight months' provisions, and these should be bought at Juneau. He should have 400 pounds of flour, 100 pounds of beans, 100 pounds of bacon, 100 pounds of sugar, 10 pounds of tea, 30 pounds of coffee, 150 pounds of mixed fruit, besides salt, pepper, and cooking utensils. All these can be bought for the sum of $90. To convey them to the head waters of Lake Linderman would cost $15 per hundred." A month of perilous travel is ahead of the prospector.

The Klondyke empties into the Yukon 50 miles above the Big river. Bonanza creek is a tributary of the Klondyke and Eldorado is again a tributary of the Bonanza. It is along these two rivers

DOG SLEDGE GOING TO THE KLONDYKE.
(From a Photograph.)

It is assumed that there does not exist the slightest doubt as to the Klondyke region being well within Canadian territory. Although it is only within the last few months that the Yukon district has sprung into notoriety, the Canadian government surveyors have been there for many years. In 1887 an expedition was sent by the interior department to explore that part of the northwest territories drained by the Yukon river. The expedition was under the charge of Dr. George M. Dawson, now director of the Dominion Geological survey, and of Mr. William Ogilvie, who had had previous experience in exploring and surveying the northwest. Their chief task was to mark out the one hundred and forty-first meridian of longitude, which is designated by treaty as the boundary line between the United States and Canada from Mount St. Elias to the Arctic ocean. Mr. Ogilvie determined, by a series of lunar observations, the point at which the Yukon river is intersected by the one hundred and forty-first meridian, and marked the same on the ground. He also determined where the boundary line crosses Forty-Mile creek, the western affluent of the Yukon in the gold-bearing district. The Canadian surveyors reported at the time that "in proximity to the boundary line there existed extensive and valuable placer mines," and in view of this fact they made their observations with special care. The United States government was invited to make a joint survey, and the invitation has been repeated since, but up to this time there has been no disposition to take advantage of it.

The boundary, according to the surveyors, crosses Forty-Mile creek 25 miles west of the point where it flows into the Yukon. Fort Cudahy, which is situated at the confluence of the Yukon and Forty-Mile creek, is, therefore, considerably within the Canadian side of the boundary. The Klondyke river flows into the Yukon from the east, 50 miles higher up than Fort Cudahy, near Fort Reliance, and it is, therefore, within Canadian territory for the whole of its course.

The Dominion government has announced that it will publish a summary of some further reports which have been received at the interior department from Mr. Ogilvie. In these reports Mr. Ogilvie speaks at length of the great difficulties and dangers which have to be encountered by explorers in that land. The lack of a mail service seems to be felt almost as great an inconvenience as the want of a claims registration bureau, with a court for the collection of debts.

Getting It Back.

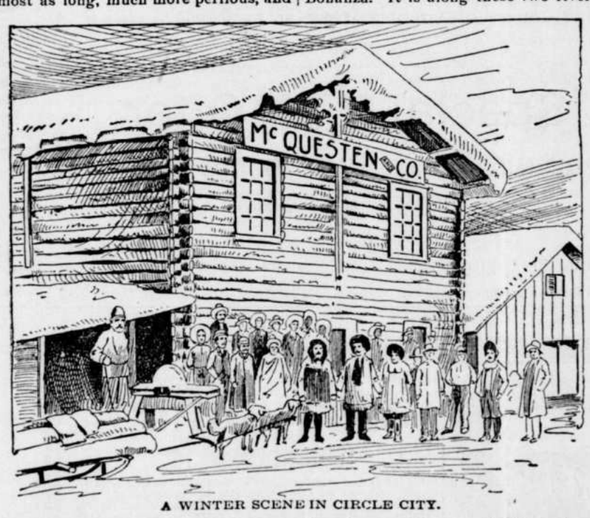
"Oh, no. He has been appointed the receiver."—Brooklyn Life.



A WINTER SCENE IN CIRCLE CITY.

through an inhospitable country beset with the dangers of Alaskan river navigation.

Neither have the severities of the new clime been properly reckoned. Many who have gone forth in their enthusiasm for wealth to the rich localities almost within the arctic circle will find themselves poorly equipped to cope with the chilliness of below-zero temperature. How many may succumb to the hardships they must necessarily undergo in their leap after gold! And this applies to any route that may be selected by the adventurous spirits who are rushing in quest of fortune. There is said to be a great difference between the climate of the coast and that of the interior of this land of gold. In winter there is extreme cold, while in the short summer the heat is intense. One of the prospectors, writing recently that the most extensive finds have been made. Prospecting on other creeks along the Klondyke has resulted in considerable success, and much is expected from future operations in this part of the Yukon basin.

Circle City is 200 miles from the Klondyke fields. Fort Reliance is 750 miles from Juneau. The mines of the Klondyke run from 35 to 100 miles from the Alaskan boundary, and are in British Columbia. The Eldorado is the richest mine of them all. It has 19 claims, said to be worth $300,000 each. The total wealth of the Eldorado, Bonanza, Baer and Gold Bottom mines is estimated at $60,000,000. Lots are selling at Dawson City, at the mouth of the Klondyke, for $8,000 and upward. Across the boundary in Alaska there are many mines in operation, and the entire region northwest to Forty-Mile creek contains a great deal of the yellow metal.

The wages paid to miners in the Klondyke district are $15 a day. Workers in the sawmill of Joseph Ladue, who claims to own the entire Dawson City site, are paid ten dollars a day.

Prices in the latter place are fairly representative of the amounts charged for provisions and articles of wear, and the following list will give interesting information on this subject. These were the ruling prices when the miners left Dawson City to return with their immense wealth and entrance their neighbors with the recital of the story of their success:

Flour, per 100 lbs.	$12 00
Moose ham, per lb.	1 00
Caribou meat, per lb	62
Beans, per lb.	10
Rice, per lb.	25
Sugar, per lb.	25
Bacon, per lb.	40
Butter, per roll	1 50
Eggs, per dozen	1 50
Better eggs, per dozen	2 00
Salmon, each	$1 to $1 50
Potatoes, per lb.	25
Turnips, per lb.	15
Tea, per lb	1 00
Coffee, per lb.	50
Dried fruits, per lb.	35
Canned fruits	50
Canned meats	75
Lemons, each	20
Oranges, each	50
Tobacco, per lb.	1 50
Liquors, per drink	50
Shovels	2 50
Picks	5 00
Coal oil, per gallon	1 00
Overalls	1 50
Underwear, per suit	$5 to $7 50
Shoes	5 00
Rubber boots	$10 to $15 00
Lumber, per 1,000 feet	$750 00

It is now too late to reach the Klondyke district this year; and as mining is possible only during the months of May, June and July gold-seekers are advised by experts to delay the start for the fields until April 15 of next year. The following summary of the cost of the trip, from Chicago, and the length of time it will require to get there is reasonably authentic:

Fare, Chicago to Seattle	$ 51 50
Tourist sleeper, fare	7 00
Pullman sleeper	15 50
Meals, in dining-car	10 00
Tourist meals at station	6 40
Chicago to Seattle, in miles	2,336

Total days required for journey by St. Michael's route	40 to 60
Total days required for journey by Chilkat Pass	30

The dominion government at Ottawa, Ont., is now considering means to preserve to Canadians the lion's share of the profits which will flow from the northern Eldorado, but it is highly improbable that there is any foundation for the report that the exclusion of all but British subjects is under contemplation. What the government probably will do is to impose a royalty on all ore taken from the soil.

WASHING A FINE ART.

Washing pretty summer gowns and belongings is a fine art, very easy to learn. A bright day, plenty of water and a little pure soap are the necessary aids in the work. To do it, fill a tub two-thirds full of warm water, dissolve a cake of Ivory soap (which will not fade the most delicate colors), add it to the water, wash the garments carefully through it; rinse first in clear water, then in bluewater; wring, dip in thin starch; hang on the line in the shade. When dry sprinkle and iron on the wrong side. Gowns thus laundered will look fresh for the entire summer.

The Prodigal.

When the prodigal came back from his tour awheel around the then known world, his fatted calf at once arrested the attention of the elder son. "Wouldn't that kill you!" exclaimed the latter, poking the old man in the ribs. It will be observed that this version varies the conventional order; such is the part of the higher criticism.—Puck.

An Ammunition Expert.

Ammunition making is a great art and there are few men in the world who are skilled in it. The superintendent of the ammunition department of the Winchester Repeating Arms Co., New Haven, Ct., is acknowledged to be the leading authority on ammunition making in the world. His great skill and constant care has placed Winchester ammunition ahead of all other makes. For uniformity, reliability and strong shooting qualities, it is unequalled. The great demand for Winchester ammunition makes it easy to buy even in the most out of the way parts of the world. Winchester guns and Winchester ammunition make a combination that cannot be surpassed. Send for large illustrated catalogue free.

WISE WOMEN.

Those Who Heed the First Symptoms of Nervous Derangement.

Special from Mrs. Pinkham.

A dull, aching pain at the lower part of the back and a sensation of little rills of heat, or chills running down the spine, are symptoms of general womb derangement.

If these symptoms are not accompanied by leucorrhœa, they are precursors of that weakness. It is worse than folly to neglect these symptoms. Any woman of common sense will take steps to cure herself.

She will realize that her generative system is in need of help, and that a good restorative medicine is a positive necessity. It must be a medicine with specific virtues. As a friend, a woman friend, let me advise the use of Lydia E Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If your case has progressed so that a troublesome discharge is already established, do not delay, take the Vegetable Compound at once, so as to tone up your whole nervous system; you can get it at any reliable drug store. You ought also to use a local application, or else the corrosive discharge will set up an inflammation and hardening of the parts. Mrs. Pinkham's Sanative Wash is put up in packets at 25 cents each. To relieve this painful condition this Sanative Wash is worth its weight in gold.

MRS. GEORGE W. SHEPARD, Watervliet, N. Y., says: "I am glad to state that I am cured from the worst form of female weakness. I was troubled very much with leucorrhœa, bearing-down pains and backache. Before using Mrs. Pinkham's Remedies it seemed that I had no strength at all. I was in pain all over. I began to feel better after taking the first dose of Vegetable Compound. I have used five bottles, and I feel like a new woman. I know if other suffering women would only try it, it would help them."

BUFFALO GAZETTE

DELANO, FRIDAY, AUG. 6, 1897.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE VILLAGE OF DELANO.

DELANO DIARY

--Read our latest news.

--Delano Fair Day tomorrow.

--John Brandser has four men tailoring, and then can hardly keep up.

--If you want to see how the Yukon gold country looks turn to the third page of this paper.

--Several traveling gentlemen, gripsacks and all, camped in the village park a few days last week.

--Dr. Niven will be in Delano, Aug. 9 and 10, Wayerly 11, and Howard Lake 12 and 13. 44-2t.

--Edwin Murray, representing the Minneapolis "Gold Cure" Institute was in town Tuesday.

--Threshers and engines form a good share of freight for the west now. Some of the outfits are monsters, and capable of threshing a lot of grain.

--Mayor Borsch and Geo. P. Schaffer closed their new stores Sunday. The Mayor announced the fact by a card in the window "Closed on Sunday." Let others follow this good example.

--Charley Conzet, in his new harness shop, at the end of the bridge is as snug as a bug in a rug. He is selling a lot of harness, fly nets, whips, and other horse fixings away down. He also keeps watch guards.

--Notwithstanding the late start gardens got this spring, considerable quantities of vegetables and "garden truck" is being marketed daily, by those who attended to planting when the seed time was here.

--Delano now has a "saloon" sign in plain unvarnished English. Paul Janikula is the man who dares announce to the public that fact. The rest of them prefer other names for some reason or another.

--Who says the United States is afraid of Japan? When the news arrived that the stars and stripes had been flung to Hawaiian zephyrs, Paul Plotnick was heard to remark "If there is going to be war, we fight."

--Many travelers by train, team, afoot, and on wheels, pass through town daily, on their way to the harvest fields of the west. On Tuesday, two young men on bicycles, claiming to be from Kalamazoo, Mich., and bound for Breckenridge, stopped long enough for one to get shaved.

--On Sunday Morning, Rev. Tabor Davies at the Presbyterian church preached a very interesting and instructive sermon. He read the 38th and the 88th Psalms and compared them and drew a valuable lesson therefrom. It was a pity more people were not present to listen to the sermon. But many men and women who profess to like good sermons were not present.

--On Sunday evening, Rev. Farber, of the Methodist church preached a good sermon from the text, Hebrews 3 and 12 "Take heed, brethren, lest there be in any of you an evil heart of unbelief, in departing from the living God." It was heard by a small audience. It seems strange that men and women professing to believe in christianity don't attend church and listen to the preached word more than they do.

--A wave of prosperity, as is usual about this time of year, has struck our farmers, those lucky enough to have grain to sell. Wheat at 75 cents, corn and oats at 25 cts. per bushel a little more like old prices than what we have been having for a while back. We hope while settling up what old debts possible our readers will not forget to pay the GAZETTE its share. Though each subscriber ows but a few dollars, if each would pay up, at once, the GAZETTE would be able to build a new house. Bring in your share while riding on this wave of prosperity, and hurry up about it, for after harvest, we may fall into the trought of the sea again. Nothing like riding on top of the waves.

—When strangers come to a town they are apt, about the first thing to enquire for the church they have been attending. They visit it the first Sabbath expecting to ss it filled with prominent citizens; with professional, business, and laboring men; with their wives an children. They expect in this christian land that people go to church somewhere. And as few if any, of the men they expected to see were present, they try another church, and after making the entire rounds, are forced to think that either the town contains a much less number of prominent people than they had been led to believe, or that those they know in town are either infidels or very indifferent to church affairs.

—The Minneapolis Tribune of Monday morning last, gives quite a lengthy account of how a couple of Delano boys took police affairs into their own hands in the Saw Dust city. A young lady was going home, having alighted from a car lately returned from St. Paul. She was followed by a man who struck her and knocked her down, just then Edward Freeman and Emery Cunningham, on wheels, came along. They took in the situation and went to the young lady's rescue. The assailant ran. Emery took after him and was joined by others in the pursuit. They soon captured the man and took him to his boarding place where he was identified. The police refused to arrest him "on suspicion". What do they have police for in Minneapolis?

—J. E. Brothers will have an auction on Fair Day. Read his add.

—Wait for Dr. Niven for fine dental work, at Delano, Aug. 9 and 10; Wayerly, 11; and Howard 12 and 13.

—Call on John Brandser and leave your measure, and pick out cloth for a new suit, before the fall rush begins.

—M. Lillie Slaight, of Hutchinson, writes that she will be in Delano sometime towards the last of August in the interest of temperance.

--We acknowledge receipt of two fine picteres, Minnehaha Falls, and a cat and dog scene, from the St. Paul and Minneapolis engravers, firm of Bramblett & Beygeh.

—Dr. Niven will be here next Monday and Tuesday, at the Danforth House, and in Waverly, Tuesday. He will do your dental work as well and as cheap as anybody.

—A big covered wagon steering west passed through town yesterday. On the side of the cover was painted "Alaska or Bust." It drew up in front of a saloon, and people were led to believe that the "bust" was coming first.

—A train load of telephone poles passed through town a few days ago. It looks as if there would be a possibility of talking up and down the line soon. We understand where it is convenient, the drugstore in each town along the line will attend to the business for the line.

—Nobody, so far as we know, has left for Clondyke gold fie'ds. Some of our citizens, once upon a time went to the Black Hills, and then came back again. Their experience hasn't been forgotten, and remembrance of it serys as a balance wheel to hold those level who get the slightest indications of the gold fever.

--Harvest is now in full blast. Instead of the farm houses being filled with men with good appetites who help harvest the golden grain and draw their pay when through, to carry home, the farmer and his boy reap and shock their own crop, and pay their machine notes and for their binding twine. The corporation gets it.

—The Englishman who spelled saloon after the style of some of his countrymen made rather a serio comic job of it:

S a hess
A a hay
L a hell
OO two hoes
N and a hen.

—Our village, like many others, has several flourishing secret societies, their numbers in the aggiegate are not a few. We understand on joining they are obliged to answer the question, "Do you believe in God?" in the affirmative. They profess to believe in Christianity, yet, but few of them attend any church regularly. Why is this? The lodges are usually for men alone. Don't the members desire that their families have a place of worship. Why, then don't they who believe in a Supreme Being go with their wives and children to church on Sunday, and help build up churches, the pride of any community.

County Cullings.

From the Cokato Enterprise (a Republican) paper, we learn from an official notice over the name of Judge Tarbox, that special terms of District Court will be held at Buffalo, Aug. 16, Sept. 20, and Nov 22, at 10 A. M, of each day.

And that special terms of court will be held for naturalizing citizens only at the town hall in Delano, Aug. 17; town hall at Cokato, Aug. 18 and 19 and at Cotton's hall, Annandale, Aug. 20, all to commence at 9 a. m. of said days.

Whether the Judge has entirely forgotten the Gazette, or thinks its readers, many of them Democrats, not wanted at these terms of court, we have'nt learned. But he seems to have failed to send us a copy of the advertisements. We hope our readers will not fail to read this, and be on hand such as have not been naturalized and attend to it.

If the GAZETTE'S readers do not believe in allowing the Howard case to drop out of existence without a trial; nor in having a whitewash trial, with Frank Larabee left out in the cold, while others connected therewith are appointed (not elected by the people) to respectable positions of what should be places of honor and trust, nor in the County Commissioners offering big rewards for capturing criminals, when they have what is supposed to be as efficient a set of officers for that purpose as any county in the state; if many of them don't believe in the county being run by whiskey, monopoly or any other ring, but by the people's own votes, they are as much entitled to know when special terms of court are to be held as are the readers of any other paper in the county, and Judge Tarbox should have furnished a copy of the notice to the GAZETTE for publication.

If you are foreign born remember you can't vote until you have been naturalized three months. Attend to it.

J. E. Russell left this morning for Howard Lake, Wright county, to take charge of the flour mill at that place. Mr. Russell is a good miller and the people of Howard Lake will find him an excellent citizen. Mrs. Russell and daughter will remain here for the present. —Sherburne County Star News.

Sheriff John Nugent and County Attorney Pidgeon, of Wright county, were here yesterday morning and went off towards Duluth on the Eastern. They wouldn't give up any information as to the errand they were on, but indications pointed to the conclusion that they were watching for one another.--Star News.

Mrs. C. J Buckley expects to go to Sheldon, Iowa, Monday next for a visit with her friend, Mrs. Wollingdon.

Dr. E. E. Shrader, and Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Halgren, of Watertown, were Delano visitors yesterday afternoon.

Miss Mary Catlin, who has been visiting at St. Peter for a couple of weeks, returned home Wednesday evening.

Rev. Says is enjoying his summer vacation by travelling over the country, to Michigan, Canada and other places.

Rev. Fairbanks came down from Cedar Mills Tuesday morning on account of a telegram that his father was worse.

Leo. Baldus, one of S. W. Franklin's prosperous farmers marketed some surplus wheat at prosperity prices yesterday.

Nick Frank and Charley Brunkow were among Delano's thriving business men who visited the cities on Wednesday.

George Shillok, of Minnetrista, who attended school here last winter, and his father drove over yesterday and visited Delano.

Frank Vanvranken, of Kalamazoo, Mich., was the guest of his old neighbors, W. H. Frazee, and H. V. Wilder and families this week.

Mr. Jim Barret, Misses Anna Barrett and Sophie Witchie, of Waverly, attended the reception in honor of Miss Minne Kaemer last Friday evening.

Andrew Ames and family are to leave soon for St. Paul. Andrew expects to attend medical lectures at the college of Physicians and Surgeons, Chicago, this winter.

Among passengers for Minneapolis on Tuesday morning were Mesdames William Gross, C. M. Coffin, John Cameron, C. H. Green, Miss Mollie Maxfield, and Ferdinand Kelsey.

Vernon Wilder accompanied by his friend, Harvey Stark, of St. Peter, came up from "U" Friday. They forgot to get up soon enough Saturday morning, so remained in Delano Saturday, also.

Mrs. Mary Rausch, who has been the guest of her sister-in-law Mrs. Borsch, returned home to St. Paul, Wednesday. Josephine Borsch accompanied her aunt and will spend a couple of weeks in the capitol city,

L. P. Probst and family have returned from Mooreton, Dak., where they have been visiting Mrs. Probst's father and family. Louey says John Haffner is the same old John.

Mrs. Brothers went to Wayzata on the early train one morning this week and returned on the 10 o'clock passenger, having rented a house into which they intend moving soon.

"MORE TRUTH THAN POETRY."

At the end of the bridge across the Crow,
Gently haul up your team, to them say: Whoa!
Get down and hitch them fast, and in you go
To see the goods that Charley has to show.
Harness, heavy and light, all in a row,
As good as anyone can cut and sew.
So strong as to haul binder or mow;
And fine enough for you and your beaux.
And, if when a good thing you see, you know,
A purchase you will make, before you go.

WONDERFUL SALES.
$10 Every Day Can Be Made by Agents.
To prove it, we give a few items from actual sales made within the last few weeks:
One agent sold 27 copies in two and a half days. Another sold 15 copies in two days, and another 30 in three days. One agent in Indiana sold 15 copies in two days. An agent in South Carolina sold 43 copies in three days. One agent in Georgia sold 25 in two days. An agent in Central Georgia sold 82 copies in ten days. When you consider the commission we allow agents, and the immense popularity of this wonderful book, and the ease with which it sells, there is nothing in which a live, pushing man can engage which will yield such profits. For instance: one agent made $108.25 in ten days selling "Thunderbolts." Another made $39.60 in three days; another $9.25 in one day; another $33 in two days; another $56.75 in three days.

THE DRUMMER BOY AT MARENCO.

Marengo's plain ran red with blood
Of Victor's veterans slain;
Against that fierce and fiery flood
Lannes Legions strove in vain.

Napoleon, with that old gray cloak
Drawn round his meager form,
Dashed madly through the blinding smoke,
The genius of the storm.

A drummer boy had tramped all day
To keep his place among
The flying column of Desaix,
On whom the battle hung.

The chieftan marked the weary lad
With torn and bleeding feet,
And at the sight his heart grew sad.
"Up, boy; sound the retreat!"

"Nay, sire," a flush defiant burned
Upon that boyish brow,
"That beat I never yet have learned,
Desaix ne'er taught us how.

"But, sire," his ardent eye grew large
With courage half devine,
"They say that when I beat the charge
The dead fall into line.

"I beat it on old Tabor's slopes
Till the attibals grew dumb;
At the pyramids the Frenchmen's hopes
Rose with my rattling drum!

"I've beaten it when lips that bled
Gasped out a parting cheer;
Ah, I can almost wake the dead;
Sire may I beat it here?"

Napoleon's piercing glance was bent
Full on the dauntless boy.
And flashed there through his wonderment
A gleam of pride and joy.

"Go, beat it, then! Advance, advance!"
The clarion call rang out,
And the gallant grenadiers of France
Took up the battle shout.

"Beat on brave boy?" and long and loud
The warlike music dinned
Till fled the Austrians like a cloud
Before the wrathful wind.

The battling hosts that met that day
Figments of fancy seem;
Napolean, Victor, Lannes Desaix,
Mere phantoms of a dream.

But still in Piedmont and Savoy
When booms the sunset gun,
'Tis told that by a drummer boy
Marengo's field was won!

—New York Sun.

THE assasination of the Spanish Premier by a Neapolitan anarchist occurred Sunday. Senor Canovas was shot down while waiting for his wife. The murderer was promptly arrested, and is believed to be Michelo Augene Golli.

WE received last week a harvest edition of the Dodge County Republican, U. B. & B. A. Shaver, Publishers. The paper was yellow and the matter nicely gotten up and arranged. Such a paper is a credit to the town and to the publishers.

TELEGRAPHIC reports come of the sinking of the steamer Mexico on her trip to the Klondyke gold fields. Her passengers were transferred to small boats and saved. Had the vessel been an iron one it is said she would probably have gone down with all on board as she struck rocks and tore a hole in her hull.

IT is a wonder the gold standard fellows of Wall street don't suppresss Dr. Emmons and his discovery of turning silver into gold. In days gone by a man with a discovery of such importance was hardly safe. If such means can be made use of to suppress the will of the people, and contract the currency onto a gold basis as has been done, and God in his infinite wisdom discloses to Dr. Emmons the secret of making silver into gold, of course they will try to buy or frighten him off. God is with the people yet. The tariff hoists up prices and there comes bountiful harvests so that all may be fed.

MAJOR BALDWIN in a letter claims to know nothing of having lost his place and says he belonged to the Old Iron Brigade and don't intend to surrender to a drafted man just yet. He evidently thinks comrade McKinley knows the difference in soldiers; and as the Major has the Indians with him it looks a little as if Dar Hall might be left out in the cold for awhile yet. At least he will have to pluck up courage to go over and get his job, as the Maj. intimates quite plainly that he don't intend taking it to him. If the Major can't have that job after the civil service arrangements of Grover Cleveland; and his letter to Democrats to stay away from the polls and let McKinley have the presidency, and his army record what could Dar Hall have done to give him a better right to have it? It seems to be a fight among Minnesota Congressmen as much as anything else. Ex-Congressmen sometimes know a thing or two also. Wait and see who comes out ahead. The Major seems to be in the saddle yet, and not liable to sleep at his post.

Better Times.

Times must be getting somewhat better for some people. A check for $10,947,351.65 passed through one of the New York banks this week.—Globe.

Are then checks indications of better times? Or, is it the fact that a bank was found that could handle such a big check without going into bankruptcy what makes the Globe think times are getting better for some folks.

Shot in the Leg.

Nicholas Hoffbauer and his 17 year old son, Shakopee farmers, started to St. Paul Friday morning with a load of chickens. On the way they were taken for chicken thieves and fired upon by other farmers, who have been losing their fowls. The son was badly injured in the leg with shot. After the shot had been fired the farmers who were watching for the thieves came upon the scene and apologized for shooting innocent parties, explaining that they had heard the noise of the chickens and felt sure that they had located the proper parties.

People should be a little more careful to find out who or what they are shooting at. Men's lives are more valuable than that.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 6, 1897.

The republicans are far from feeling the confidence they express of carrying Ohio this year. In fact they, feel so doubtful of the result that in addition to the whole power of the administration being used to help Boss Hanna to carry the State, nearly every republican of national prominence in the country has been asked to make speeches in Ohio during the campaign, and as they know that to decline will be to incur the ill will of the administration most of them will comply with the request. Mr. McKinley, it is said in Washington, is going to so far forget his dignity as to make speeches for Hanna, and Czar Reed has promised to take the stump for him. It is fully recognized that a defeat for Hanna will be a defeat for Mr. McKinley, which would be very humiliating in his own state during the first year of his administration.

Every honest man has a personal interest in the proceedings against John Wedderburn & Co., on the charge of fraudulent practices, now going on before the U. S. Patent Office. The Patent Office has fully proven a number of its charges of fraud against Wedderburn & Co., any one of which would furnish ample ground for their disbarment from practice before that office, and lawyers who have attended the hearings are unanimously of the opinion that the firm will be disbarred. The nature of their defense has made it clear that they are relying upon the skill and shrewdness of their lawyers, rather than upon disproving the charges of fraud against them, in their scant hope of wriggling out of their bad scrape. If they are disbarred, their paper, the National Recorder, will be shut out of the mails.

Prof. Henry W. Elliott, of the Smithsonian Institution, who claims to know as much about the sealing question as any man living, charges in the plainest and most emphatic language that the conference to be held this fall on that subject will be a fake pure and simple. He says that Ambassador Hay begged Lord Salisbury to allow the British naturalists who have for six years been studying the seals on our islands to meet our naturalists at Washington and compare biological notes, in order to hide ex-Secretary Foster's humiliating failure to get the question reopened, and that Salisbury agreed. He says further that the socalled conference will have no authority to do anything whatever towards a settlement of the question. Prof. Elliott's assertions have attracted wide attention, and if what he says is true they deserve still more. Meanwhile Prof. Elliott will probably lose his Smithsonian job.

Mr. McKinley's amendment to the civil service rules, forbidding the dismissal of persons from the classified service except for cause and upon written charges, has not prevented a number of Democrats in the Government printing office getting a rough deal. True, they were not dismissed, but some of them were furloughed for an indefinite period, and nine of the most efficient proof readers in the office—all democrats—were transferred to the case. "There are more ways of killing a dog than hanging."

When mathematics are brought to bear upon Mr. McKinley's extension of the civil service rules it doesn't seem to have been worth the glorification given it by the worshipers at the shrine of civil service Saint. He has increased the exemptions from civil service rules in the Internal Revenue Service from 65 to 219 places, and while extending the rules to 150 new places in the customs service he has exempted 348 places in the same service.

If it's anything with money in it, this administration is ready to be up and doing, even in midsummer. This week the State department presented an ultimatum to Peru, through the Peruvian Minister, requiring that the McCord claim of $50,000 shall be at once paid. A little of talk in behalf of the struggling Cubans would be well received by the country, but there is no money in it.

Officials of the state department deny that our Minister to Hawaii was instructed to establish a protectorate over Hawaii as soon as he learned that the Senate did not act upon the annexation treaty at the extra session of Congress, but admit that he may have done so under the general discretion that was given him to act in certain contingencies. One of those contingencies is known to have been any move on the part of the Japanese toward seizing the island.

THE ANDERSON BILL.

Its Constitutionality Will be Tested in the Courts at Once.

The question of the constitutionality of the Anderson tax law is about to be tesed. On Tuesday, the 3rd inst., notice was served upon County Auditor Stearns to place upon the tax list certain railroad lands which have hitherto escaped taxation. Auditor Stearns refused to so place them on the rolls and action will now be brought for an alternative writ of mandamus to show cause why said lands should not be placed upon the tax list.

If Auditor Stearns had complied with the notice the lands would have been placed on the rolls, the railroads would then have allowed them to become delinquent and at the end of two years the roads would have put in their answer, and final decision would have probably been deferred for a year longer, so that the counties interested would not have been able to collect taxes for three years from now.

The procedure taken will result in the question being brought to the attention of Judge Holland, of the district court. The case will then probably be appealed to the supreme court, which will no doubt sustain the constitutionality of the law, and taxes will be collected on the lands next year.

The action outlined above is a clever piece of strategy on the part of County Auditor Stearns and Attorney A. Y. Merrill, and it will be gratifying to Aitkin county tax payers to know that the prospects of deriving some revenue from the railroad lands in the near future is so bright. —The Aitkin Republican.

Bishop Fink, of Kansas, Down on Sunday Outings.

Kansas City, Mo., Aug. 9.—Bishop Fink of the Roman Catholic diocese of of Leavenworth and Kansas City, Kan. has had read in all the parishes of the diocese a letter forbidding the members of the Roman Catholic church from attending the Irish-American picnic to be held in Kansas City, Kan., next Sunday. The letter came as a complete surprise to those who have the arrangement for the picnic in charge, and is the one topic of conversation in Irish-American circles.

Bishop Fink gave as his reasons for placing a ban on the picnic that Sunday is a holy day, on which all Roman Catholics are obliged to do their duty toward the church and God. and that a public picnic is not a fit observance of the day. Edmond Lynch, president of the United Irish societies, states that the picnic will be held, notwithstanding Bishop Fink's letter.—Duluth Herald.

Practical Temperance.

The Total Abstainers of Catholic faith in Indiana, seem to have taken the liquor bull by the horns. At a recent gathering of the state union it was resolved that "one of the most serious obstacles to the promotion of temperance among our people is the fact that so many of our co-religionists are engaged in the unbecoming, soul-destroying and man-degrading business of selling intoxicating liquors." Special stress was laid upon the "conspicuous tendency of our Catholic citizens, especially in the large cities, to make the liquor dealers their political and social leaders." Catholic pastors were asked to lend their powerful aid in diverting the drink traffickers into "a more becoming way of making a living," and, in order to make the saloon-keeping business odious, the exclusion of liquor dealers from Catholic societies was recommended. Hearty approval was given the Indiana laws intended to restrict the liquor traffic, and the very practical suggestion was made of an appeal to the law for the removal of the saloon from the vicinity of the church doors.—Duluth News Tribune.

Murdered by Tramps.

A gang of tramps attempted to hold up John Nelson and Chris. Johnson at Madison on Thursday of last week. Nelson showed fight and a struggle ensued. When the tramps saw they were getting the worst of it one of them drew a revolver and opened fire on Nelson. During the struggle, Johnson got away and gave alarm, but by the time the citizens arrived on the scene of the fight, Nelson was dead, having fallen with two bullets in the head and three in the body. The perpetrators of this horrible crime are safely lodged in the county jail awaiting their just deserts.

The murdered man was a stranger in Madison, having been there only a few days.

Before going out to their devilish work, these tramps had been carousing over a keg of beer in a box car.—Minnesota Mascot.

ROCKFORD RUMBLINGS.

The water continues to pour over the dam in unusually large quantities. Its music can be heard for quite a distance.

Neighboring farmers are busy harvesting and few people are seen about the village, occasionally one comes in for oil or machine repairs.

Ed Darrow is building a fine residence. Dan Thompson is boss carpenter and has a crew at work.

We understand that Jeff Benner thinks the Dingley bill will bring prosperity at once; in fact already has.

Johnson Brothers are doing business at the old stand. Chet is not keeping things quite so prim about the store when he began. Mrs. Benner accuses him of living near Benner too long.

Florida's are entertaining company relatives from Chicago

A new drug store occupies a part of the Benner Block.

Mrs. Thompson had a tooth pulled by a dentist on Tuesday. The hemorrhage was so protracted that she went to Delano Wednesday to receive surgical treatment for it.

The new bridge across the Crow at Rockford station has not yet materialized. It would be a great convenience to those having hauling in that direction.

County Seat News.

On a visit to the County Seat, Tuesday, we found that beautiful little village moving on with the rest of the world. Several improvements, both public and private, are being made. Buffalo is getting to be quite a summer resort, and place of amusement as well as the capitol of the county. The lake, and the Court House with its fine natural grove, are among the chief attractions. The streets are being improved. An immense amount of work is being put in on a huge stone wall and culvert for the little creek that winds its way down east of the Court House. The culvert is near the North East corner of the Court House grounds, and will make that street up to grade and a handsome thoroughfare.

Dudley's park is being fixed up in good shape; tiling is being put in to furnish drainage so that every little shower may not make a mud hole of the park.

Mr. Sturges is getting a new porch to his store; quite a protection from the noonday sun.

Drs. Cady and Shannon both report business fair. The first says surgery is booming, while the latter has placed in his office a fine Harvard operating chair, and is now nicely equipped for business.

Lawyers seemed to be a trifle scarce and not overrun with business just at present. Mr. Cutting is having his office overhauled and fixed up according to prosperity plans. J. H. Wendell talks seriously of taking a trip to Klondyke. He thinks his chances for getting rich as good as any of the boys. A. Y. Eaton is booming the Journal in good shape and probably has a weather eye out for the office of District Judge at the next elect. Pidgeon was in town. Neither Woolley nor Alley appeared to view but we understand the latter would be willing to accept the Post Office in order to keep harmony in the G. O. P. Campbell Dodd would take the office himself if he could; but, failing of course would be satisfied to have John Nugent continue for another four years while he keeps his present place. Lamson, they say, wants the Post Office so he can run a party newspaper at Buffalo, but being a man of resources and seeing nothing sure, has been attending summer school, probably posting up for County Superintendent of schools on the the next ticket.

Swanberg and Reinmuth were figuring away in the Auditors Office. The Auditor don't seem to have any time for the editor of the Wright County Times.

Haneford and Junken were doing business after the old style in the Treasurers office. Mr. Heath and Miss Jacobs seemed to be doing most of the business in the Register of Deeds office; Mr. Nagle was around though. Charley Vorse and Billy Cochrane and Brewster were about the building; so was Deputy Sheriff Anderson, down cellar entertaining Mr. Gardner, who was in jail on suspicion of connection with the Boxell murder near Howard Lake.

Rev. Fletcher, lately returned from his old home in England, just got his life insured and is starting in on a lecture tour. He is said to be a fine talker and will doubtless interest his hearers on "Ten Thousand Miles on Land and Sea," at Buffalo, Wednesday evening, Aug. 18.

The hotel business flourishes in Buffalo. The Park House is a fine hotel with modern improvement. The American House, John Shatter proprietor, gets its share of the traveling public. Mr. S. has moved his barn across the street and is going to enlarge it and be ready to accommodate all comers this winter with the best of care for their animals. The Buffalo House is also running full blast.

Jim Ryder is enlarging his business gradually. Joseph Van Eman gets down town in time to get the morning papers as usual. There is lots more going on but we could not get it all at once.

The Coming State Fair.

The dates for the Minnesota State Fair this year have been fixed from Sept. 6th to 11th, both inclusive. The grounds and buildings at Hamline, midway between St. Paul and Minneapolis, are being put in first class shape, and the way the entries are coming indicate the most successful fair in the history of the association. The premiums are larger and attractions greater than ever before. The railroads deliver stock and all exhibits at the gates of the grounds and return free. All the railroads will make one fare for the round trip. It will be a week of rare profit and amusement.

Litchfield Review:—The death of ex-alderman J. H. Bradish in Minneapolis this week, shows how whiskey will ruin a brilliant mind and bring a man to a sad and untimely death. Mr. Bradish was one of Minnneapolis brightest and brainiest attorneys, but his appetite for strong drink got the better of him. He took the Keeley cure but after a few months was taken ill while in the west and the attending physician prescribed whiskey, which he claimed brought back not only his former, but a stronger appetite for liquor. He was given responsible positions with two or three railroads, but could not hold them. He went from bad to worse, and this week he was arrested and locked up for being drunk. While in his cell, he suicided by hanging himself with a rope, made of his clothing.

EXTRACT FROM LeGALLIENNE'S RENDERING OF OMAR KHAYYAM'S RUBAIYAT.

'Tis a great fuss, all this of Thee and Me;
Important folk are we—to Thee and Me;
Yet, What if we mean nothing after all?
And what if Heaven cares naught for—Thee and Me?

All those who in their graves unheeded lie
Were just as pompous once as you or I;
Complacent spake their little arrogant names,
And wagged their heads, and never thought to die.

A beauty sleeps beneath yon quiet grass
Who dreamed her face the world might not surpass;
Strength is her neighbor, but he boasts no more—
And over them the wind cries out "Alas!"

Would you seek beauty, seek it underground;
Would you find strength—the strong are underground;
And would you next year seek my love and me,
Who knows but you must seek us—underground.

* * * * *

O Saki! when at last is run my race,
Will you remember my accustomed place,
When through the garden, all the summer night,
The moon goes seeking my forgotten face?

St. Cloud Times:—Said a St. Cloud lady yesterday. "I do not know much about the new tariff law, but I do know I received two pounds of sugar for $1.00 less than I did a month ago.

Wright County Times:—We wish the state editors a good time on their annual excursion this year, as we are sure they will have. We wish we could go along too, but can't spare the money this year.

Broad Axe:—Almost the moment after the Dingley bill was signed by the president, sugar and other articles controlled by the trusts were advanced in price. This is what the republicans call prosperity.

Duluth Herald:—It is shown by the annual report of one of the largest mining companies in Colorado that since the organization of the company the average cost of producing $1 in gold has been 37 cents.

Sherburne County Star News:—With the price of wheat steadily climbing up to the dollar mark, a good farm that produces it is much better property than a doubtful gold claim up in the frozen regions of Alaska.

World:—Thirty-five years after the passage of its first war tariff bill the Republican party has passsd another with an average rate of taxation nearly 60 per cent. higher. This is the central fact of the situation, and Mr. Dingley is not touching it in his explanations.

St. Cloud Times:—Even the most obtuse gold bugs ought to know that compelling a man to resign the presidency of a college because he believes in free coinage is not a good way to make gold converts. It isn't a free country where one is compelled to accept ready-made opinions as his own.

HOW A PUZZLL WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, 7 authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

There were 10,652 murders in this country in 1896 and only 122 legal executions. One murderer in 87 paid the legal penalty of his crime.

Mississippi must be growing, for on no other basis can be explained the opening of 83 new post offices in that state last year, the record exceeding that of any other state.

Senora de Cousino, of Brazil, may be the "richest woman in the world," but it's a mighty poor sort of a man who hasn't a personal acquaintance with the "dearest woman in the world."

Dr. C. A. Stephens, of Norway Lake, Me., who believes that death is only a habit, which will eventually be overcome, is a writer of stories for boys, and naturally wants mankind to remain forever young.

The story is told of a southern railroad whose fast train was stopped for a time by a colored lady who had her washing hung across the right of way. This is not the first train that has been delayed by a wash out.

The government experimenter with big kites says: "It is as safe to go up on a kite as a balloon if the wind is steady and has velocity enough." This is not quite as assuring a statement as conservative passengers would like.

They do some things differently in China. The princess dowager of the Flowery Kingdom has sent a prince to a dungeon for life for failing to come around to congratulate her on her birthday. In this country the mortal offense is to remember a lady's birthdays.

A madstone is advertised for sale in a recent issue of a scientific paper. The advertiser offers to prove its efficacy to any prospective purchaser. Whether the advertiser or the purchaser is to undergo a bite from a mad dog in order to prove the merits of the stone is not stated.

A new variety of potato has developed by Robert Cornwell, a farmer living in the eastern part of Barton county, Mo. The tubers develop without a growth of "tops," thereby giving no substance to the greatest pest of potato growers, the Colorado potato beetle. If this is authentic, the ordinary ball bearing potato will go out of use.

A bacteriologist in New York emits a loud outcry because he has lately found 11 separate colonies of disease germs on a single leaf of a public school book. The germs keep out of the algebra, it is said, because they get caught under the radical signs and cannot escape until somebody comes along and extracts their square roots.

That was a great demonstration of the Christian Endeavor hosts in San Francisco, when a wide avenue was used for four blocks of its extent for a chain of open air meetings that crowded every foot of the pavement. That answered the prophetic words: "And a highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called the way of holiness."

C. F. Jones, a resident of El Paso, Tex., who rejoices in the pseudonym of "Give-a-dam" Jones, was acquitted of a charge of celebrating the Fourth with firecrackers. The interesting feature of this information is the revelation to the public that El Paso is one of the few places in the country where firecrackers are not allowed on Independence day.

The death of Mrs. Alexander Campbell, at Bethany, W. Va., recently, at the age of 85 years, will remind the public of the remarkable growth of the church founded by her husband. She saw the very beginning of a sect which now numbers 1,000,000 communicants, which once turned the scale in a presidential election, and which is rapidly adding to its membership in many states in the union.

Agitation against lynching has begun again in the southern states. There have been 81 cases of lynching reported since January 1, 1897, and of these 78 have taken place in the south, as follows: Georgia, 7; South Carolina, 5; Mississippi, 9; Louisiana, 7; Florida, 5; Texas, 15; Alabama, 11; Kentucky, 3; Tennessee, 7; Virginia, 1; Arizona, 1; Arkansas, 3; Missouri, 3, and Maryland, 1. There have been but three lynchings in the north during this period, one each in California, Ohio and Nevada.

The proposed memorial to Maj. Robert Anderson, of Fort Sumter fame, is to take the form of a sanitarium bearing his name, to be built at Castle Pinckney, in Charleston harbor, for the use of disabled veterans of the United States army and navy. Of course the United States government is expected to do the job, and a bill is pending in congress authorizing the project. The notable feature of the movement is the unanimity of support which it is receiving in South Carolina. In fact, the movement originated in South Carolina, and is warmly indorsed by the state officers and many others.

As the cry in 1857-59 was "Pike's peak or bust," so now the argonauts are yelling: "Ho, for the Yukon!" The rush of the enthusiasts continues, and the vessels at the Pacific coast points are not able to accommodate the crowds desiring to take passage. Some men even propose to make part of the journey to Sitka on foot. It is not likely that they will actually try this journey. A St. Louis man proposes to go in a balloon, and he is not less wise than many who are starting for the gold fields by other means. Hundreds who are going to the Klondyke region are totally unfitted for life under the circumstances.

The British government declines to interfere with the life sentence of Mrs. Maybrick, who will now spend her life in a British jail, convicted of poisoning her husband on what seems to be the flimsiest evidence which could be found—that of a nurse, who found a bottle with some arsenic in it in Mr. Maybrick's room, although it was proven that Maybrick had been an arsenic eater for years. That accounted for the arsenical crystals found during the autopsy. The fact that Mrs. Maybrick is an American woman has made the case of deep interest to Americans. Untiring efforts have been made to save her.

ASSASSINATED.

Spanish Premier the Victim of an Anarchist Bullet.

Canovas del Castillo Dies Crying "Long Live Spain"—Murdered in Cold Blood—Brief Sketch of Career.

Madrid, Aug. 9.—Senor Canovas del Castillo, prime minister of Spain, was assassinated Sunday at Santa Agueda, by an anarchist. The murderer fired three shots, two of which struck the premier in the forehead and another in the chest. The wounded man fell dying at the feet of his wife, who was with him, lingering in agony for two hours, and then passed away at three o'clock Sunday afternoon with the cry of "Long live Spain," which were the last words upon his lips.

A Cold-Blooded Murder.

Madrid, Aug. 10.—The assassination of the prime minister of Spain, Senor Canovas del Castillo, who was shot and killed by the Italian anarchist, whose name is believed to be Michele Angine Golli, at the baths at Santa Agueda, Sunday afternoon, was undoubtedly cold-bloodedly premeditated. Golli deliberately watched for an opportunity to kill the Spanish statesman, and he only fired when he had no chance of missing. In fact, the assassin, who was arrested almost immediately, has declared as much to the examining magistrate.

The assassin confessed that his real name was Michele Angine Golli, that he was 26 years of age, a native of Boggia, near Naples, and that he left Italy and came to Spain in 1896. After reaching Spain, Golli, according to his confession, resided at Barcelona and participated in the doings of the various anarchist societies of that place and vicinity. After sojourning in Barcelona for some time, Golli visited France and Belgium, and returned to Spain in July last.

After his return the anarchist seemed to have completed the plans for the assassination of the prime minister. He left Madrid for Santa Agueda at the same time as Senor Canovas del Castillo and awaited an opportunity to assassinate the statesman.

DON MARCOLA DE AZCARRAGA, PREMIER AD INTERIM.

Appearance of the Assassin.

In appearnce Golli is of medium height, wears a full beard and spectacles, and his demeanor is that of a quiet, law-abiding citizen. He says he is satisfied with having done "his duty," and asserts that he had no personal grudge against the premier, and was merely obeying orders received from his superiors in the secret society to which he belongs. He frankly professes anarchistic doctrines, says he was sentenced in 1895 to 18 months' imprisonment in the jail at Lucere, Italy, and claims that he escaped from there to Marseilles, from which post he made his way to Barcelona.

Sketch of His Career.

Senor Antonio Canovas del Castillo was born of humble parents at Malaga February 8, 1828. In 1851 he was chief editor of the Patria, in which he defended conservative ideas. About this time he published a volume of lyric poems and a series of historical papers. In 1865 he held the portfolios of finance and the colonies in the O'Donnell cabinet, and it devolved upon him to draw up the law for the abolition of the slave trade.

Shortly before the revolution in 1868 Canovas was banished from court, but upon the successful termination of that revolution he returned and in the full constituent assembly hoisted the standard of legitimate and constitutional monarchy. On the proclamation of Alfonso XII. as king on December 31, 1874, Canovas became president of the council and chief of the new cabinet. In 1876 he was called upon to deal with the first insurrection in Cuba. With the exception of an interval of a few months he continued to hold the premiership down to 1879, when, on the return of Marshal Martinez Campos from Cuba, he retired from the premiership, and was succeeded by Campos. From this time on he held the premiership for longer or shorter terms with the varying strength of the opposition.

Canovas came last into power on February 7, 1895. A number of officers had broken into and pillaged the offices of various newspapers which had made insinuations against the conduct of officers engaged in suppressing the Cuban revolt. The war minister seemed to support the officers, whereas the premier, Senor Sagasta, ordered the journalists to be protected. This led to the retirement of the ministry. Marshal Campos was temporarily made captain-general of Madrid, and the greatest excitement prevailed. Finally Senor Canovas formed a ministry, although he lacked the support of a section of the conservative party.

The government was defeated on a vote of censure on June 3, 1895, but did not resign. The general elections of April, 1896, returned an overwhelming majority to the cortes in favor of the policy of the Canovas cabinet.

Senor Canovas was the author of numerous works in moral and political science, and of a "History of the House of Austria," which is in high repute, and a "History of the Decline of Spain from the Accession of Philip III. to the Death of Charles II.," which ranks favorably among works of its class from Spanish writers.

Made a New Record.

Omaha, Neb., Aug. 6.—The Union Pacific officials are pluming themselves on a new long distance record. Engineer Thomas Grogan, with engine 890, pulled a special from Evanston, Wyo., to Omaha, 955 miles, in 24 hours, including all stops. This is claimed as the record long run for a single engine. The final spurt of the run was a remarkable burst of speed, the distance from North Platte to Omaha, 291 miles, being covered in 279 minutes, at the rate of 63.49 miles per hour. The engine was built at the Omaha shops.

Scientists Meet.

Detroit, Mich., Aug. 10.—The auditorium of the immense new Central high school building was Monday a scene of beauty, the decorations being in honor of the forty-sixth annual meeting of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. Addresses of welcome by Mayor Maybury and ex-Senator Palmer were replied to by Prof. McGee. After adjournment of the general session, the various sections were organized, and each section, nine in number, was addressed by its chairman.

NATIONAL BANKS.

Their Growth and Prosperity Shown by Recent Reports.

Washington, Aug. 6.—The abstract of reports of condition of national banks on May 14 is accompanied by a diagram prepared jointly by the comptroller of the currency and the chief of the bureau of statistics. The diagram displays graphically the growth and changes in the principal items of resources of national banks from 1864 to 1896 inclusive. In October, 1864, the capital of the 508 banks amounted to $86,890,000; a year later the number of banks had increased to 1,513 and the capital to $393,000,000. The capital gradually increased to $504,800,000 on October 1, 1875, the highest point reached until 1883, when it amounted to $509,700,000. The increase thereafter was gradual until 1892, when the highest point was reached, namely, $686,000,000. In the fall of 1896 the amount had declined to $648,500,000.

Loans and discounts reached their maximum between 1864 and 1880; in 1875 the amount was $984,700,000. In 1880 that amount was exceeded by $56,500,000; with an exception from that date to 1892 there was a rapid increase, and the highest point ever reached was in October, 1892, namely, $2,171,000,000. In 1893 there was a drop to $1,843,600,000, but a recover in 1895 to $2,059,400,000. In the fall of 1896 there was a decline to $1,893,300,000.

The deposits have fluctuated to about the same extent as loans and discounts. The maximum being reached in 1892 when they amounted to $1,779,300,000. In the following year deposits declined to $1,465,400,000 and reacted the following year to $1,742,100,000. The circulation outstanding in 1866 reached $290,000,000 and the highest point was reached in 1873, the amount being $341,000,000. The minimum amount outstanding is shown to have been $122,900,000 in October, 1890. At the close of the report of the year 1896 the amount had risen to $209,900,000.

The average per capita of banking funds of all national banks in the United States in 1896 is shown to be $37.14, varying from a minimum of $2.72 in Arkansas to a maximum of $120.59 in Massachusetts. The diagram shows the average in each state. The diagram also shows by states and geographical divisions the capital, deposits and loans of all national banks and in addition an illustration of the changes in the various classes of paper money in circulation from 1864 to 1896. The chart is being sent to all national banks and leading newspapers.

IN OUR FAVOR.

Balance of Trade Gratifying to Uncle Sam.

Washington, Aug. 10.—The revised statistics of imports and exports for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1897, show a large increase in the exports over the previous year and a large increase in the balance of trade in favor of this country, notwithstanding the heavy importations in anticipation of the enactment of the Dingley law. The exports for the year amounted to the enormous sum of $1,030,300, against $863,200,487 for the year ended June 30, 1896. The imports amounted to $754,717,609, against $779,724,674 for 1896, and the balance of trade in favor of the United States was $275,283,691, against $85,476,213 for 1896.

It is expected that the figures for the present year will show a balance for the United States even greater than the last year, for the reason that the heavy importations made before the Dingley law went into effect will tend to reduce imports for some months to come, and at the same time exports of farm products promise to be larger and at higher prices than last year.

The heaviest anticipatory importations were of wool and of sugar—the imports of sugar being 1,010,894,798 pounds more than for 1896. This represents very nearly the amount of sugar on which the refiners will make an added profit equal to the increase of duty in the Dingley law over that in the Wilson law. The sugar imports from Germany alone last year amounted to over 1,500,000,000 pounds.

An official of the treasury department, referring to these figures, said that on account of the duty imposed by the Dingley law the sugar refiners had additional protection to the amount of $2,500,000 on each 1,000,000,000 pounds of sugar imported from Germany. He declared that Germany ought not to object to the new law, because she is now the great beet-producing country in the world, and the United States has to take her sugar.

VICTORIA'S ADDRESS.

Parliament Prorogued in a Brief Speech from the Throne.

London, Aug. 7. — Parliament was prorogued Friday afternoon by a speech from the throne, in which Queen Victoria briefly reviewed the relations of Great Britain with other nations. No reference was made to the failure of the United States senate to adopt the Anglo-American arbitration treaty, nor was the Behring sea sealing controversy touched upon in any shape. Regret was expressed that King George of Greece hastened into disastrous war with Turkey, against the earnest advice of the powers, but the signing of the peace treaty, with only slight modifications of the frontier and an adequate indemnity, was predicted in the near future. Grateful thanks were extended to the colonies and to India for the manner in which their loyalty was evinced by their accredited representatives to the jubilee ceremonies, and special stress was laid upon the fiscal legislation of Canada as an additional proof of attachment to the mother country.

Knocked Out.

Chicago, Aug. 9.—Judge Tuley, in a sweeping decision, Saturday morning granted the injunction asked by ex-Judge L. C. Collins, restraining the city from collecting the taxes on bicycles and other wheeled vehicles used for pleasure, thereby declaring that celebrated ordinance as passed by the city council illegal. Judge Tuley held that the city had no right to license bicycles, that it could only license an occupation and could not impose a license upon specific property when it was not used in business or in an occupation.

Deadly Heat at Dallas.

Dallas, Tex., Aug. 6.—At two o'clock Thursday afternoon the government thermometer recorded the extraordinary temperature of 108, surpassing all previous heat records. Business was paralyzed and men and horses gasped for breath. The heat is the most terrible ever felt in Texas.

HUNGRY STRIKERS.

Urgent Demands Made for Food—Anthracite Miners May Strike.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 10.—Appeals for food and provisions were numerous at the headquarters of the miners' officials in this city Monday. It appears as if there was a wail from every section of the district, and miners in person were present to ask that the suffering ones be looked after. Secretary Warner was kept busy answering the appeals. He said Monday night that he had sent more than $1,000 worth of groceries and provisions into various parts of the district. The appeals are now coming in from the families, the heads of which are at the various mining camps using their influence to keep other men from working. At the mines where company stores have been in operation the destitution is more marked. In most instances the stores were closed up shortly after the strike began, and the miners have no place now where their credit is good. The male members of the miners' families are living better in the camps than the women and smaller children are at home.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 10. — All the miners of the New York and Cleveland Gas Coal company who are still at work were paid Monday, but those who struck did not receive any money, the company insisting upon the terms of the contract by which the men agreed to forfeit all money due them in case they refuse to work.

A series of meetings is to be held all over the district. It is expected to keep up the interest in every section and strengthen every point where there is the least indication of weakness. The vigils on the mines of the New York and Cleveland Gas Coal company are to be kept up and the vigor increased from day to day.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 10. — On the success or failure of the bituminous coal miners' strike depends the inception of a movement by the anthracite miners for higher wages and better conditions. District President Patrick Dolan and the other officials of the United Mine Workers' organization have received several letters within the past few days from different parts of the Pennsylvania anthracite coal region asking for information on the outlook for the big strike and wanting to know what assurances of victory they have. If the bituminous miners win, the anthracite diggers think they would have an equal chance of securing an advance in wages. If the present strike is lost the attempt for an advance will not be made in the anthracite region.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 7. — Friday evening Squire Stemmens rendered his decision in the riot and unlawful assemblage cases against President Dolan and others. He holds Dolan, Jacob Aufhelter, Paul Trimmer and Edward McKay in $300 bail each for the September term of court. Bail was entered for all. The cases against Cameron Miller, William Warner and Edward Shaw were dismissed.

Eugene V. Debs, who addressed the large miners' meeting on the Duquesne wharf at night, left Friday for Turtle Creek, where he spoke in the evening. Before leaving the city Mr. Debs denounced Judge Jackson, of West Virginia, for issuing the injunction restraining him from interfering in any way with the Monongah company or its employes. Mr. Debs said:

"This injunction restrains me from walking on any of the public highways leading to the mines of the Monongah Coal & Coke company. It is most sweeping and none other can be compared to it. The injunction annihilates the right of peaceable assemblage and effectually suppresses free speech. If it is sustained, and I have no doubt it will be, it sweeps away all constitutional safeguards and delivers us, bound hand and foot, to the corporate capital.

"I hold the injunction, and the judge who issued it, in supreme contempt. If I have occasion to raise my voice in behalf of the famishing miners in Jackson's jurisdiction, I propose to do so, or at least make the attempt, totally regardless of this infamous injunction.

"The farce of the proceeding is that the injunction is issued by a judge. It ought to come direct from the coal operators, and, at least, hypocrisy would not intensify the infamy of the proceeding."

The coal company discovered a new sort of missionary work among its employes Friday. Wives of many of the campers are now in the field. They have been arriving for several days, until there are about 20 of them scattered about through the Plum, Sandy and Turtle Creeks settlements. The women are from the McDonald, Carnegie and Wheeling division sections and while the men are at work do missionary work among their wives. They have access to the workmen's houses, but the men are denied this. Deputies are stationed all along the property line with instructions not to allow a man to pass into the house range.

Definite orders have been issued from Harrisburg to local officers of the national guard of Pennsylvania to hold themselves in readiness for immediate service. This order, which arrived several days ago, is being complied with to the letter and the day and night address of each officer, together with the number of the nearest telephone, has been forwarded to headquarters. However, these officers have expressed it as their opinion that the miners have behaved themselves most orderly and that the guard is not at all necessary as yet.

Pension List Grows.

Washington, Aug. 9.—The pension roll of the United States has almost reached the million mark. Commissioner Evans has just issued a statement showing that at the beginning of the fiscal year the pensioners numbered just 983,528, an increase of 12,850 for the last year. During that year 50,101 new pensions were granted and 3,971 persons were restored to the rolls. Old age and disease, however, are working great inroads into the lists, for there were 31,960 deaths during the year. Other sources of loss were 1,074, from remarriages of widows; 1,845 orphans attained majority, 2,683 failures to claim pensions, and 3,650 losses from other causes.

Price of Silver Drops.

London, Aug. 6.—Bar silver made a violent and sensational break Thursday, falling one-half penny to 25¾ pence per ounce. This is by far the lowest price ever touched, and is the most rapid decline ever recorded on the London market since the last week of June, 1893, when the Indian government decided to close the Indian mints to free silver coinage, and when holders of bullion accordingly threw their silver on the market without regard to price. On the news silver bullion fell in London 37½ pence per ounce to a price below 30, but it rallied sharply later.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Experimental Work.

A great number of important experiments in grass cultivation are being conducted on the state experimental farm at Island Lake. These investigations are for the purpose of finding out the various grasses best suited for the climate and soil of southwestern Minnesota. Supt. O. C. Gregg says: "Many men have considered that it was impossible to grow clover successfully in Lyon county. We have found that it can be grown with great success if given proper care and cultivation. The Asike is the clover for low lands. It will thrive on ground that is good for red top. It is not suitable for high lands. The Mammoth clover is a heavier grower and bids fair to surpass the red clover in Minnesota. Red clover is biennial. It drops seed the second year of its growth. If left on the ground and not carried away, it will reseed itself. We have land there that has reseeded itself for 10 years. For sowing on uplands I advise farmers to use the Mammoth and red clover. Asike and timothy are the finest forage grasses."

Cleared Up.

Everything in connection with the O'Connell murder mystery, near Redwood Falls, now appears to be cleared up, with the exception of O'Connell's clothing having been saturated with oil, and fire set to the building after O'Connell was murdered. Mrs. O'Connell says her mind is a complete blank on everything that happened after she killed her husband in self-defense. The children are unable to give information on the subject, and unless Mrs. O'Connell's mind clears up, it is probable that it will always remain a mystery. From all the evidence so far there is nothing that will convict Mrs. O'Connell, although there are a dozen different points remaining for investigation. Preliminary examination has been waived by Mrs. O'Connell and her 17-year old son, James, and they are in the county jail, waiting the action of the November grand jury.

A Growing Population.

The warden's report to the board of prison managers, made at a regular meeting, shows a prison population of 538, a larger number than has been in the institution for years. Of these 10 are women, which breaks the record for number of female convicts. Two of the 10 will soon become mothers and will probably be paroled before that time and sent back to Minneapolis, where they live. Their husbands are in prison also and will be released with them, all the terms being short ones. The board of managers has decided to purchase additional binder twine machinery, increasing the daily output 500 pounds and bringing it up to a total of 25,000 pounds. Twine from the prison has been in demand this year and the entire supply, 3,500,000 pounds, was sold, bringing $202,600.

Can Return.

County Attorney Peterson of Hennepin county, has given it as his opinion that Louis F. Menage, he of malodorous memory, can return to his native heath without endangering his liberty. To convict Menage of crookedness it would be necessary to introduce the same evidence that was utilized in the former Guaranty Loan cases. This would be impracticable, as much of the strength of the previous cases lay in certain notes and papers, which have become scattered since then, many of them having been returned to their owners.

Not Satisfied.

The express companies doing business in this state will not submit to the state warehouse commission an annual report of their business before Sept. 1, this year, as provided by law, nor will they pay willingly the $500 a day penalty for failure to do so, also provided by law. This conclusion was arrived at during a harmonious meeting, in which the blank form of report which the commissioners had prepared and hoped the express companies would adopt was considered.

Doctored Pine.

Since the government concluded to adopt the Odanah plan as to its Indian pine on the reservations, allowing the Indians to cut the dead and burned pine, it is said that a great portion of the pine on the White Earth, Leech Lake and Red Lake reservations has been "doctored," fire having been placed at the base of the trees, charring the bark sufficiently to bring them within the scope of the term "burned."

News in Brief.

Two members of a gang of robbers that have been infesting the counties of Stearns, Wright and Meeker were captured at Watkins.

It has been discovered that a stream within a few miles of Osakis, contains many speckled trout. They were planted there many years ago. Over 400 have been caught within the past week.

Over 200 colonies of bees have been sent to Mille Lac county from Howard Lake in the past week.

A man dropped dead on the street at Elk River. Papers on the body show the name of the deceased to be Burt Douglass.

Brown county fair will be held at New Ulm on the 26th, 27th and 28th of August. Between $3,000 and $4,000 have been offered in purses, premiums and specials, and a fine program is announced for every day.

THE CASE OF SPOT.

Old Spot! before your master's load
Your custom is to keep the road,
And never deviate a jot,
Though squirrels bark. "We're out to-day
On business—see? We're drawing hay;
Off, please! It's not the time for play,"
You seem to say.
Old Spot!

And when your master leaves his pair
Of lumbering horses in your care,
The weather may be cold or hot,
But at their noses down you lie;
And let the wildest urchin try
To move you, "What!" your looks reply,
"Desert? Not I!"
Old Spot!

No beauty—no; that sober phiz,
Your master says, is much like his.
He owns you suit him to a dot;
Not one to make the ladies rave,
But a true watchdog, trusty, brave;
And many a feathered life you save
From foxy grave,
Old Spot!

Your master? Aye, well pleased, I scan
That kindly, just, laborious man,
Nursed in a strict, a toilsome lot.
Oft, as I watch you romp and run,
Wild with delight when work is done,
I wonder where he finds his fun,
The unwearied one—
Old Spot!

More Than One Miss Jones.

MR. HENRY ADAIR GOODMAN, well-known club man and owner of one of the finest homes in the suburbs, was glancing over the Social Chronicle and finishing his coffee between paragraphs.

"By Jove, listen to this, Lucy," he said to his sister. "Howard Carpenter has succumbed at last. The engagement of Howard Giles Carpenter and Miss Jones, of Wellington place, is announced, the wedding to take place in the autumn.' Next to seeing my own announcement, nothing could surprise me more."

Lucy Goodman remembered her brother's one love story and its sad ending. For years no one had spoken of it to Henry Goodman. It had estranged him from his father until the latter was on his deathbed. Ten years' time heals many wounds, however, so this morning Lucy ventured to say: "Her name is Jones. I wonder if she is anyone we know?"

"I guess not. I don't know anyone out that way." If Henry Goodman thought of the girl by that name that he knew long ago he made no sign.

On reaching his place of business he found his secretary outside his private office.

"There's a gentleman inside wants to see you. He's been here nearly an hour. Seems very much excited."

"What's the trouble, Howard? You seem excited," Mr. Goodman said, when the door was closed. "I have been reading the papers and I see you are to be congratulated."

Howard Carpenter's hand was limp in his friend's clasp. "That's the deuce of it, Henry. I'm in an awful mess. I have come over to you to tell me what I would better do. Henry, I'm engaged to one woman and I love another."

"I am not surprised, Howard. You never did know anything about affairs of the heart. Now, tell me about it."

"I'll begin at the beginning. The doctor told me to ride a wheel and get up for early morning rides. Well, I tried it and must say it was great. One morning I was spinning along out the boulevard when some one close behind me bumped into my rear wheel and I was sprawling on the grass beyond the curb, and a very lovely young woman was sitting in the roadway beside the wreck of her wheel. By Jove, Howard, do you know how a pretty girl looks when she is making up her mind to cry? I sat up and said: 'It was sudden, wasn't it?' At that she laughed. 'I hope you are not hurt,' she said. 'It was so stupid of me. As soon as I saw you my wheel went right toward you.'

"'It won't do it again," said I, looking at the wreck.

"We took the wheel to a repair shop and when she gave her name and address to the wheel mender I made a mental note of it. After that we met several times on the road and wheeled together. Then she invited me to call and I went around and met the aunt. She is only about ten years older than Lillian—Miss Jones—and is a handsome woman. I look ten years older than the aunt.

"After the ice was broken I was a regular caller at the house. I felt perfectly at ease and all that, but, by Jove, Henry, when I thought of proposing to Lillian my heart beat so fast I couldn't speak. At last I wrote a letter and told her I had loved her from the first day, that I knew she was much younger than myself, but—well, you know how a person will write when he's in love.

"When I went to call that afternoon the aunt was in the parlor and Lillian was out.

"'I did not tell Lillian you were to call,' she said, 'because I wished to talk with you about your letter.

"'I did not suppose your visits to us bore any particular significance, and if I had thought of it I would have supposed you were interested in Lillian rather than myself.' A sort of a cold, clammy feeling crept over me. 'You asked me if I think I can love you.' Now I leave it to you if that wasn't a poser. Imagine sitting opposite a woman and having her spring a thing like that under the circumstances. All at once I realized that I had addressed my letter to Miss Jones, and the aunt, being Miss Jones, had read it and believed I was in love with herself.

"'I will not say that I care for you other than as a very warm friend. Of course, I appreciate that this is a very peculiar answer to give to a man who writes as you do. I am dazed; I hardly know what to say.'

"'Oh,' I gasped, 'don't say any more.'

"'Yes,' said she, 'I wish to tell you that I put off all thought of marriage when I was a very young girl. I met and loved a college boy. It was not the sort of affection that so often springs up between young people. We loved each other sincerely, but his father was wealthy and mine was poor. His father gave mine money to leave the country and take me with him. We went to live in a secluded place, where my father enjoyed freedom from work, which he hated. He put me into a convent. Whenever I had an opportunity I wrote to my lover, but no letters ever came from him. When I was 21 my father died. I supported myself by teaching and after awhile I made money enough to return to this country. My lover's father had died and he had come into a fortune. Rumor said that he was married. I gave up hope then.'

"Her story awakened my sympathy. Her eyes were filled with tears. I see you are interested, too. In my confusion I said I hoped she would forget this early affair. Then she said: 'Mr. Carpenter, I do not love you, but I honor and respect you, and if in time I can grow to care more for you I will be your wife.'

"Just here Lillian came in. 'I have no secrets from Lillian,' her aunt said. 'May I tell her?' I felt myself coloring to the roots of my hair, but I stammered out something and she said: 'Lillian, Mr. Carpenter has done me the honor to ask me to be his wife.'

"The girl flushed at first and then her face grew white. She kissed her aunt and, by Jove, Henry, it was all over. You know I'm not a cad, but I honestly believe the girl cares for me."

"Well, you have mixed things up pretty badly for an old man, Howard. What did you say the aunt's name was?"

"Miss Emily Jones."

"And the number of the house?"

"Eighty-four Wellington."

"I don't know that I can do anything for you at all, Howard, but I will try."

"I hope I haven't tired you with all this, old man; you look fagged."

"I am not feeling over well this morning. Come in and see me in the morning."

No. 84 Wellington place, the temporary home of Miss Emily Jones and her niece, was a long drive from the office of Mr. Henry Adair Goodman, and during the drive the occupant of the coupe had many things to think of.

"Yes, Miss Jones is in," said the maid. "She will be down in a minute."

The door opened and the face of the girl he had not seen for ten years was again before Henry Goodman. She knew him at once as he reached out his hands to her.

"Emily, you have not forgotten me?"

Then they sat down and talked over the past. The woman had forgotten for the time being that there was in the world such a man as Howard Carpenter.

"EMILY, YOU HAVE NOT FORGOTTEN ME?"

"I have a confession to make, Henry," she said. "You have been constant to me all these years, and so have I to you, but, oh, I don't know how I am to tell you."

"You needn't tell me. I know all about it. I know something, too, that you don't know. Why did you think when Howard Carpenter proposed that you were the only Miss Jones at 84 Wellington place? I hear you have a very charming niece."

"What do you mean?"

"I mean that Howard wrote to Lillian Jones and that Emily Jones opened the letter."

"Lillian! Why, Lillian is only a child!"

"A very lovely child, I hear from Howard."

Emily covered her face with her hands. When she looked up she was smiling through tears.

"It was a great joke," he said.

"A blessed joke," she replied, with her eyes still wet.—Chicago News.

A Good Excuse.

An old lady whose early home was in Concord, Mass., relates that she was once on her tardy way to school, crying in anticipation of disgrace and possible punishment, when a deep voice by her side said: "What is troubling you, my child?" Between her sobs Annie explained. "I will write a note to your teacher, asking her to excuse you," said the stranger, kindly. The little girl protested. He did not know her teacher. It would be of no use. But the big, black-haired man had written a few words on a page of his note-book, and, tearing out the leaf, handed it to the child. "If you give your teacher that, I think she will excuse you," he said, smilingly. Still unbelieving, the little girl handed the scrap of paper to her teacher, who read its contents and promptly excused the delinquent. The note read: "Will Miss —— excuse Annie for being late, and oblige her most obedient servant, Daniel Webster."—San Francisco Argonaut.

A Famous Drummer.

Probably the most remarkable drummer who ever lived was Jean Henri, the famous tambour-major of Emperor Napoleon. One of his feats was to play on 15 different-toned drums at the same time, in so soft and harmonious a manner that, instead of having the deafening uproar that might have been expected, the effect was that of a novel and complete instrument. In playing, he passed from one drum to the other, with such wonderful quickness that the eyes of the spectators could hardly follow the movement of his hands and body.—Golden Days.

A Good Many Rods to the Mile.

Smith—How did you like traveling on the P. D. S. railroad? Rather crooked, wasn't it?

Brown—Crooked! I should say it was. Why, say, it is an actual fact that in less than one hour one day my train passed the same barn at least half a dozen times. But that wasn't the strangest incident, however. You may not believe it, but about every ten miles the engineer would lean out of his cab and reach into some of the windows in the rear cars and beg a chew of tobacco. —N. Y. Journal.

THE NEW ELDORADO.

Wonderful Riches of the Yukon River Gold Fields.

Located in a Wild Country, Far from the Comforts of Civilization—How to Get There—Cost of the Trip.

[Special Letter.]

Within the past few weeks the newspapers have been publishing wonderful stories of the lucky miners in the gold fields of the Yukon river, and all over the United States and Canada men's minds are stirred with the golden possibilities. It has long been known to prospecting geologists that the streams tributary to the Yukon, and in some places the great river itself, "wandered o'er sands of gold," but it is within the past few weeks that the discoveries have been made that have turned the eyes of the people thither. Some of the stories read like tales from fairyland. One man, for instance, who went to the Klondyke last winter from Michigan, and who lived for months in a hole in the ground, suffering great privations from the terrible cold and half starved, had almost decided that there was no gold in Alaska, "when one day, after a 20-mile tramp, he came upon a little stream," to quote his own words, "which emptied into a sort of a basin. The water was clear and the gravelly bottom was covered with nuggets." Of course, he plunged into the icy stream and picked up all the gold in sight. (And there are not many of us who wouldn't endure very icy water for such a prize.) That was the beginning of his luck, and when he returned to his home in Michigan two weeks ago he had a deposit check for $50,000, and owns an interest in several mining claims still.

Then there is the case of a man from Kansas City, who "a year or two ago (Showing Both the River Route from St. Michael's and the Overland Route from Juneau.

didn't have money enough to pay his house rent," and went to Alaska. He returned July 15 with $130,000 in gold nuggets.

Still another notable case was that of a man 50 years old, poor and with a family of seven children. That was was one year ago. He left his home in Seattle, and when he came back he had $100,000 in his pockets and had mining property worth over $1,000,000.

There are dozens of such examples of luck, but we have no room to more than hint at the case of the poor Swede who went to the gold fields two years ago. He returned this summer with $65,000 in gold and sold an interest in his claim for $45,000.

But are these true stories? the reader may ask. The answer is to be found in the fact that the United States assay office at Helena, Mont., received nearly 12,000 ounces of gold by the steamer from Klondyke, and there are other assay offices.

It must not be supposed that every man who goes to the Klondyke is as fortunate as the examples quoted. From time to time we read the wails of the unlucky ones in the paper, who, naturally, advise others not to go to Alaska.

And now a brief description of the new El Dorado will be in order. The greatest discoveries have been made in the streams flowing from the east into the Yukon. They are all in British territory, in that vast region marked on the map as "Northwest Territory," which is one of the provinces of the dominion of Canada. So, while they are often spoken of as the Alaska gold fields, as a matter of fact all the rich placer mines about which the sensational stories are told are not in Alaska, but just across the border in John Bull's domain. The one hundred and forty-first degree of west longitude, which you can see on your map stretches from Mount St. Elias to the Arctic ocean, is the boundary line, and beyond a few feet at Fort Cudahy and a few at Forty Mile there is no dispute about it, and the red-coated mounted police of Canada keep the best of order in the new mining camps. Virtually, as far as climate is concerned, the gold fields might as well be in Alaska. The cold sets in early in September and lasts till the middle of May; and it is so cold that it is extremely hard to endure unless one has a good constitution, is strong and healthy and is well provided with warm clothing and furs. The mercury goes down between 60 and 70 degrees below zero, and during storms 20 or 30 degrees warmer is equally hard to bear. But, well provided in the matter of clothing, with plenty of food (for one ought to and generally does have a voracious appetite in the Arctic regions), there is no reason why a healthy man, not too old, should not stand the Alaskan winter or even become acclimated. Apart from the reasonable prospect of success in working a claim the novelty of hyperborean existence is not without its charms, and it is said that those who have become accustomed to living within the frigid zone find that life in the temperate regions is not as comfortable.

Alaska has a summer, short, close, muggy and uncomfortable. Those who have tried both say that they prefer the winter. During the winter the sun is invisible for many weeks, its place being in a measure supplied by the flashing splendor of the Aurora Borealis and the marvelous brilliancy of the stars. When the sun returns to warm the frozen earth the daylight lasts for 24 hours at a stretch for this is one of the lands of "the midnight sun."

The natives are Eskimo or (Esquimaux if you prefer) Indians with very many tribal names such as Siwash, Stick, etc. They are not a very attractive people, and while they are not fierce and turbulent like the Sioux or the Blackfeet, they are very debased and cruel. They frequently kill old people because they cannot help to work, and infanticide is also very common.

The Yukon is one of the greatest rivers in the world, and is said to be longer than the Mississippi. While it has not been thoroughly explored so far it is known to be navigable for large steamers for at least 2,500 miles. The Yukon and its numerous tributaries swarm with fish, no finer salmon in the world than the Alaska variety, and in the dead of winter one has only to pick a hole in the icy covering of rivers or lakes to get an abundance of good, large fish. Beside fish the miner and traveler can often get a shot at a moose, and bear meat is to be had in the timbered part of the region.

There are two principal routes to the gold fields. One is by sea from Seattle to the mouth of the Yukon (port of St. Michael's) a voyage of 2,600 miles, lasting 15 days. At St. Michaels transfer is made from the ocean to the river (Yukon) steamer, after a delay of a few days, which is flat-bottomed and which reaches Dawson City at the mouth of the Klondyke river in 15 to 20 days. But—and this is a very important "but"—unless the traveler lands at St. Michaels not later than August 25 he stands a good chance (or a bad one rather) of finding the Yukon closed by ice. In that case he can choose between spending the eight winter months on the bleak sea coast of St. Michaels or of walking 1,900 miles on the Yukon to the mines as soon as the river is frozen over. In this case he will require a pack of Indian dogs and one or two Indian bipeds to make the journey.

The Juneau route is the other way to the Klondyke. It is more direct and 4,000 miles shorter than the ocean route, but can be taken best in the winter and only by men inured to hardships. In this case, too, Seattle is the starting point. A coastwise steamer takes the traveler to Juneau, 900 miles, where the outfit can be purchased. From Juneau to Dyea is another 100 miles, then two trips taking eight to ten days. At Dyea the Chilkat Indians can be engaged to assist the traveler over Chilkat pass—and having safely crossed it he must build a boat to navigate the lakes and streams, because he has a journey of about 700 miles to reach the mines after leaving Chilkat. In the winter the boat gives place to snowshoes and the dog sled.

As we have said, this direct course is only for stalwarts, but indeed none else should think of going to the Klondyke—and the fatigue and hardships of such a journey will test even their best energies.

The expense of the trip is also worthy of consideration. On the ocean route the fare from Chicago to Circle City, the nearest point to the Klondyke, is about $250. But the cost of freight on the Yukon from the ocean to the mines may be calculated at 35 cents per pound, and as the prospective miner will require one year's provisions, which, with tools, etc., will weigh one ton, this item will be an expensive one. In other words, the cost of "getting there" ready to work will involve an outlay of about $1,500. That there is abundance of gold is certain, and stout-hearted men can get it, but it takes such to fill the necessary conditions.

JAMES IRVING CRABBE.

Equal to the Occasion.

A teacher once sent one of her scholars who was a half-witted boy, to her home with a bottle.

When the boy arrived back at school the teacher said to him:

"Well, George, did you take that bottle to our house?"

George (after hesitating)—Please, teacher, I let the bottle fall and it broke into pieces.

Thinking the teacher was going to scold him, he added, quickly:

"But I took the cork to your mother." —Spare Moments.

WORRIED THE LANDLADY.

Balder Twins Made Her Think She Was in the Wrong Business.

The Balder twins have been getting into trouble again. This time it was with a new boarding-house keeper who had bought out the Widow Clancy's business and didn't know there was a twin in it. The widow had always been generous to a fault—her own and everybody's else—but the new dispenser of provender had a talent for measuring and sipping and keeping tally on every buscuit that was served. She saw Harold, the thinnest twin, eating his supper, and the dimensions of his appetite fairly appalled her. She asked who he was, and was told that he was a regular boarder and belonged to the Balder family, but not a word of his being a twin.

"Land sake!" she said, "he must be hollow from his head to his heels. I can never make any money with such a cormorant as that to feed!"

She saw pork and beans, fried hash, eggs on toast and bread without stint disappearing under the hungry administration of a boy's appetite, and she hurried into the china pantry and took out a small memorandum book and began figuring on profit and loss. She was at it some time, and when she returned to the dining-room she expected to find it empty. What was her horror to find the boy with an appetite had just received an entirely new order, which was being served. She stared for a moment like one distraught, then she tackled the boy.

"You must be hungry," she said, with withering sarcasm.

"You bet I am," said the other twin, Eugene, as he began to devour the nearest dish.

"Young man, you'll have a fit of apoplexy, and I won't be half sorry. Anybody who gorges himself with two suppers ought to die."

Eugene understood in a flash, but he only said, demurely:

"Wait until I've eaten this one—maybe I won't need any more."

The new boarding-house keeper went through the apartments in a fury, looking for the Balders, to inform them that their son was eating himself to death. The first one she saw was the boy himself playing checkers with his father. Her eyes grew round.

"How on earth did you get here before me?" she asked.

"Oh, that was dead easy," said Harold, who saw the usual complications, and he was happy. "I came as soon as I finished my supper."

"But you had just begun all over again," shrieked the tormented and perplexed woman, and then Father Balder came to the rescue and explained about the twins. But the awe-stricken head of the commissary department said that she should sell out, for she thought there was something uncanny about the business.—Chicago Times-Herald.

A COZY COUCH.

For the Tired Housekeeper to Recline Upon.

A living-room without a couch is a room but poorly furnished. In fact, there is no room in the house except the kitchen where a lounge is out of place. It is almost a necessity in the sleeping-room for those who take daytime naps. It is useful in the upper hall or in the library. The dining-room is a quiet place during the greater part of the day, where the tired housekeeper may well retire from the toils of the kitchen and enjoy a brief resting hour, as her brother toilers in the fields do.

Her nerves will be steadier, her strength greater, for such a brief rest daily. The most satisfactory lounges are homemade affairs, not the formal, upholstered couch, in whose concealed depths dust and vermin may easily lurk. Let the carpenter or the skillful home mechanic insert a set of single bed springs or a woven-wire mattress in a frame of wooden strips about four inches wide. Mount this frame on castors, lifting it about nine inches from the floor. Place a mattress of proper size over it. Cover it with a movable cover of heavy muslin, and over this drape a Bagdad rug or arrange a slip cover of chintz or some suitable upholstery goods. Make at least four pillows of feathers or down for the lounge, each about 25 inches square, and cover them with different colored materials in harmony with the various colors in the lounge cover. In the early spring, when the rays of the sun seem to possess special powers to revivify the inhabitants of earth as well as "every green herb that groweth," it is pleasant to have the couch placed in a sunny window. Later in the season, when the heat of summer comes, it should be arranged in some shaded nook of the darkened room.—N. Y. Tribune.

Value of the Egg in Sickness.

The value of egg albumen as food in certain diseased conditions is pointed out by Dr. C. E. Boynton. When fever is present and appetite is nil, he says, when we want an aseptic article of diet, the white of an egg, raw, serves both as food and medicine. The way to give it is to drain off the albumen from an opening about half an inch in diameter at the small end of the egg, the yolk remaining inside the shell; add a little salt to this and direct the patient to swallow it. Repeat every hour or two. In typhoid fever this mode of feeding materially helps us in carrying out an antiseptic plan of treatment. Furthermore, the albumen to a certain extent may antidote the toxins of the disease. Patients may at first rebel at the idea of eating a "raw" egg, but the quickness with which it goes down without the yolk proves it to be less disagreeable than they supposed, and they are very ready to take a second dose.—Pacific Medical Journal.

Strawberry Pudding.

To a large teacupful of finely powdered bread crumbs add the yolks of four eggs and a quart of milk. Stir these together, flavor with vanilla and bake. When done remove from the oven and spread on the top a thick layer of slightly mashed and well-sugared strawberries, and over this a meringue of the whites of the eggs sweetened. Return to the oven and brown lightly.—N. Y. Ledger.

Corn Beef Hash.

Chop fine sufficient cold corn beef to make one pint. Mix with it an equal quantity of cold boiled potatoes chopped. Put these into a frying pan, add one cupful of stock or water, a tablespoonful of butter, a teaspoonful of onion juice and three dashes of pepper. Stir until boiling hot, and serve on buttered toast.—Mrs. S. T. Rorer, in Ladies' Home Journal.

A DRAW GAME.

How Two Scotchmen Saved Their Reputations at Golf.

They were two local golf players, both Scotchmen, and they went out to the links to play a match in the dark. Each Johnnie had cut a hole in his pocket, and had a ball all ready to drop down in the leg of his trousers just in front of the other ball. Off they drove, and on they walked, and presently one says to the other:

"I say, Jock, my mon, I'm thinking yo're o'erwalking your ba'."

"Na, na," says the second, "mine was a fine, clean drive, but whaur's yours?"

"Eh, mon, mine was an awful clure."

So they went another 50 yards. Then the first says:

"Jock, mon, I'll tak' my davy we're past yours the noo."

"Then whaurs your ain?"

"Eh, mine was an awful clure."

Another 50 yards brought them to the putting green.

"Eh, Jock, I'm no seeing your ba' on the green."

"Maybe you'd best see if it's in the hole."

"My certes, why there it is! And, eh, but it's curious; but there's mine in the hole beside it. Mon, it's awful curious."

"Het's halved, then."

"Het's halved—one each—good play."

They teed up for the next hole solemnly. Then they stood looking at each other a moment before they drove off.

"Say, Jock, my mon, d'ye think it's any use to gang on playing like this?"

"I'm thinking it would just be a halved match."

"Het's my ain very thocht, Jock."

"A weel, we noo ca' it a halved match and gang home."

"I'm thinkin' 'twould save a world of bother."

"I'm of the same opeeneon myself."—N. Y. Sun.

This, from the Cleveland Plain Dealer, shows how words are losing their old meanings: "And now, children, what is a centurion? Well, Willie?" "Please, ma'am, my brother is one." "Your brother is one?" "Yes, ma'am, he made a century last Sunday."

An Abominable Legacy.

A tendency to rheumatism is undoubtedly inherited. Unlike many other legacies, it remains in the family. The most effectual means of checking this tendency, or of removing incipient rheumatism, whether pre-existent in the blood or not, is to resort to Hostetter's Stomach Bitters as soon as the premonitory twinges are felt. Nullifying the influences of cold, exposure and fatigue, the Bitters not only fortifies the system against their hurtful consequences, but subjugates malaria, liver and kidney complaint, dyspepsia and nerve disquietude.

BUFFALO GAZETTE

DELANO, FRIDAY, AUG. 13, 1897.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE VILLAGE OF DELANO.

DELANO DIARY

—Stacking has begun and soon the hum of the threshing machine will be heard in our land.

—Nick Frank has a bran new machine warehouse on the river bank opposite Borsche's store.

—Harris Williams, W. H. Freeman, and Rev. Savs have the prettiest flower gardens we have seen this season.

—Shrader and Eppel are hauling some heavy oak lumber from their farm in Hennehin County, to town.

—The telephone poles for this vicinity were unloaded here last week. The line will doubtless be in running order soon.

—Tuesday was pay day for the creamery, and patrons were made happy by receipt of their share of the returns.

—This weeks GAZETTE contains official notices of the hearing of three applications for liquor license to take place Monday Aug. 23.

—After all the rains roads are in the finest possible condition. It is astonishing where so much water goes to as has fallen this season.

—L. M. Meister says he has rented the hotel to a Glencoe man, provided he can give possetsion of the house and barn and a suit at law is pending.

—Delano has doubled the night police force since the occurrence of so many burglaries in the surrounding country. It is well enough to be on the safe side.

—The Delano Cornet Band held a picnic at Lake Rebecca, Sunday. Their annual picnic. It rained; but their clothes did not show the effects quite as badly as did the white suits of one year ago.

—A man passing by a stopping place of a lot of men bound west, overheard a very earnest discussion: He was surprised on learning that the subject was "What would we do if some one undertook to rob us."

—Some kind of an excitement occurred on the corner of Third street and R. R. Ave. one day last week; women and children congregated to see what was going on; there was a pitchfork and talk of a Gunn. Nobody hurt.

—T. M. Shaw sold his fine gray horse on Fair Day, to Ben St. John, of Watertown. He was one of the largest and most stylish horses in Delano, and will be missed from our streets as much as any other animal in town would on leaving.

—The 38th annual State Fair will be held upon the State Fair grounds at Hamline, commencing Sept. 6 and closing Sept. 11. Since the saloon business was banished from the grounds it is claimed the Fair has met with unprecedented success. A fine Fair is expected this year, —Just as expected. Everybody's wheat bins empty and wheat cavorting around a dollar. Farmers will soon begin to haul in new wheat. Those on ordinarily good land complain of light heads and small yeld, while people on sandy soil proclaim prosperity; the rain was just what they needed.

—A couple of tramps lodged in a Delano barn one night this week. In the morning when one got up he claims his partner was gone; likewise his shoes which fitted him had disappeared, and a pair that pinched awfully remained for him to hobble about in until he can find a job to earn more.

—Mrs. Cal Steward and her son Earnest returned this week from Oregon where they went to spy out the country for a new home. Cal says he expects to move there soon and settle down to business in a warmer climate than this. She has our thanks for bringing a fine appel from Mrs. W. H. Wilson, of Seattle for us.

—J. E. Brothers and wife left yesterday for their new home at Wayzata. Delano people will be sorry to loose them from their midst. They have resided here for a long time. Mr. Brothers especially was an early settler in this place. May health and happiness be their lot in their new home is the wish of many friends and neighbors.

—There seems to be some kind of a hitch or misunderstanding among the councilmen; one fails to attend meetings for some unexplained reason. The Village is entitled to a full board to do business, and if a man is elected to look after village affairs, he should attend to it or resign, and his place should be filled by one that would.

—The school board met Saturday evening and organized for the year by electing F. H. Lindsley President, C. H. Vorse, Secretary and J. E. Borsch Treasurer. Some move is being made to get a better light for the rooms, and get slate instead of rough black boards. The rooms should be thoroughly scrubbed and aired several weeks before school begins.

—School will begin early in September. Every boy and girl intending to go this winter should make it a point to be there the first day and not to be tardy nor absent during the term. By persistent effort much can be accomplished; but when a pupil looses a lesson he feels the loss throughout the term and even, often, in the final examination. In case a pupil must be absent he should learn his lessons just the same.

—Read Schaffer's change of add this week. You will be interested in it and may profit by reading it.

—F. H. Lindsley, the new Post Master has purchased of Mrs. Chance, the corner building on Second Street and Rail Road Ave., to be used as the Post Office. He will have his law office up stairs. Considerable disappointment was manifested by River Street parties when they learned the post office was not coming on to their street. Mr. L. proposes to fix up the building, put in new boxes and have the finest post office in the county.

—We are in receipt of the "Lake County Rustler" of Lakeview, Oregon. In it we read that "E. C. Austin and wife returned Monday evening from their extended trip to Chicago, Minneapolis, and other eastern cities. Mr. Austin bought a large bill of goods in each of the following cities; Chicago, Minneapolis, Omaha and San Francisco" It is stated that besides leather goods for his harness and saddle establishment, he also bought a carload of wagons, buggies etc. paying cash for all. Mr. Austin is the man who married Mrs. Dugan, of Delano, a few weeks ago. Her friends will be pleased to read of her arrival home and prospects bright.

—The Village Council met Monday evening and accepted the bonds of Frank T. Zaun with John B. Plattner and J. D. Young as surities, and granted him license to sell intoxicating liquors for one year, with the provision that he do not sell on Sunday or on election day; nor to minors or old drunkards, nor intoxicated persons, and so forth as the law provides; nor permit gambling etc. etc. The Council also voted that the Mayor appoint a committee to see to arranging the track for hauling wood at the power house, and Horsch and Bock were appointed. The committee on electric lights were authorized to see about getting new indicators.

Personal.

John Sturman, of the G. N. was home over Sunday.

Dr. Niven had his usual rush of customers, Monday.

Dr. Catlin Drove over to Buffalo, Tuesday, on business.

Frank T. Zaun visited Minneapolis on Monday, on business.

Peter Peterson, of Waverly, and Charley Coolen, of Smith Lake.

Messrs George Kurtz and John Steffes spent a couple days in the city last week.

C. White and wife, of Minneapolis, helped J. E. Brothers to move to Wayzata this week.

Miss Annie Borsch went to St. Paul, Monday for a short visit with relatives and friends.

C. G. Roosen took a trip on horseback, to Buffalo, Monday. C. G. is quite an equestrian.

John Peterson, of St. Louis county is visiting Delano relatives and friends for a season.

Rev. M. N. Ray, of Litchfield, held Episcopal services in the hall Sunday morning and evening.

Mr. Schmidt, of Minneapolis, is in charge of the old John Coolen lumber yard, for the new firm.

A. W. Wittman is happy again. His family has returned from an outing to Lake Minnetonka.

Mrs. Jennie Ball, of Grafton, N. D. arrived Thursday for a visit with Delano friends for awhile.

Peter Peterson, of Waverly, and Charlie Coolen, of Smith Lake, were home to see the folks Sunday.

L. Meister went to Buffalo Wednesday to commence suit of ejectment against Jones the liveryman.

L. M. Maxfield went to Minneapolis Monday and back in the evening. His daughter Mollie came home with him.

Misses Maizie and Grace, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Willard, of St. Paul, are guests at the home of W. M. Mowatt.

Swan Erickson and son Elmer were home Sunday from Waverly, where they are building Dr. O'Connor's new residence.

Thomas F. O'Hair, of Wheaton, and John J, of Minneapolis, were in town Wednesday. They went to Waverly for a visit.

The Rummel children, who have been spending a few weeks with their grandfather, William Ziebarth, returned home to St. Paul, Monday.

Willie Washington, of Independence, was a GAZETTE caller Saturday. He says wheat is a lighter crop this year than it was last, while corn never looked better.

Fred Knoll and family visited relatives near Buffalo, Sunday. He reports a hail storm, the largest balls he ever saw; but thinks there was not enough of it to cause serious damege.

John Mayer, General Road Supervisor for the G. N. with headquarters at Willmar was home over Sunday. He is getting tired of railroading and would like to be at home all the time.

County Cullings.

Notwitnstanding the report that A. Y. Eaton had bought the Annandale Post, and the supposition that it would advocate free silver, that sheet continues to be as Rank Republican as ever.

It is said that the Buffalo Post Office appointment is the hardest one to decide on, in the district. It now develops that Lamson and Dodd, the republican candidates, have found a very formidable opponent, in the person of a gold democrat who passed last fall in some places as a silver democrat. --Maple Lake Messenger.

Does the present incumbent want then, to hang on to the plum? Let him. Let him.

Editor French of Monticello tries in last week's times to give direction to Wright county politics, to suit him. He thinks Ed Nagle wont be a candidate for re-election; that J. J. Woolley would make a good successor to Senator Culkin; Hanaford is all right; A. Y. Eaton won't be chairman; Pidgeon's chances depend; but Auditor Swanburg aint in it a little bit. This may suit French: but there are others. Perhaps the Democrats may have a chance since the re-districting took place.

Among Our Exchanges.

A. G. Lano's many friends will be pleased to know that he has just moved back to South Haven.--South Haven items, Annandale Post.

St Cloud Times:--Ex-President Joseph Carhart, of the St. Cloud Normal school, passed through the city today on his way to Mayville, N. D., where he has accepted the presidency of the school at that place.

Minneapolis Tribune:--The New York Evening Post predicts that there will be no currency legislation by the present congress, and the Boston Herald saps a worse thing might happen to American business men than an absolute exemption for a year or two from the grave hazards and disturbances which currency tinkering always entails. That is right. It will be better not to attempt to tinker with the currency. When there is any currency legislation it should be radical and thorough an permanent.

Litchfield Independent:-- A. B. Allen, in his paper the Jackson Republic, would like to know how they are going to beat John Lind in an off year when he ran fifty thousand votes ahead of histicket in a presidential campaign. Col. Allen is a Republican and he may well ask that question. Let the G. O. P. schemers figure it out.

TWO INKY WAYS.

(New York Sun.)

There was a man who advertised
But once—a single time.
In spot obscure placed he his ad
And paid for it a dime.

And just because it didn't bring
Him customers by score,
"All advertising is a fake"
He said, or, rather, swore.

He seemed to think one hammer tap
Would drive a nail clear in;
That from a bit of tiny thread
A weaver, tents could spin.

If he this reasoning bright applied
To eating, doubtless he
Would claim one little bite would feed
Ten men a century.

Some day, though, he will learn that to
Make advertising pay
He'll have to add ads to his ad.
And advertise each day.

WONDERFUL SALES.
$10 Every Day Can Be Made by Agents.
To prove it, we give a few items from actual sales made within the last few weeks:
One agent sold 27 copies in two and a half days. Another sold 15 copies in two days, and another 30 in three days. One agent in Indiana sold 15 copies in two days. An agent in South Carolina sold 43 copies in three days. One agent in Georgia sold 25 in two days. An agent in Central Georgia sold 82 copies in ten days. When you consider the commission we allow agents, and the immense popularity of this wonderful book, and the ease with which it sells, there is nothing in which a live, pushing man can engage which will yield such profits. For instance: one agent made $108.25 in ten days selling "Thunderbolts." Another made $39.60 in three days; another $9.25 in one day; another $33 in two days; another $56.75 in three days.

WHEN PETER SANG.

When Peter sang the rafters rang,
He made the great church reel;
His voice it rang a clarion clang,
Or like a cannon's peal.
Yes, Peter made the rafters ring
And never curbed his tongue;
Albeit Peter could not sing,
Yet Peter always sung.
Ah, wide did he his wild voice fling
Promiscuous and free;
Despite the fact he could not sing,
Why, all the more sang he.
With clamorous clang
And resonant bang
His thunders round he flung;
He could not sing
One single thing;
Yet Peter always sung.

The choir sang loud an all the crowd
Took up the holy strain;
But Peter's bawl rose over all
Tempestuously plain.
The organ roared and madly poured
Its music flood around,
But Peter drowned its anthem loud
In cataracts of sound.
The people hushed, the choir grew still,
Still grew the organ's tone,
Then Peter's voice rose loud and shrill,
For Peter sang alone.
His clamorous shout
Had drowned them out
And silenced every tongue;
He could not sing
One single thing;
Yet Peter always sung.

When Peter died the people cried,
For Peter he was good,
Although his voice produced a noise
Not easily withstood.
Though many cried when Peter died
And gained his golden lyre,
They nursed a heartfelt sympathy
For Heaven's augmented choir.
They knew where'er his soul might be
Loud would his accents ring,
He'd sing through all eternity
The songs he could not sing.
The Heavenly choir
He'd make perspire
And Heavenly arches ring;
Though he can't sing
One single thing
Forevermore he'll sing.
—Sam Walter Foss, in N. Y. Sun.—
Wabasha Democrat.

REPUBLICANS in their national platform of 1896 said: "The veterans of the Union army deserve and should receive fair treatment and generous recognition." And yet old soldiers of the rank and file are being removed to make room for younger Republican blood. McDonald of the St Cloud land office and even Delano's post master is about going on the retired list, while others take their places. Perhaps the present administration construes "fair treatment and generous recognition, so far as old soldiers go, to giving them a rest. At least it looks as if that is the case.

THE Louisville Courier Journal, a gold standard, National Democratic paper has in its last week's issue quite a suggestive picture of repudiation staring the Mexican in the face. It intends to convey the meaning that silver is no good for money, and says: "We can't pay our interest with our 1897 silver dollars." Is this kind of stuff to pave the way for the final act in the gold standard policy being carried on in this country? Can the United States pay its interest in its 1897 silver dollars? Hasn't many a poor fellow tied himself to the gold standard band wagon by signing notes, secured by mortgages on his property which are "payable in gold," and not in silver? How long under this plan will it be until the moneyed men will refuse to receive silver dollars in pay ment for interest or principel? How long until the silver dollar will be crushed out of existence? And every man, or poor widow or orphan, "we heard so much about during the last campaign, will find that the few hoarded silver dollars in their possessions are worth just what the silversmith will give them for old silver?

One of Their Arguments.

Mr. Bryan is suspected of an attempt to catch the Spanish vote.—Duluth News Tribune.

The above is a specimen of the digs the gold bug press is giving Mr. Bryan. It is but one of the sharpened darts hurled at him all along the line. But really it will serve as another nail in the coffin of the party that dares longer uphold the contraction of currency in the United States that greedy men may gain thereby. It will, like a boomerang, injure the thrower who was not careful enough in starting it on its way. Mr. Bryan is to day receiving the greatest kind of an ovation wherever he goes, and is among his fellow citizens of the United States.

New York Dispatch:—The experiment of compulsory voting is to be tried in Pennsylvania, the last legislature having passed a law to that effect. This in the opinion of the American Agriculturist, "will be watched with much interest. Much can be said in favor of this, for if men are compelled to vote they will take more interest in public affairs. Pennsylvania is in advance on matters of this kind, as it compels the education of children. prevents the employment of certain minors, fixes the rules of a days work, provides for the payment of employes of the public and corporations at certain times, and compels the payment of taxes to support the state and local governments."

Bryan at Butte.

Butte, Mont., Aug. 14.—The greatest demonstration ever witnessed in the Northwest was the reception given by the people of Butte to William J. Bryan and his wife. Mr. Bryan said it exceeded any he had seen since the last campaign. A crowd of 25,000 people listened to his speech at the West Side race track. He spoke chiefly on the silver question. During the morning Mr. Bryan went through the famous Anaconda copper mine.—Duluth Herald.

Drunk as a Lord.

A young man who resides in the country, is laboring under the hallucination that in order to appear smart and manly, he must be sporty, was found Saturday night lying on the ground back of the saloon, in a beastly state of intoxication. The young man belongs to a good family: his parents are professors of religion, and they would be greatly shocked when they read this if they had any idea that it referred to their dear boy. The young man is a minor and is not eligible to buy liquor himself, but we do not know that he did. Better stop right now, young fellow, as a second wallow like a hog in the dirt may require The Republican to give your name and then you will find out that it is not a bit cute nor smart.—Weeping Water Republican, (Neb.)

Goodnow in China.

From the St. Paul Dispatch we clip the following:

Washington, Aug. 16.—The latest news in connection with the Washburn Goodnow fight is that efforts are being made to keep Mr. Goodnow from receiving his exequateur from the Chinese government. A prominent Minnesota, man, who was in Washington a day or two since, said that he knew that all of Senator Washburn's charges against Goodnow and the proceedings in his divorce case had been translated and sent to China ten days before Goodnow sailed. Washburn, it is said, is determined to ostracise Goodnow from all English society at Shanghai, but John anticipated all this and long before he left Washington a certificed copy of all that took place before the Senate committee on commerce, where Washburn made his fight, was filed at the Chinese embassy here and sent to Pekin. It is also said that Goodnow secured additional testimonials from prominent men, including J. S. Clarkson, Senator Quay, C. A. Pillsbury, and others who have had commercial dealings with China. New York papers publish the reports from Takoma to the effect that John Goodnow and Miss Elizabeth White, alias "Libbie Gordon," were in Tacoma last week together, and went to San Francisco on the same boat. Goodnow denied just before he sailed that he had again been married.

Shameless Debauchment.

Congress in its shameless debauchment forgot all about protection as a beautiful and benign Republican doctrine and gave us only the protection of the swineherd. The rank and file of the Republican party believe in protection as a means in ennobling the American labor man and to establish on a firm footing new industries, but the American laboring man will starve under the protection afforded by this law and the industries that it will encourage are the industries of riot and marauding.—Saint Cloud Times.

Sherman's Diplomacy.

It would have been wiser if Secretary Sherman had maintained a more diplomatic tone in his correspondence with the British government concerning the Alaskan seal dispute, although there are always many who are ready to applaud an exhibition of spunk on the part of our diplomatic representatives. In all kinds of negotiations and settlements, whether between individuals or nations, there is an advantage in mingling gentleness with assurance and politeness with firmness. But we are a somewhat nervous people, and there is a vein of Celtic blood running through the nation that is liable to find expression occasionally in administrative acts. Nationally, we have something to learn in maintaining cool reserve in times of emergency. So far as the Alaska seal dispute is concerned, our government is doubtless in the right.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C., Aug. 13, 1897.

Is John Sherman losing his mind? It certainly begins to look that way. He has had conversations one day with well known gentlemen, and the next day denied every word that he said to them. Mr. McKinley must have his doubts, as he has issued orders to State Department officials to see that Mr. Sherman does not get the country into some new foreign entanglement, and especially to keep him from meddling with the Cuban question which Mr. Day has from the first had exclusive charge of. Mr. Sherman isn't such an old man-his next birthday, if he lives, will be his seventy-fifth-and if his mind has really broken down it is probably because of the humiliation heaped upon him by the Hanna-McKinley-Day combine.

The absurdity of allowing the Spanish minister to send officials of the Customs service off on all sorts of wild goose filibuster chases was accentuated this week when he had Customs officers seize a steamer at Bridgeport, Conn., that had on board a lot of ammunition belonging to the U. S. government, which was being moved under orders from the War Department. It would be funny, if the matter wasn't too serious to be joked about.

A system of spying on the clerks in the Treasury Department has been put in force that is causing much dissatisfaction among those who believe that men and women do not become slaves when they enter government employ.

Mr. Benjamin Butterworth, Commissioner of Patents, has gone further than any of his predecessors have dared to go in regulating the practice before the U. S. Patent Office, in the new regulations he has issued providing the qualifications of patent solicitors. The evidence in the hearings in the case of John Wedderburn and Co., who are under charges and are trying to show cause why they should not be disbarred, shows that Mr. Butterworth has not gone too far in those regulations. It has been shown by that evidence that of the more than 3,700 applications filed for patents by Wedderburn & Co. during the last two years, more than 1,800 have been rejected as containing nothing patentable, and of the remainder, only a few, probably not 200, have sufficient value to justify the expense of a patent. Notwithstanding these facts, the deluded applicants have in many instances been persuaded to apply for European patents, paying the attorney's fee in advance, and to pay John Wedderburn & Co. for advertising for sale worthless and fully anticipated inventions.

It is learned that Minister Woodford has been instructed to take his time in traveling to Madrid to an even greater extent than was contemplated when he left Washington. It is stated that the administration prefers in the unsettled condition of affairs in Spain, since the assassination of the Spanish Prime Minister, that Mr. Taylor, our old Spanish Minister, who is presumed to be better posted on the condition of affairs than a new man would be, should continue for a while to represent the United States at Madrid. The fact is, the administration wants to see which way the Spanish cat is going to jump before showing its Cuban policy to the government of Spain.

Boss Hanna's fight for election to the Senate is being aided by the administration wherever possible. Mr. George P. Hamlett, of Ohio, who was recently made Chief of Post Office Inspectors, was given that place as a reward for what he is expected to do for Hanna. There are nearly 100 post office inspectors, and the chief can order as many of them into one particular state as he may be pleased to have there. The programme is for Mr. Hamlett to keep enough inspectors in Ohio to see that all the postmasters in that state give Hanna all the help they can, and any one of them who fails to meet expectations in that line will be likely to find that the inspectors will discover something wrong in the way he conducts his office. Oh yes, of course, this is a civil service reform administration-between campaigns in which it is interested.

INDEPENDENCE INCIDENTS.

The weather has been fine for the last ten days, and farmers have been busy gathering in their crops. The stacking is about all done, and some of the farmers are threshing. Some say the wheat is turning out a little better than was expected at time of cutting.

DIED,—at his home in Town of Medina on 15th present month, of paralysis of throat and stomach, Ashbel Ingerson, aged 69 years. The funeral was largely attended by friends and neighbors of the deceased; services conducted by William Campbell, assisted by D. P. Crosscup.

Mr. Ingerson was previously a resident of this town, but for the last 15 or 16 years had lived in the town of Medina. He leaves a wife, three sons, three daughters and many friends to mourn his loss. Mr. Ingerson was a good citizen, respected and loved by his neighbors.

Chas. Ingerson Jr. of Leter Prairie, attended the funernal of his uncle on Tuesday.

Harvest Home for the Farmer.

The Minnesota State Fair, which will be held at Hamline, midway between the two cities from Sept 6th to the 11th, will be the best ever seen in the Northwest. The past two exhibits have been especially prosperous, and, as the result, the association offers premiums and purses to the amount of $25,000. This large sum is stimulating every department, and the entries of exhibitors are pouring in as never before.

The buildings are being overhauled, repainted, repaired and renovated. The grounds generally are being put in order, walks and roads repaired, and the race track is absolutely in superb condition. The purses offered for the races aggregate $7,500, and some of the most celebrated horses in the country will be present. Happy Jack, the famous horse which paces in 2.09 without rider driver or sulky, will give a daily exhibition during the races. He is the original horse to give this unique exhibition.

The displays of stock, poultry, dairy products and farm machinery will be unusually large, and the whole exhibit will be a veritable harvest home for the farmer.

In addition to the exhibits there will be various amusements, such as baloon ascensions and other attractions. The railroads return exhibits free, carrying them dirct to the grounds. One fare for the round trip will be given to visitors, and steam and street cars run direct from the Twin Cities to the grounds. Both St. Paul and Minneapolis have carnivals State Fair week, giving free evening street displays. The whole week will be one of pleasure and instruction. Parties desiring to camp on the grounds can obtain the free use of a tent by writing to Secretary E. W. Randall, at Hamline.

The September Number of "What to Eat" Is a Gem.

We are reminded that we are in the midst of the Watermelon Season by the cover, which has a big slice of that fruit suspended in the heavens in place of a moon, while two awe struck little darkies contemplate the wonder with amazement. Inside appears a story by Miss Harris entitled, "The Cook at Kennedy's Camp," A vegetarian Luncheon, by Miss Anna B. Weeks, Stories for the Table, by Mrs. Leo, of New York, How to Cook a Husband, by a new writer, "S. H. M." The Proper Food for Persons Advanced in Life, a reply to Dr. Hoy by Dr. Tooker, of Chicago, a splendid lot of recipes by Miss Emily Colling, and menus, jokes, etc., etc.

Altogether, the words of the Chicago News of last week can be fairly endorsed, when it says: "'What To Eat' has grown mightily. It is vivacious, well illustrated and brightly written, unique in its field and a valuable help with its suggestive ideas. It is not a 'crochet stitch' or a 'home recipe' magazine; rather it deals with the philosophy of eating, the intellectual side of food consumption, if the phrase is permitted." 10 cents a copy $1 a year. THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'e pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world today.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill.

WHAT YOUR THUMB TELLS.
square Type.
Palmistry assumes to tell what the lines in your hand indicate. It will amuse you, if nothing more. The above diagram almost explains itself. The length of the LINE OF LIFE indicates probable age to which you will live. Each BRACELET gives you thirty years. Well-marked LINE OF HEAD denotes brain power: clear LINE OF FORTUNE, came or ichor. Both combined mean success in life; but you must keep up with modern ideas to win it. You will find plenty of these in Demorest's Family Magazine, so attractively presented that every member of the family is entertained. It is a dozen magazines in one. A CLEAR LINE OF HEALTH. Doesn't it? the Empress of Fashion's magazine, is perfect in every detail. A weekly visitor, send for a specimen copy (free), and you'll admit that seeing THUMBS has put a little in the way of saving money by finding in one magazine everything to satisfy the literary wants of a whole family.
The thumb is an unfailing index to character. The Square Type indicates a strong will, great energy and firmness. Closely allied is the Spiritualistic Type, the thumb of those of advanced ideas and business ability. Both of these types belong to the busy man or woman; and Demorest's Family Magazine provides especially for such persons a whole volume of new ideas, constantly crowded full of the latest fashions, stories, poetry, and fiction. A dress reformer, culture, and a love of music, which will find rare pleasure in the magnificent colored steel and art, which will find rare use of loose, 16½ x 21 inches, reproduced from the original painting by De Longpre. The most celebrated of living flower-painters, which will be given to every subscriber to Demorest's Magazine for 1897. The cost of this superb work of art was $300.00; and the reproduction cannot be distinguished from the original. Besides this, an exquisite water-color picture is given in each number of the Magazine, and the articles are so priceless, and the stories are so pure, and the Magazine is, in reality, a portfolio of art works of the highest order. The Philosophic Type is the ideal of a perfectly balanced character. Those of these types belong to the intellectual class

A house in a New York town was struck by lightning seven times in one day last week. This may be called the electrocution of an old proverb.

It is estimated that Japan will import during this year 1,000,000 barrels of our flour. China is also purchasing our wheat in quantities.

A southern California farmer figured out one dry day that he had walked 300 miles in cultivating an orchard. He thereupon sold his place and moved to town, where he walked 600 miles to find something to do for a living.

Lord Kelvin has devised a plan at Shoreditch, England, by which garbage is consumed by electricity and the resulting gases used for fuel. Science is determined to show that there is no such thing as necessary waste.

The Brooklyn (N. Y.) directory ought to run an influenza department. Zmidzinski, appears therein, and Zidnilski, not to mention Zolotnitzki and Zwetschkenbaum. Yachczyk leans up against Syctrodowsky, while Pfannenschmidt and Achtenflacht sneeze along together.

Florence Nightingale received her Christian name from the town in which she was born—Florence, Italy. Her name is not Nightingale, but Shore, her father being a Nottingham banker, who inherited the estates of Peter Nightingale on condition that he assume the name.

An American on the Klondike writes home: "There is no language strong enough to describe the fierceness of the mosquitoes. They would soon kill a person if gloves and veiling were not constantly worn." Alaskans will feel better when they hear that the New Jersey mosquitoes this year are just as dangerous.

The longest tunnel in existence will be the one under Pike's peak, but just so long as railroad companies persist in lighting the lamps before reaching a tunnel they needn't expect it to become particularly attractive or interesting to the younger members of the traveling public, no matter how long it takes to get through.

It is reported that a society has been formed in the east composed exclusively of college men, whose object is to secure laws providing for the electrocuting of idiots, lunatics, deformed children and old people. It is to be hoped that the ignorant will not take this society as an evidence of what college usually does for young men.

A Boston swimmer has attempted to swim across the English channel, but failed by about three miles. The feat is one to test the greatest strength, skill and endurance. It has been accomplished a few times before, notably some years ago by Capt. Henry Webb, but many more have failed than succeeded. Twenty-one miles of the roughest water and the strongest tides lie between the English and French shores, and he is indeed a splendid swimmer who can buffet successfully this waste.

Klondike is not to monopolize all the interest in gold discoveries. Simultaneously with the announcements from Alaska come others telling that gold has also been found in Pennsylvania, California, Colorado, Minnesota, Michigan and Illinois. A man in New York has also discovered a method of extracting gold from Mexican silver dollars, and a company has been formed for the purpose of transmuting gold from the pate de foi gras which grows so plentifully on the White mountains.

The bloody mindedness of so-called civilization received a rebuke from the king of Siam while he was at Vienna. They proudly showed him a large collection of stuffed animals which had been killed by the late Crown Prince Rudolph. His majesty asked if the crown prince had killed them himself. They answered yes. Whereupon the gentle Buddhist replied that he loved animals too dearly to kill them. He kept them instead. The wanton slaying for so-called sport of animals is an inconsistency in the Christian religion which strikes the Buddhists and others who examine it.

Since 1890 40 persons have died in the electric chair in New York state. From the creation of the state until 1890, when execution by electricity began, there were only 230 hangings. The great increase in the number of takings off is attributed to the greater liking of juries for the electric method than for rope choking, and the removal of the place of execution from the vicinity of the crime, which lessens the appeal for executive clemency. The change of the method of terminating the lives of murderers is, says the Troy (N. Y.) Times, one of the most praiseworthy acts of civilization.

A general migratory movement to Mexico is proposed by the Indians. The prohibition of polygamy by order of the government is said to be the cause, but it is doubtful if the plan can be carried into effect. Uncle Sam might not object, but Mexico probably would. And even if the Indians were able to change their homes, it would probably not be long before many of them would come straggling back. The red man has become largely dependent upon government assistance. Such aid could not be expected from the Mexican government, and without it the Indian would find himself in dire straits.

THE BIG STRIKE.

Developments Make Things Lively in Various Quarters.

Judge Collier Commends Peaceable Attitude of Strikers—Civil and Criminal Suits Against De Armit—Deputies Fight.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 17.—Monday was fraught with exciting incidents in matters pertaining to the miners' strike. Mutiny in the strikers' camp, a probable murder in the deputies' ranks, filing of criminal and civil suits against the De Armits, and the hearing in the injunction case against President Dolan and others, kept both sides to the struggle busy and on the qui vive all day long. That the injunction will be materially modified there can be no doubt, which on its face would indicate a victory for the strikers. The preliminary decree has been continued pending a consultation of the judges and an opinion will probably be handed down by noon to-day. Judge Collier said in court that the strike would go down in history as one of the wonders of the country, and remarkable on account of the utter lack of disorder, for which the strikers are commended, and have the sympathy of the court.

Miners Begin Suit for Wages.

The threatened suits against the New York and Cleveland company for retaining the wages of their striking miners have been commenced. It is anticipated that about 150 suits will result. Each will be for salaries ranging from $15 to $20, which represents two weeks' pay. Three suits were entered before Alderman Toole Monday.

Criminal Suits Against De Armit.

In addition to the civil suits entered against President W. P. De Armit by his former employers for wages, three criminal suits have been brought against Samuel De Armit, a brother of the president. Mrs. Croter, who was evicted on Saturday by Samuel De Armit, has brought a criminal suit charging assault and battery. She says in her charge that her husband was not at home and De Armit took her by the shoulders and threw her out of the house. She says he held a hatchet above her head and threatened to kill her.

Deputies Fight.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 17.—Two deputies, Robert Kerr and Frank Anderson, employed as guardians of the New York and Cleveland Gas Coal company, fought Monday afternoon, and as a result Kerr cannot live. Anderson was in charge of the deputies at Sandy Creek. Kerr, who lives at McKee's Rooks, is a river pilot by occupation. He has served before as a deputy during strikes.

Anderson was in charge of the guards and ordered Kerr to go on the noonday relief. Kerr refused and called Anderson an ugly name. He followed this with a knock-down blow. Anderson arose and was knocked down again. Then he drew his revolver, and, aiming at Kerr's abdomen, fired. The bullet entered Kerr's groin, and he fell fatally wounded. Anderson was placed under arrest by the other deputies and is now a prisoner in the Allegheny county jail.

Will Close All Mines.

Wheeling, W. Va., Aug. 17.—It was decided by the eastern Ohio leaders and miners at a mass meeting Monday at Bellaire, to close all mines, no matter what the circumstances, and no matter how many mill and glass factory workers become idle. There is discontent among the strikers as long as any miners are working, and to put an end to this all miners are ordered out. This will throw 10,000 men idle in the iron and glass works. The action was taken without regard to Ratchford's views.

Judge Jackson has issued an injunction against the strikers at the instance of the New England and West Fairmont companies, identical with the ones heretofore issued for the Fayette county and Monongahela operators.

Injunction in Illinois.

St. Louis, Aug. 17.—A special to the Republic from Cairo, Ill., says: Judge A. K. Vickars granted an injunction Monday at Murphysboro commanding the itinerant strikers to desist from trespassing on the grounds or interfering in any way with the employes of the Muddy Valley Mining & Manufacturing company, the Muddy Valley mines, and also from entering on the lands of W. P. Halliday.

Five Waterspouts in Lake Erie.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 13.—A strange phenomenon was seen by residents of this city at about eight o'clock Thursday morning. Five dark and enormous waterspouts were seen far out in the lake, moving in an easterly direction. One of these whirling waterspouts went traversing the distance from the western horizon, where they were first sighted by the lookout at the life saving station, to the eastern horizon, where it finally disappeared or struck the shore, in 15 minutes. Two struck the shore near the foot of Wilson avenue, while the other three pursued their easterly course down the lake. The largest spout struck the shore at the foot of Coe street with terrible force. The large gate of the Avery Stamping company was twisted from its hinges and the large timbers scattered in every direction. The shipping department of this plant is now being repaired and a large section of the roof was taken off. Windows were broken and several large sections of the roofs of surrounding sheds were blown off.

Spanish Spy Hanged.

Jacksonville, Fla., Aug. 13.—A special to the Citizen from Key West with late Havana advices states that a Spanish spy, Miguel Besta, was hanged without trial by Baldomero Acosta, a prominent Cuban leader. Besta had been employed by Weyler to visit Acosta's camp and assassinate him. News of his mission preceeded him, however, and on reaching the camp his execution was ordered. Besta had a bloody record as a professional spy and having been instrumental in sending many Cubans to prison and death.

Statistics of Immigration.

Washington, Aug. 13.—Statistics prepared at the treasury department show that 283,832 immigrants came over last year and brought $3,541,241 with them, an average of about $15 per head. The Germans were more thrifty and possessed more money than immigrants from other countries. They brought over with them about $38 a head. There were 22,533 immigrants from that country, and the total money brought with them was $858,128.

ASSASSIN SENTENCED.

Anarchist Who Killed Canovas Will Be Garroted.

Madrid, Aug. 17.—Michel Angiolli, the anarchist assassin of Premier Canovas del Castillo, who was tried by court-martial Sunday at Vergara, was found guilty and was sentenced to death. Upon hearing the sentence Angiolli turned deathly pale and had to be assisted from the courtroom. Angiolli will be garroted within the prison.

Angiolli, in the course of the statement, said that he left Foggia in October, 1885, and went to Marseilles and Barcelona, where he took the name of Jose Santos. At first he had no thought of becoming an anarchist, but while at Corininia he began to be interested in anarchist doctrines. He then returned to Marseilles, and after his expulsion from that city he went to Belgium and London, where he spent most of his time in the society of anarchists. When the execution took place at Barcelona on May 4 of five of the anarchists convicted of participation in the bomb outrage at the feast of Corpus Christi, he conceived the idea of assassinating Canovas. Without seeking an accomplice he proceeded to Spain and carried out the resolution. Angiolli went on to say that the passion for vengeance led him to commit the crime. As he was unacquainted with the manufacture of explosives he used the revolver.

The public prosecutor described the crime as "premeditated murder," and asked the court to impose the death penalty.

MEXICO'S TROUBLE.

Serious Financial and Commercial Situation Confronts the Country.

City of Mexico, Aug. 17.—Exchange on New York rose Monday on the fresh drop in silver to 131, and in some cases 140 was asked. Bankers were in doubt as to what rate to make in view of the condition of the silver market. Dealings were nominal. Exchanges on London went to 21¼ pence, the lowest on record, and implying for this government, in meeting the interest on its sterling debt, a loss at the rate of $2,000,000 per annum. The government can meet this loss by economies and by using the surplus funds, but bankers here say the time has come when something must be done, and the debt should pay a lower rate of interest than six per cent., and also that Mexico is entitled to relief in view of the punctual payment of her gold interest under trying circumstances. It is not to be denied a very anxious sentiment prevails, as the people have come to expect a still further decline in the value of silver, and many predict it will be forced to a point where the dollar will be worth 30 cents in gold. Importations will be generally reduced and all the interests of business except exports will be affected. The commercial crisis is hardly expected, as merchants were not, as a rule, owing heavily abroad. The government and the country are confronting a serious situation, which is the worst for many years.

A RACE RIOT.

Bloody Battle Between Whites and Negroes in Arkansas.

Little Rock, Ark., Aug. 16. — The bloodiest race riot that has occurred in Arkansas in months took place at Palarm station, 30 miles from Little Rock, late Saturday evening. Three men are dead, another fatally wounded and two others badly injured. The dead are: Harrison Kerr, a negro, shot all to pieces; Charles Peters, colored, killed outright; Charles Andry, shot through the heart. The seriously injured are: J. T. Clark, Jr., a telegraph operator, shot through the shoulder, probably fatally; R. D. Owens, white, deputy sheriff of Perry county, shot through the groin, seriously wounded.

Owens, a deputy sheriff from Perry county, had a warrant for Harrison Kerr, a negro, charged with murder. When he attempted to make the arrest at Palarm Kerr opened fire on the officer. The first shot struck Owens in the groin, and the bullet, striking silver in the trousers pocket, glanced and inflicted a serious wound. The money in Owens' pocket probably saved his life. Andry and Clark went to Owens' assistance and five more negroes joined in with Kerr. A pitched battle ensued in which over 50 shots were fired.

Brutally Slain.

Philadelphia, Aug. 17.—William C. Wilson, aged about 55 years, proprietor of Wilson's circulating library at No. 1119 Walnut street, was brutally murdered Monday night in his place of business. The crime was evidently committed by thieves, who deliberately lay in wait for their victim and, after murdering him, accomplished their purpose of robbery. The weapon used was a heavy hammer, which crushed through Wilson's skull. The murderers had also drawn a towel tightly around the throat of their victim, strangling him. After looting the place of all money that may have been there they made their escape without leaving a clew to their identity.

Justice Field's Record.

Washington, Aug. 17. — Justice Stephen J. Field, of the United States supreme court, on Monday established the record for longest service on that bench. Until to-day the service of Chief Justice John Marshall had been the longest in the history of the court, covering 34 years. With to-day Justice Field's service exceeds that of Marshall. He was appointed in 1863 by President Lincoln, and is now in his eighty-first year. He has reached the age of retirement, but prefers to remain in active service on the bench, and at the supreme court rooms it is said there is no present indication that he will retire.

Killed His Mother.

Galveston, Tex., Aug. 17.—At an early hour Monday morning Mrs. Kate Gallagher, for 12 years a school-teacher in this city, who lived with her son Virgil at Thirteenth and K streets, was found with her throat cut from ear to ear and the body charred beyond recognition. After killing her the murderer set fire to the bed. Virgil, the 20-year-old son of the murdered woman, has been arrested and confesses he committed the crime to get money to spend on a variety actress. The crime was deliberately planned and executed.

Census of the Veterans.

Washington, Aug. 17.—F. A. Vanderlip, assistant secretary of the treasury, has ordered a census of the old soldiers, soldiers' widows and army nurses in the employ of the treasury department throughout the country. The object is to know how many of this class are in the treasury service and where they are at work.

A SENSATIONAL LEAP.

September Wheat Makes a Gain of Six Cents in Two Days.

Chicago, Aug. 13.—September wheat sold from 82⅝ up to 84½ cents on the board of trade Thursday, and at the close it broke to 83⅛ cents, a net advance of 1⅝ cents over Wednesday's closing price. Within two days September wheat gained nearly 6 cents and No. spring cash wheat is selling at a premium of 3 cents over the September option. Excitement was intense on the board at the opening. Buying orders were flashed over the wires as fast as the operator could get them from the receiver, and the whole country, and especially eastern exporters, was buying everything offered. The bull clique which ran wheat up from 65 to 78 cents and cleared $600,000 by the operation descended on the wheat pit and is credited with having bought 6,700,000 bushels.

Scarcity of wheat to satisfy mature contracts is regarded as the primary reason for the second great spurt in wheat during the present season. The movement of spring wheat, which is already partially harvested, has been mostly toward empty bins of millers who have been compelled to shut down for the want of wheat to grind. This movement was expected to go eastward for export, and the unforseen contingency caught the trade napping.

Laboring under the impression that they will see the market advance still higher, the farmers are also said to be stacking their wheat. Forecasters insist that these reserves will be piled upon the markets suddenly, and then the boom will break and wheat will go down to 75 cents. Robert Lindblom insists that if wheat slumps to 75 cents it will recover and even touch the $1 mark.

FOUGHT WITH SWORDS.

Duel Between Count of Turin and Prince Henri of Orleans.

Paris, Aug. 16.—The count of Turin and Prince Henri of Orleans fought a duel with swords at five o'clock Sunday morning in the Bois de Marechaux Vancresson. M. Leontieff acted as umpire. The fighting was most determined and lasted 26 minutes. There were five engagements, of which two were at close quarters. Prince Henri received two serious wounds in the right shoulder and the right side of the abdomen. The count of Turin was wounded in the right hand. Prince Henri was taken to the residence of the Duc de Chartres and received medical attendance.

The seconds of Prince Henri of Orleans was M. de Leontieff, governor general of the equatorial provinces of Abyssinia, and M. Raoul Mourichon. The count of Turin's were Gen. Count Avagadro de Quinto and Marquis Carlo di Ginori.

The count of Turin, considering the letters of Prince Henri of Orleans to the Figaro offensive to the Italian army, wrote to him on July 6, demanding a retraction. This letter could not be answered until August 11, the day of the arrival of Prince Henri in France. The prince replied to the count's demand by telegram, maintaining the right of a traveler to record his experiences.

HOPEFUL SIGNS.

Encourage the Belief in Approach of Prosperity.

New York, Aug. 14.—R. G. Dun & Co., in their weekly review of trade, say:

"Every city reporting this week notes increase in trade, and nearly all bright crop prospects. The great change in business is emphasized by the presence of a multitude of buyers from all parts of the country, by their statements of the situation at their homes and more forcibly yet by the heavy purchases they are making. But the customary signs of prosperity are not lacking. The strong rise in stocks, the growth of bank clearings and railroad earnings, the heavy speculation in many products, but most of all in wheat, have made the week one of surpassing interest even to those who best remember the upward rush in 1879.

"Even the demand for corn, by greatly exceeding last year's, shows that foreign anxieties are serious, for 5,510,135 bushels have been exported in two weeks from Atlantic ports, against 2,514,428 last year. The price has advanced 1.12 cents, notwithstanding enormous stocks being brought over. The urgency of French buying of wheat, reports that Russia will stop exports in order to keep supplies for itself and continued shipments from the Pacific to countries usually having a surplus make even the largest estimates of probable supplies not too great for the possible demand.

"In all the great industries a large demand for products appears, with strong speculation in materials and in intermediate products. In the iron and steel branch starting of many works after settlement of wages keeps prices low and even depresses some, but the fact that the demand is growing leads to heavy purchases of iron ore."

WEYLER RESIGNS.

Spanish Commander in Cuba Said to Have Given Up.

Havana, Aug. 14.—It is learned on what seems to be the best authority that Capt. Gen. Weyler has sent his resignation to Madrid. This report is generally believed to be true. There is no doubt that the resignation of Gen. Weyler is due to the assassination of Senor Canovas del Castillo, the premier of Spain, through whose personal wishes Capt. Gen. Weyler was retained in Cuba.

Damaging Storms.

New York, Aug. 17.—Reports from up the state tell of much damage done by lightning during Monday's storm. The most serious loss was at Copenhagen, Lewis county, where Plankinton Nellis' sawmill, valued at $20,000, was destroyed. A cyclone passed over the eastern end of Fulton county, three farmhouses and many barns and outbuildings being completely demolished. Many people sought refuge in their cellars. Mrs. Robinson and son, who lived near Broad Albin, ran from the house when they saw the storm approaching and threw themselves on the ground behind the barn. The structure was blown down and both were seriously injured.

Requiem Mass for Canovas.

Madrid, Aug. 14.—A requiem mass for the repose of the soul of the late prime minister of Spain, Senor Canovas del Castillo, was celebrated Friday morning. The funeral was a most touching and solemn ceremony. All the troops of the garrison lined the route along which the cortege moved, the flags were lowered and the public buildings, embassies, consulates and clubs were heavily draped with crape. More than 1,000 wreaths were deposited in the death chamber.

Congressman Wright Found Dead.

North Adams, Mass., Aug. 16.—Ashley B. Wright, congressman from the First Massachusetts district, was found dead in his home Saturday evening by his wife. He had been out for a drive and when he returned lay down on a couch. Mr. Wright died of heart failure.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Cut Down.

In the expense bills of the state institutions, which were passed by the state auditor recently, was one of $13,611.60 for the building of a new cell room at St. Cloud. It was cut materially, however, when it came to the cash payment, as one bill in the item was $12,276.75 for something over 16,000 days' employment of convicts, charged at 75 cents a day, which left the actual cash outlay, so far as the current month is concerned, of but $1,334.85. The amount charged for the convicts' labor, will, of course, be credited to the institution in some other fund, as otherwise the cost of the building as charged would be only the cost of material, and the incidental free labor employed.

The Foley Gold Mine.

The Foley Gold Mines Company, operating in the eastern part of the Rainy Lake district, make additional shipments of gold last week, making its total production so far this summer $35,000, done with 10 stamps since April. The company has 20 stamps in its mill, but has been unable to supply them with ore. It is now putting in additional machinery and will run 16 air drills next month. The mine cost, before the mill was put at work, about $225,000.

Want a Lake.

The citizens of Rochester have, this summer, been considering the feasibility of constructing an artificial lake. At a meeting of the common council with the citizens' committee previously appointed, Civil Engineer George W. Cooley, of Minneapolis, made a report of the surveys and an estimate of the cost of three different lakes which might be constructed. Rochester has several streams, in any one of which a lake could be made for $30,000.

Lightning's Work.

Henry Frideen, a farmer living in the vicinity of Rush Point, was in the act of whittling kindling wood for the morning fire. A thunder storm was raging at the time, and in the twinkling of an eye the knife was wrenched from his hand and hurled point first into the wall of the kitchen where it was imbedded up to the handle. Lightning had entered through the chimney into the stove and played this prank.

Mad Dog.

The village of Dayton was the scene of an exciting mad dog scare. A dog, that was undoubtedly rabid, made a run through the streets, and people sought refuge anywhere, in houses, stores, upon trees, and all managed to keep out of harm's way. It is reported that many dogs were bitten, besides horses and cows. The dog was finally shot.

News in Brief.

PLEASURE.

Let me go now—the sun is in the west,
The day is done, the feast, the song, the jest—
Let me go now, for now is time to rest.

Loud was the viol and the dancing blithe—
No dancer of them all so fair and lithe—
So said the mower, leaning on his scythe.

Then to his task, our gayety forgot,
Reaped grass and flowers as though he heard us not;
And I, as weary, envy now his lot.

No cloud was in my sky from sun to sun;
And yet in all the hours no work was done;
Not even the right to rest me have I won.

Oh, mower, far and near the winds are sweet
With the deep swaths that fell around thy feet;
Strong rest to thee comes gladly, as is meet.

Thou who hast won with toil the heart to pray,
Remember me, who danced, whose heart was gay,
So my to-morrow be not as to-day!

AN AWAKENING.

IT WAS two hours past midnight and a January storm was raging. New York lay a foot under the snow which had been falling all day and night, only to give place to an icy rain. The streets were deserted by all save the guardians of the peace, and even they sought shelter wherever they could, secure in the belief that on such a night they were safe from detection by the chance patrolman. The clogged gutters afforded no outlet, and rivers of water ran over the mounds of snow and gathered in pools in the footprints made early in the evening by hurrying crowds of workers eager to reach their homes.

At the desk of one of the largest and most luxurious hotels stood a young man, fashionably attired, leaning partly on one arm, with his face turned toward the door. Near him stood the clerk, and they were engaged in that semiconfidential chat so usual between men of their habits. All life in the vast caravansary was hushed under the dreary, sodden sound of the rain as it drove its way into the snow.

Suddenly one of the doors leading to the street swung in a little, and what seemed but a gray bundle of wet rags flashed through and disappeared behind a huge hall lounge beside the radiator. Despite the rapidity with which it came and vanished, neither the eye of the clerk or that of his companion failed to observe it; nor were they at a loss to understand what it was. An ejaculation somewhat profane escaped the lips of the clerk as his hands instinctively came down upon the bell, and the almost unconscious "Front!" came as though jerked from his lips.

The young man, on the contrary, straightened himself up, and a smile, caused either by the irritation of the clerk or by a chance thought of his own, broke over his face. The hall boy who was running to obey the summary command of the clerk was stopped by a backward nod of the head and words: "I'll attend to this!" The young man then proceeded down the hall toward the door and came within view of the bundle, which proved to be a boy of six or seven years of age.

The child was sitting bolt upright, fast asleep, with his little legs, stiff from the cold, extended straight out along the floor, and his hands clasped together in friendly embrace in his lap. His hat, which had fallen from his head, lay beside him, and his long wet hair hung straight down over his face, almost shutting out from view the closed eyelids. The little figure was rigid, and the young man stood for one moment in absolute amazement as he realized the suddenness with which this forsaken waif of the streets had found repose in sleep.

He had been accustomed to seeing these boys about the great city, in all places and at all hours of the night, finding shelter wherever they could, and had never given them a single serious thought. Now, as he stood there in the quietude of that night, looking down on that little, silent, storm-beaten figure, a realization of the extremes of life seemed to burst upon him. He dropped into a chair, his first impulse being to sit there until morning, if necessary, a silent guardian of the sleeping boy, but, as he realized the saturated condition of the child's clothing and his need of a change, he reached over reluctantly and gently shook the little shoulder.

At length the eyelids quivered, and finally opened, disclosing a pair of large, sleepy, blue eyes in mute appeal for rest. For one instant their eyes met and then the young man, with a single hurried glance round, as though he was about to do something wrong, suddenly snatched the child from the floor, placed him upon his knee, in utter disregard of consequences, and inquired if he was hungry.

Amazement seemed to hush articulation.

The silent answer came in an affirmative nod of the little head and a brightening of the eyes.

A secluded corner of the dining-room was sought, and an order given, with the confidence of an old habitue, for anything and everything the kitchen could afford at that late hour of night, now well into morning.

For some time after the soup was served the little fellow sat in wonder, gazing unblinkingly at his benefactor. Suddenly he reached over and touched him.

"What is it? What do you want?" asked the young man.

"Jest wanted to know if yer wuz dere!" answered the boy, sheepishly. "Is it all rite, or is it jest one of dem dreams?"

A burst of loud and happy laughter came from the young man as he gave assurance that this time it was no dream, and, reaching over, helped the first spoonful of soup; then he dropped into silent contemplation, as he viewed a most ferocious and indiscriminate attack upon everything the table afforded.

Sense of an obligation never before suspected began to take possession of him and the problem of how to deal with it kept him silent, as he watched the food disappear in marvelously large quantities.

"Why didn't you go home to-night?" he asked, when he thought time could be found for an answer.

"Got na hum!"

"Haven't you a father or a mother?"

"Fadder. Mudder ded."

"Where are your brothers and sisters?"

"Onlee got sister."

"Where is she? How large is she?"

"She's littler en me. Tuk her to de priest's house an' run!"

"Where is your father?"

"Dun no. Drunk!"

"Well, what do you do? Where do you sleep?"

"Under Tiger's shed. Down dere in Dixon's alley."

"Yer see," continued the boy, confidentially, gradually thawing out under the gentle influence of light, heat and food. "Tiger keeps de dogs, an' Jimmie an' me, we jest creep in too, an' dey keeps us warm."

"Who is Jimmie?"

"Jimmie's me pard!"

"Does Tiger ever give you anything to eat?"

"Yer rite! W'en he ain't full he t'rows us bones same as de dogs!"

"What does he do when he is drunk?"

"We dust, yer bet! Yer wouldn't like ter meet Tiger w'en he's drunk—he rears and charges—whew! Well, yer see, sur, de shed got busted ternite an' I wuz huntin' fur a place an' suthin' made me chase in 'ere."

"Where is Jimmie?"

"Dunno; ef he's in luck he's in de hum!"

"How much does it cost to get a bed in the home?"

"Ten cents; yer see, luck went agin me terday. Two dagoes—big fellers," and the blue eyes grew as large as though illustrating the size of the enemies, "eum and swiped me stand an' punched me, see, an' I jest dropped ne papers down to fite 'em, and' de odder dago grabbed 'em an' run. But I'll git square wid dem dagoes!" he added, meditatively.

"How?"

"I'll git Tiger sum time w'en he ain't woozy ter cum down ter de stand; he'll git away wid 'em, see!"

"Well, here's a dime. Run down to the home and go to bed. Stay there to-morrow morning until I come to see you. Maybe I would like to be a side partner of yours and Jimmie's."

"Hully gee, tanks!" and without waiting for further persuasion the boy ran out into the bleak night.

The clerk gazed at the young man with a cynical smile.

"I could do that 20 times a night if I liked," he said, coldly; "it does not help them any."

"Just think, though, of the good it does me," returned the young man, carelessly; "I am thoroughly selfish, I admit."

"There are plenty of societies for them," continued the clerk. "This promiscuous giving only pauperizes them."

"We all need a lift sometimes, over hard places. This problem of helping the poor has never yet been solved, and never will be until there is more practice of the comradeship and brotherhood of which we hear so much. Everyone believes in the theory; it is beautiful to talk about, but how many live it?"

"What would you have? Society divided into two classes, the slummer and the slummed?"

"That might be preferable to the two classes into which it is divided at present. Moral support is what the poor need—not so much money as friends and friendly advice. Some one to put them on their feet and stand by them until they are strong enough to stand alone. But it is so easy to write a check and hand it to the minister; then our conscience is free to curse every beggar we see. Well, guess I'll be off. Good night!" and, lighting a fresh cigar and turning up the collar of his large and comfortable ulster, the young man departed.

A block from the hotel his attention was attracted to a small figure in the shelter of a doorway. He stopped intuitively and, walking toward it, recognized the boy from whom he had parted about 15 minutes before.

He looked at him in speechless surprise.

The boy, young as he was, realized the suspicion with which he was regarded.

"Please, sur!" he exclaimed, eagerly, "I wuz goin' ter de hum, an' I found Jimmie here, see—an' Jimmie wuz sick, he wuz cryin,' an' I guv him de dime, and tole 'em ter go ter de hum."

The man looked sternly at him and still made no remarks. "'Deed, sur, it's true, dead true. See—here's Jimmie's coat; he left it fur me and I wuzn't hungry, an' he ain't had nothin' ter eat all day."

He unwrapped a ragged old coat from about his bare legs and held it up in triumph.

"'Deed, sur, ye kin go an' see."

"Here, you young reprobate, how far is it to that home you talk about?"

"Just down dere—two blocks, sur."

"Here is a quarter which I think will enable you to take all the houseless people you may meet on the way, and also yourself, to the home. Now run, and do not let the fact of your having had one dinner debar you from ever eating another. Remember, I will see you and Jimmie in the morning."

The young man resumed his struggle through the snow. The night had lost all its terrors for him. His mind absorbed in the whirl of ideas set in action by this second meeting, left him unconscious of the elements. He thought only of the light and happiness those few pennies had brought out of the storm and darkness, and to one who had long been in the habit of squandering large sums in pleasures that did not please and amusements that did not amuse it was a revelation.

Suddenly he stopped. His face turned unconsciously upward, as though he was seeking some ray of light out of the blackness of the heavens. For one moment he stood so; then his hands went deeper into his pockets, and his arms came closer to his sides, as he started ahead again, with the quick and firm step of sudden determination.

Had he a gleam of light?

PERMANENT ROADS.

How to Build Them and the Materials to Be Used.

The best road construction requires right material. The three principal things are stones, gravel and clay. Each town where suitable stones are plenty should own one or more stone crushers. Crushed stone forms the very best material for the foundation of a good road. Gravel is next in importance, and clay can be profitably used on sand, and in some instances sand on clay formation.

The lack of proper drainage in the roadbed is the cause of a large part of the poor roads in the country. Good drainage of the roadbed is as important as the use of good material. A substratum constantly gorged with water from hidden springs can never be depended upon to build on and afford a dry and solid road. The first essential is to get rid of the water on the surface and below it.

The right policy of road improvement contemplates more or less permanent improvements upon town and county roads each year. The fault of the district system and the appropriated labor method is that only temporary work is done, so, by the time the annual round of repairs is gone through with, the money appropriated is so far exhausted that an outlay for permanent improvements is not warranted; whereas if a competent commissioner had the roads in charge, certain portions of the worst places which now call for annual repairs should be permanently made over, even if it takes a higher appropriation yearly for a few years. Take, for instance, a stretch of road where the soil is springy, or for any cause the drainage is imperefect. No permanent improvements can be made in such places without proper drainage is effected.

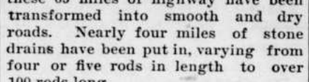

FIG. 1.

To do this adequately open a ditch four feet or more wide and three and a half to four feet deep in the center of the travel. Fill this with rough stones, placing the first ones thrown in so as to form an open drain; fill in the stone till within a foot of the top, using the smallest stones for the top; if a crusher is in use the coarser of these, which is best, then cover with evergreen boughs or straw and finish with gravel. The idea is shown in Fig. 1. The important thing is that these drains always lead to and end at an open culvert. This is an effectual remedy for "honey pots" or slough holes when the frost is leaving the ground in spring.

The town of Winthrop, in this state, is noted for its good roads. Nearly

CRUSHED STONE ON CLAY.

30 years ago the town discarded the district system, and elected a road commissioner who has held the place to the present time. From almost impassable highways in the spring of the year, that is, over certain portions, these 65 miles of highway have been transformed into smooth and dry roads. Nearly four miles of stone drains have been put in, varying from four or five rods in length to over 100 rods long.

Gravel forms the best material for road surface. Sand has no use in the roadbed except in clay or kindred formation. A clay foundation is one of the worst for good and permanent road building. Clay packs in dry weather but softens up easily during rainfall. Successful work in making a solid and durable roadbed on a clay foundation has been done in this town. The first section was put down two years ago and thus far affords a dry, solid, and apparently durable roadbed. For years the practice had been, annually and as often as rains and large amount of travel rendered the road muddy and uneven, to haul on crushed stone and keep the surface fairly smooth and even. Two years ago the surface was covered with crushed stone three or four inches deep, and thoroughly pressed down with the steam roller. On top of this screened stone and coarse gravel was placed two inches deep and rolled. A finishing coat of ground granite, an inch or more in depth when rolled, gave a hard and even surface. The roadway is some 30 feet from ditch to ditch. Such roads are costly to build, of course, but the universal opinion among men of good judgment in these matters seems to be that such thorough work pays, and is the cheapest in the end. See Fig. 2.

In using the road machine on the country roads the proper thing to do is, first, to run the plow along the outer limit of the gutter or ditch. This gives a straight ditch and loosens up the soil so that two horses will carry the machine about as easily as four will without the plowing. As a rule, the travel of the road should not be disturbed by plow or machine where a fairly good roadbed has previously been secured. Neither should the soil and wash of the ditches be carried up by the machine and placed on the surface. Soil makes soft road. This should always be covered in deeply in some way, and let the hard pan or substratum form the top.

In some places it is necessary to remove the top soil a foot or more in depth and fill in stone. Such places frequently occur where it is not practicable to drain otherwise, and when the soil is retentive and heavy, freezing deeply gives a soft and muddy surface in spring. It is well to cut down squarely just beyond the wheel ruts, a foot or more and let the soil form a shoulder to hold the stone. Form the ditches upon the sides rather shallow so as not to remove the support to the shoulder which holds the stone from sliding from the roadbed. See Fig. 3.

Stones from the fields and useless wall upon the roadside may be used at the bottom, finishing off with small cobbles and crushed stone with a good coat of gravel over all.

It is about impossible to make satisfactory roads on clay without in some way providing drainage, so contrived that the least possible water will remain in the material which forms the travel of the road. Deep side ditches, a narrow roadbed with a high crown, thus making the water level 20 inches to two feet below the travel is one way to form a very fair road out of very poor material. This is improved by a mingling of sand, gravel or "shingle," with the clay to such proportions as the readily available supply will admit—even to one-half. This commingled gravel or other solid substance should extend at least a foot below the surface to bind the clay and withstand heavy travel.—L. F. Abbott, in Ohio Farmer.

KEEPING UP CALVES.

Indoor Summering After June Has Great Advantages.

The practice of keeping calves housed the first summer of their lives is becoming more and more general each year among progressive dairymen and beef raisers. Those who are endeavoring to find profit in either of those branches of stock raising are finding out that protection from heat, flies and dried pasture is about the cheapest and most effective plan to adopt. No doubt one principal reason why more calves are not housed, says Farmers' Advocate, is that it would involve a certain amount of regular labor in the shape of "chores" which so many object to in the summer season; but unless we take a lively, practical and self-sacrificing interest in our business in these times we cannot hope to reach the goal of greater profits in our business. The wide-awake and enterprising competitors who do things because they should be done and not draw the line at a point where an undertaking adds to or takes from a little of present personal comfort, are the ones that wear the hopeful expression to-day and declare that the times are mending. There is no question in the minds of those who have tried both plans but that indoor summering has great advantages over pasturing after the third week in June. So far as turning the calves out a few weeks on the fresh pasture before the heat and flies become harmful is concerned, there can be no greater disadvantage, provided the calves are not less than six or seven weeks old and the pasture is abundant and of good quality. Perfect liberty at this time, along with fresh grass or clover, skim milk, and a lick of oat chop, oil cake, or the like, will start the youngsters in the way to be profitable feed consumers. So long as these favorable conditions exist in the pasture lot there is no advantage in making changes, but when the time comes that a cool, dark stable and mown clover or oats and tares would give the calves greater comfort, just at that time should such conditions be administered. This is more particularly applicable to calves that are to become beefers, because we want to sell for money some time in the future every pound of gain our feed has made and not allow any of it to be lost after being once beneath the skin. With dairy calves rapid development, when of a muscular character, is very important. A stunted animal is always much less profitable than it would have been had its growth been continuous, because its digestion will be stronger and it will become a larger, better-looking beast, with greater capacity for service.

MARKING THE MILK.

It Enables One to See at a Glance Just When to Skim.

Where the milk is set in shallow pans it is wise to mark each day's milk, as "Tuesday morning," "Tuesday night," etc. In this way one can see at a glance just when to skim, and does not have to stop to reckon up the number of pans used each day. It is also often desired to mark a particular cow's milk, in order to observe its quality. A label and method of attachment is shown in the cut. A strip of pasteboard has its end bent over and wire inserted as shown. The fold is glued down, thus holding the wire. Bend the double wire and hang it over the pan's edge.—N. Y. Tribune.

ORCHARD AND GARDEN.

Two kittens in the garden are equal to a small cyclone.

No top on radish or other plant, no root. At least that is our experience.

Build a structure like a corn crib, with shelves in it, for drying onions.

Apply soap to the bark of trees now and it will lessen the number of borers.

The aster should be in every garden. It blooms just when bloom is most desirable.

California, says Secretary Wilson, will grow the oak whose bark is the cork of commerce.

An arbor frame covered with a vine—the moon flower, for instance—is very ornamental.

Strong lime water will kill the radish maggot and its eggs if brought into contact with them.

Barnyard maunre is best for roses applied when they are in bloom or at the beginning of winter.

Diseased fruit is as unfit for food as diseased meat, unless it is cooked. Cooking destroys all germs.

Onions respond profitably to an application of hen droppings if it is made just as soon as the seed is sown.

The grape vine often runs its roots to the surface, and if any of them get above ground, the vine will decline.

Better than wrapping the ends of whiffletrees, when cultivating the orchard, is to use a gentle horse and have the whiffletrees very short. — Western Plowman.

Cost of Maintaining Roads.

The cost of maintaining a public highway in England is roughly estimated by the authorities at $90 per mile per annum; in France, $165, and in Austria, $190 per mile per annum.

SUICIDE AND THE SEXES.

More Frequent with Men—Will Increase with Women.

At the present day man is much more prone to suicide than woman. This is true of man in regard to epilepsy, crime and other marked signs of degeneration. But it has been observed that as woman approaches man in her mode of life she also becomes more familiar with those abnormal conditions which have previously been peculiar to men. The comparative immunity of woman from self-destruction in the past has depended greatly upon the relatively less harassing part she has taken in the struggle for life. To-day it is different. Now woman occupies the fields of art, literature, finance, and even politics, and, as she goes deeper into these vocations, she must expect to suffer the consequences. Already it is noticeable that feminine suicide is not now entirely due to the sentimental causes of disappointed love, desertion and jealousy, but to those trials of a more material order, such as have led men to the act of self-destruction.

Imitation far exceeds any other of what are called "trivial causes" of suicide, and asserts itself more in woman than in man. It is much more common than is supposed. When self-destruction becomes epidemic, as it sometimes does, its prevalence very largely depends upon imitation. It is said that many years ago the wail of Thomas Hood over "The One More Unfortunate" brought many a sentimental person to a watery grave in the Thames. And in our own day the vivid representation of suicide upon the stage under conditions appealing forcibly to the imagination has been known to be followed by the self-imposed death of persons whose conditions resembled closely those of the suicide in the drama.

Attempts have been made to prove that climate has an effect upon the rate of suicide, but these attempts have never done more than show that the temperate regions have the highest ratio. This, of course, is not due to the climate, but to the more complicated civilization, the greater physical and mental wear and the more extensive interference with natural laws met with in the temperate regions. While it is true that climate exerts but little influence over the rate of suicide, the seasons, on the contrary, do strongly affect it. The popular belief is that suicide is more frequent during the months of winter and spring. This, however, is incorrect. Cold, wet, damp weather does not, as so many people suppose, promote despondency and suicide. Strange as it may seem, at that period of the year when the sufferings of the poor and the sick are least, when employment is more readily obtained, when the pleasure of living should be at its highest, suicide is most frequent. May, June and July, the months of song and sunshine in all countries, give the greatest number of self-murders. For this there is no satisfactory explanation, unless we accept that of the medical fraternity, which is that during the period of early summer the organism is working at a higher tension, every function of mind and body is more active than at any other period of the year, and consequently there is greater liability to sudden physical and mental collapse. — Popular Science Monthly.

B. & O. Improvements.

The work of straightening the track and reducing the grade at Tabbs Station on the second division of the Baltimore & Ohio railroad was recently completed, and the first train to use the new line was No. 1, the New York and St. Louis flyer. A heavy grade and three bad curves have been eliminated by this work. A mile east, at Meyer's Hole, a similar improvement has also been completed after months of work. Several reverse curves and a nasty and dangerous dip are done away with at this point. Near Myer's Hole, at Tablers, the alignment of the track is being materially changed, and, as in the other two improvements, bad grades and sharp, annoying curves are being removed. This part of the work will be done in sixty days and then a series of very dangerous places will have been entirely removed. This work in its entirety means the hauling of several additional cars in each freight train, besides reducing the danger of derailments to almost nothing. The second division, running from Cumberland to Brunswick, will soon be in first-class condition and more cheaply operated than ever.

Tells Her Experience With Ovaritis.

A dull, throbbing pain, accompanied by a sense of tenderness and heat, low down in the side, with an occasional shooting pain, indicates inflammation.

On examination it will be found that the region of pain shows some swelling. This is the first stage of ovaritis, inflammation of the ovary. If the roof of your house leaks, my sister, you have it fixed at once; why not pay the same respect to your own body?

Do you live miles away from a doctor? Then that is all the more reason why you should attend to yourself at once, or you will soon be on the flat of your back.

You need not, you ought not to let yourself go, when one of your own sex holds out the helping hand to you, and will advise you without money and without price. Write to Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass., and tell her all your symptoms. Her experience in treating female ills is greater than any other living person. Following is proof of what we say:

"For nine years I suffered with female weakness in its worst form. I was in bed nearly a year with congestion of the ovaries. I also suffered with falling of the womb, was very weak, tired all the time, had such headaches as to make me almost wild. Was also troubled with leucorrhœa, and was bloated so badly that some thought I had dropsy. I have taken several bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and several of her Blood Purifier, and am completely cured. It is a wonder to all that I got well. I shall always owe Mrs. Pinkham a debt of gratitude for her kindness. I would advise all who suffer to take her medicine."—Mrs. Annie Curtis, Ticonderoga, N. Y.

BUFFALO GAZETTE

DELANO, FRIDAY, AUG. 20, 1897.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE VILLAGE OF DELANO.

DELANO DIARY

—The Great Norther has made the following change in its time table for this place:

Morning train East,	6:20.
" " West,	10:36.
Evening train East,	4:03.
" " West,	9:00.

—T. Shaw and F. Knoll are to have their residences repaired and made more convenient in the near future.

—Judge Tarbox, Clerk of Court Vorse and Deputy Sheriff Anderson held court to grant citizens papers on Tuesday.

--This has been an unusually busy week for us. We have moved; and the GAZETTE now comes out from its own office.

—The Eagle Printing Company has purchased a ruling machine which they expect to have in place in a short time. when they look for their share of ruled work.

—Through a mistake last week the name of Charles H. Vorse got into the place where L. M. Maxfield's should have been as secretary of the Delano Board of Education.

—Nobody about here seems anxious enough to get gold to risk their carcasses, uninsured, going to Klondyke after it. They will probably have as much at the end of the year, as if they went.

--The band open air concert in the park last night was finer than ever; the vocal numbers adding novelty to the entertainment. The audience is large every Thursday evening and seems to thoroughly appreciate the music.

—The GAZETTE now has a home of its own, a new building 20x24 has been built on the lot, in the rear of Dr. Catlins office. It will be much more convenient and we hope to thrive better than ever; now that prosperity has come.

—Several of our citizens among them John Steffes, stenogropher, visited Howard Lake Tuesday to hear the examination of Wallace Gardner, for complicity with the Boxell murderers. John says Mr. Gardner proved a complete alibi and was dismissed.

--L. M. Meister says he purchased the Hotel by that name for $1,400. He thinks it a great bargain and he says he has the Eagle now just where he wants it. As the Eagle says its men were turned out because they worked there we presume he means on the outside.

—His Honor Mayor Borsch's example in haying up a sign "closed for Sunday" is all right but when John goes on a trip and leaves the sign up until ten o'clock Monday morning we don't advise the balance of our merchants to follow the example quite so long at a time.

—With prices for farm products up we hope the farmers will sell enough to straighten up accounts with us. Several we have had on our books during the depression and while they would have been obliged to sell a lot of grain to pay we waited. Now that it won't take so much to pay we hope they will.

--George P. Schaffer's sale day for woman was a grand success. The store was filled with ladies from far and near. Some wanted to buy, and all wanted a prize. George says he will have to spread his goods awfally for a few days until he can receive a new supply; otherwise his shelves will look bare.

—Watertown is going to have a new printing office. C. G. Halgren is putting up the building 20x30 feet in the rear of his drug store. The Caryer County News, of Waconia, will move over. Teams and men from Watertown will go over to Waconia next Thursday and help move the outfit to its new home. Success to Watertown and its new paper.

—A man minus both legs, with a one horse covered wagon, did a thriving business here Saturday night selling ham sandwiches. He appeared to be an expert in preparing them on his oil stove. He said he came from Minneapolis to the country to do business because most everybody had left the city for the Dokotas or the lakes, that would be likely to patronize him; so he happened round this way.

—It seems as if the county will be obliged to foot an enormous bill for costs in Justice court, and perhaps in District court on account of Delano squabbles this year; and about as small an amount of justice has been dealt out as could be asked for by any one. There really appears little to show for all the time, trouble and bluster; a few fines promptly and firmly dealt out some time ago would, we believe, have obviated much of the jangling.

—The council has not yet ordered the swill barrels; nor hired any one to haul away the refuse materials from hotels, restaurants, and private families, where they are keeping alive cess pools in the streets, alleys, or the premises on which they live. An outbreak of typhoid feyer, diphtheria. or some some such dreaded sequence of such neglect would bring people to an awakening on the subject. It is better to hire the swill hanled away, than the dead citizens. It is more economical to remove the exciting cause of disease than to wait and pay medical and quarentine bills.

—Miss Grace O'Hair now hands out the mail a part of the day.

—The Otto thresher and crew went West Tuesday, to help thresh the golden grain.

--The G N. has a new time card. They don't advertise much so you must keep posted or get left.

--C. G. Roosen is now said to be sole owner and proprietor of the round elevator. Fred Knoll still handles the wheat.

—The Eagle's law contract has been fulfilled and several printers are resting up in hopes of another "phat take."

--Ed Kelsey hauled some of his surplus wheat two years old to market this week. It grades better than this years crop.

—Mr. Lindsley is having his newly purchased corner on 2nd street and Rail Road Avenue fixed up nicely for the post office.

--The Delano Furniture Company constructed our new office building in double quick order during the week past, an we are moved in.

—Sulky plows are growing more and more fashionable in this vicinity as the stumps disappear from the farms. We noticed one leaving town Tuesday.

—The M. E. Sunday School held a picnic at Lake Houey on Wednesday. Some ef the picnicers had a fine time; others got home just after the heavy shower, and it was heavy too.

—Ex-Mayor John Coolen went to court last Tuesday and got out his citizens papers. He is now a full fledged American. Some of the Eagle foreigners, we understand, forgot to attend court. They can't hardly be called full fledged.

—Joseph Leudasher was the first man in with a load of new wheat on Tuesday. It went 54 lbs to the bushel and was damp. Joe didn't want it graded too fine and concluded to dry it for a few days before selling. He says he had 18 to 20 bushels to the acre, of blue stem variety. His oats he pronounces good.

--Jim Hill is subjugating his men with the terriblest kind of a vengence. It is all right for men to obey orders and do their work as their employer wants it done, so long as it is honorable and honest. But, when it comes to "requiring" men to buy caps of the company, at exhorbant prices, and "requiring" the men to wear them, and peddle fresh fish! fresh salmon, packed in ice! straight from Oregon! in opposition to local dealers in meats, fish and game, along the line of road it is "requiring" just a little more humility than goes well with the average American citizen. As a matter of business the American is all right but if it is for "subjugation" never. It looks as bad for J. J. Hill as for the men obliged to do those things or loose their places.

"The Dickens Camp."

A number of our young people and some not so young, improved their time and opportunity by taking a week of recreation, and camping on the beautiful shore on the south side of Lake Sarah.

The party christened their camp "The Dickens Camp" and to each member gave the name of some notable character in some of Dicken's works, among which were "Mr. Pickwick," "Sam Weller," "Jingle," "Mrs. Squeers," "Peggy," "Tommy Freddlers" and to their good natured and always willing landlord they gave the name of "Barchus."

The first part of their stay the weather was fine and the young folks enjoyed themselves immensely, bathing, rowing, and fishing during the day, and around a rousing old camp fire in the evening. The latter part of the week was so stormy, most of the time was spent on the shore but tney found plenty to amuse themselves. They all returned Tuesday evening, having had a most delightful time.

The members were Mrs. McNaughten, Mrs. Parslow, Misses Emma Hollstrom, Annie Parslow, Grace O'Hair, Amanda Erickson, and Stella Davis, and Messrs Roy Wilder, Geo. Kurtz and Fay Parslow.

Visitors, Mr. and Mrs. O'Hair, Grace and Flossie Davis, Marjorie O'Hair, Guy Murphy, Roy Sutton and Victor Jacobs.

Literary Notes.

"The Richest College in America" has its story most interestingly set forth by word and picture in the September number of Demorest's Magazine. It will be a distinct surprise to know that this title is not due any of our best known colleges but is held by one which is doing a great work in a quiet way. The account of it will be attractive to every man and woman interested in American educational life.

County Cullings.

Rev. Genis and J. F. McDonnell, of Waverly, have gone to Scranton, Pa. to attend the National F. M. T. A. convention. Mr. McDonnell is chairman of the Minnesota delegation.

Alley & Culkin is the new Buffalo law firm. They will, doubtless do their share of the law business, of Wright County, and perhaps Billy can keep his grip on the boys along about election time.

HOW A PUZZLL WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, 7 authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

T. J. CATLIN, Publisher and Proprietor

Entered as Second-Class Mail Matter at the Post Office in Delano, Minn

KENNEDY'S OWN for August is No. 12, and completes Vol. 1. It has lived a year, a feat said never to have been accomplished by a Minneapolis magazine before. In entering its second year it bids fair to improve on its already splendid appearance. It is cheap at $1.00 a year.

THE G. A. R. meeting at Buffalo, N. Y. this week, is one of the largest yet. President McKinley headed the procession of old soldiers and was a drawing card. Buffalo is centrally located to several of the states that furnished large numbers of volunteers in the sixties consequently the big turnout.

IT looks to us downright mean for the gold standard advocates, who went so far as to wear yellow ribbons to show what they were voting for last fall to now come around claiming that they passed the Dingley bill and it has made prosperity; when everyone knows it is the demand for grain in the worlds' market that causes wheat to be $1.00 The World's market in this instance seems to be a grand gambling place rather than a legitimate trading place. Options, not wheat, sells high.

FOR some reason or another very little attention seems to be given by the daily press to the coming elections in Ohio, Ky., Iowa and other states. Perhaps the daily press, being nearly all gold standard, can see nothing encouraging to them and think best to keep quiet until elections have been held; then come out and claim, if defeated, that the money question cut no figure in the campaign; that the defeat was entirely due to local causes; or, if victorious, it was simply an endorsement of the Dingley bill.

IF as the Republican protectionists claim, the Dingley bill has caused the price of wheat to rise so much all at once, it is too much power to be in the hands of Congress. When a few men can meet and resolve to make poor people pay millions of dollars into their pockets, simply by making a protective law it is taking advantage of somebody. Wouldn't it be safer and more honorable and honest to everybody to allow supply and demand to regulate prices than for monopolies to gather in all the profit on many things?

WHEAT speculations continue, and prices go up or down several cents almost daily. We don't claim prophetic powers but believe that farmers having wheat threshed will do as well to sell now as to hold it for a rise. Every farmer should read the papers and see for himself what claims of short crops are made. He should then use his own reasoning powers. He should compare the wild stories of shortage of crops with the amount of grain he has in his bins compared with former years. If the truth is being told about our own crops perhaps the stories about other lands are true. If the truth is being stretched about our crops to help influence prices it is likely it is being more stretched about lands at a distance where we are not likely to find out the difference soon. Compare notes and use your own judgement as to selling or keeping your wheat.

THE biggest strike this country has ever had, among coal miners and others, still goes on. Injunctions have been issued to prevent men from doing a good many things they claim a right to do. The strikers are said to be keeping sober, and industriously working with others to prevent work from going on. The operators are said to have threatened to take back no men who hold out longer. Able leaders, among them Eugene V. Debs, are assisting the strikers in getting what they ask for. Rumors of other strikes are heard, but dailies are not saying so very much about the strike. It is a hard matter to know just how it is getting along; but enough has leaked out to give us the impression that a settlement satisfactory to laborers will have to be made before the strike is ended: or some means will again be used on Debs and his co-workers, that will only strengthen them with the laborers while it will weaken the mine owners chances of securing workers. There should be some way of settling difficulties between capital and labor besides strikes and lockouts.

WE acknowledge a polite invitation from. A. G. Bernard, Sec. of the Northern Minnesota Editorial Association to accompany the Association on their annual outing excursion. We are very sorry we can't be there.

WE received, this morning, copies of the state law on the subject of hog cholera, from the State Board of Health This fearful disease has killed off many hogs in the southern part of the state. Our farmers and hog owners should not be caught and loose their hogs by it. The quarentine laws are strict and should be enforced from the first in order to stamp it out.

English Money Taking the Country.

New York, Aug. 19.—It is reported that the present members of the piano manufacturing firm of Steinway & Sons have consummated a deal whereby the extensive business of the concern passes into the hands of an English syndicate. The price paid was $6,000,000.

For a long time the Englishman's money has been steadily at work doing what their arms failed to do; taking the United States. Enlish capital is invested in lands; in flouring mills; in breweries; and in trusts of various kinds in this country. Englishmen make on our own soil, under our protective tariff laws, many things we need. They grind our flour for bread; they make our clothes to wear; they even manufacture beer to becloud the minds of men; and now they are to furnish music for Americans to dance to. If this country cares longer to uphold her Constitution and live up to her Declaration of Independedce, it is about time she was shuking off some of her lethargy and arousing herself to pass a few laws in the interest of the people, and not all for money.

High School Examination Papers.

We are in receipt of the Fourth Annual report of the Inspector of High Schools, for the school year ending July 31, 1897. Mr. Aiton fully explains the difficulty with the examination papers, the low markings of which had been frequently complained of, in the following sentences:

ENGLISH.—Observation throughout the schools and an inspection of several thousand state examination papers lead me to the foregone conclusion that we need to organize a vigorous campaign in all departments of English. I do not know except by inference what showing other states could make, but we do not need to go abroad to ascertain that we are struggling with a vast number of students whose English attainments are unenviable. I am safe in saying that fully one half of our papers are not creditable in point of mechanism and expression, that from ten to twenty per cent. of these papers ought to be rejected as illiterate, while twentyfive per cent. of the whole is perhaps a liberal estimate for the number of papers written in satisfactory manner.

I feel like saying to our schools, whatever else we do this year let us be painstaking, vigilant and decisive in all parts of our English work."

Our pupils ought surely to learn the language of this country. They should be able to express their thoughts on paper. Their papers should be neatly and correctly written. But, when a paper, on mathematics for instance, is presented which shows conclusively that the author knew his subject, happens to have "are" for "is" or some similar error in grammar, he should not be marked down in Arithmetic too much, after he had already been marked in grammar. Each branch should stand on its own merits. Ootherwise an exceptionally good mathematician might fail to pass the examination because he could not use grammar or spell correctly. Mr. Aiton is right, however, that English should be thoroughly learned. His suggestion that each pupil have a dictionary is a good one.

Drunk as a Lord.

A young man who resides in the country, is laboring under the hallucination that in order to appear smart and manly, he must be sporty, was found Saturday night lying on the ground back of the saloon, in a beastly state of intoxication. The young man belongs to a good family; his parents are professors of religion, and they would be greatly shocked when they read this if they had any idea that it referred to their dear boy. The young man is a minor and is not eligible to buy liquor himself, but we do not know that he did. Better stop right now, young fellow, as a second wallow like a hog in the dirt may require The Republican to give your name and then you will find out that it is not a bit cute nor smart.—Weeping Water Republican, (Neb.)

Banker Struble Shot, at Shepherd, Mich., and the Bank Robbed.

DETROIT, Mich., Aug. 21.—A special to the Evening News from Shepherd, Mich., says: Elmer E. Struble, cashier for the Farmers' bank, was shot this morning by unknown robbers, and cannot live. One ball entering near the heart, the other lower down.

Mr. Struble was getting ready to go to Mount Pleasant, about 4 o'clock, and was in the vault when the shots were fired. All the cash in the bank was taken, but the amount is not known.

McGary Takes a Trip to the City of Minneapolis.

INDEPENDENCE, Minn., Aug. 24, '97.

EDITOR BUFFALO GAZETTE:—Last week your correspondent made a trip to Minneapolis by the overland Pumpkinvine route; going by way of Spring Park, Excelsior, Minnetonka Mills, etc. This route makes the distance from my place to Minneapolis a few miles farther; but as I had not been through that part of the country for thirty years or more, my curiosity led me in that direction. The distance from Maple Plain to Spring Park is five or six miles. This is a Saratoga of the West on a small scale. From Spring Park to the ferry is about 2½ miles where the canal is cut through from the upper to the lower lake, where steamers and sail boats pass from one lake to the other, yet it is all lake Minnetonka. The ferry is kept and run by Hennepin county; costing you nothing for ferriage. It consists of a flat boat run by a wire cable and the motive power is two men with grab handles, who pull it from one shore to the other. The canal is about 100 ft. wide. From there to Excelsior is about four miles. From all appearances it looks as if this town might have lost some of its old time prominence since the early days of the fifties, yet there seems to be some life and prosperity in the town. From there we went to Linwood and took dinner at the cottage boarding house kept by Mrs. A. Twombly and under her supervision is a well kept and conducted house. From there we went to Minnetonka Mills. This town, in the early fifties was intended for one of the metropolitans of the West, on account of its valuable water power furnished by the outlet of Lake Minnetonka, but now it is as silent and still as a country grave yard. From there we passed on to Minneapolis and struck a street car line 6 or 8 miles out in the country among the large farmers, and it was a wonder to me what object a corporation could have in running a street car line so far out in the country. There certainly is no money in it, but there might be prosperity. From Minnetonka Mills to Minneapolis is a very fine looking country; with fine looking farms; good roads; with school houses and churches by the way. But I would advise no stranger to take this route to Minneapolis unless he first had a guide board put on his head saying where he wanted to go, and asking the people to give him the right direction, for in all my travels through the country I never have seen so many roads as there is on that route from Maple Plain to Minneapolis and where they all went to was a mystery to me.

The business of the lake seems to be riding on steam boats, sail boats, row boats; catching frogs, pollywogs, and going a fishing, but thousands of people flock to this lake, some for their health, some for pleasure, and some for nothing only to just go, and ride a wheel. But to a fellow whose life has been something like that of the prodigal son, who is strong, robust, and healthy and carries all his capital stock above his shirt collar, in my opinion is not the fellow that would be catching frogs, pollywogs, rowing a boat, and going a fishing; but every person to his liking.

On my route I also struck a load of Indians, or half breeds. They looked to me like full bloods. I suppose they were of the Sioux variety, and in their dusky form I imagined I could see the tracks of the Indian Masacre, of Aug. 18, 1862. No doubt some of their ancestors participated in that dreadful slaughter of life and destruction of property in 1862.

In conclusion, would say, Mr. Editor, that I must hasten, for time is money.

Wheat has struck a fifty cent dollar! And prosperity is hanging on the bushes! No use for the Klondyke nor the Elysian fields of Alaska.

I am still doing business at the same old stand; sometimes fish and sometimes cut bait, but when prosperity has fully come and when every man can sit under his own vine and fig tree with none to molest or make him afraid then I hope to retire to private life and be happy.

Wants to Keep up With Minneapolis.

The activity of Minneapolis in arranging a harvest festival for the entertainment of state fair visitors should be an additional stimulant to St. Paul business men to make strenuous efforts in the direction suggested by the local promoters who have the matter in hand. We should not lose sight of the fact that the state fair is, though a state event, local to St. Paul. Minneapolis overlooks no opportunity to assume an air of superiority, and to claim everything in sight that can be turned to local advantage. Her business men are acute enough to see that large benefits may be derived from the proper entertainment of state fair visitors, and they will make a supreme effort to get as many people as possible to go to Minneapolis. Only by offering something equally attractive can we hope to hold the crowds.—Dispatch.

Among Our Exchanges.

Duluth Herald:—This is an age of injunctions. The business is being carried to such an extreme that there may soon be an uprising of sentiment which will wipe all the power of injunction off the statute books.

St. Cloud Times:—Editor French, of the Monticello Times, who has no brains of his own, thus hits his Republican press brethren who have: "The Times finds more good reading matter in some of the items furnished from room 1, Glover building, than in all the editorial items combined of some of its exchanges."

St. Paul Dispatch:—Tim Byrnes announces through a Minneapolis sheet that he has been enjoying the society and conversation of the president. He did not give McKinley any instructions on appointments at the time, but merely regaled him with gab. And as proof of the foregoing events, he claims to have registered at the same hotel as Mac.

It seems to be conceded by the city press that any gubernatorial candidate who is not acceptable to our United States senators will have very hard sledding, and in the same breath it is announced that the two senators are not in perfect harmony. The idea that the people might have some preferences regarding a gubernatorial candidate, hardly seems to be considered as a possibility.—Sherburne County Star News.

An esteemed local organ of the republican sort is actually getting scared at the "return of prosperity." It says in the course of a long editorial: "The use of wheat flour and bread can be economized to a great extent. Excellent bread or mush can be made from corn meal, and a larger use of vegetables can minimize the consumption of white bread." What does the organ mean by trying to start a boycott against the the farmers' wheat, the minute the farmer begins to see a chance to get half way even?—Times.

A Cry of Distress.

Tipton Advertiser: A wail is going up these dog days from the down trodden bankers and loan companies. People are persisting in paying off their obligations and refusing to borrow again. As a consequence the banks and money centers are compelled to see a part of their capital idle and less interest coming in. The cry comes from all over the middle west, but the farmer with his big stacks and cornfields growing yellow under the kisses of the autumn sun, reads the daily market reports and only smiles.—Ida grove Era (Iowa).

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill.

Mining for gold in California and Colorado has one great advantage over Alaska. You can get there, and can also get back, without calling upon the undertaker.

An Alabama poet has written over a thousand poems, and has never published any of them. That man certainly deserves a big monument from a grateful people.

A St. Louis girl 18 years old has been married twice, divorced twice and secured $5,000 damages from a railway company, all within three months. Nothing very slow about that.

Uncle Sam will have no trouble in enlisting soldiers to go to Alaska, but there is some danger that on their arrival there the orderly will feel lonesome when he calls the roll in the morning.

It is rather singular that so many people are turning up now who knew all along about the Klondike gold fields, but never thought the matter worth while before to say anything about it.

German immigrants to the United States last year brought a per capita in cash of $48, English immigrants $25, Irish $13 and Italian $8. These figures are proof enough of the value of American opportunities.

When the students of Yale are absent from New Haven a number of the policemen of the city are given a vacation without pay. The subject of preserving order in college towns is a good one for a prize essay.

European countries are renewing their trick of shipping suspected anarchists to our country. The commissioner of immigration is on the lookout for them, however, and will ship them back as fast as he detects them.

'Tis love that makes the world go round, but in the case of the negro of 104 who courted the damsel of 97 in Tennessee the little god had to be helped out with the extra inducement of a melon patch to the bride.

In Switzerland parents are fined who do not send their children to school for a period of at least six years. When a parent proves that he is too poor to educate his children, the various cantons aid. Thus each year about 40,000 children are placed in school by aid from the state.

Thirty years ago 70 employes of the United States senate were on the pay roll. To-day the number is 354. The large increase is in proportion not only to the size of the senate, but as well to the increase in public business, due to the enormous development of the country. It takes more employes to transact this business.

A young man in Philadelphia was arrested for "scorching." He did not hire a lawyer, but made his own defense. He said in his plea it was growing very late, and he was en route to see his girl, and that he stood upon the declaration of the constitution which guarantees every man "the right to liberty and the pursuit of happiness." The judge remitted the usual fine, and advised the young man to start earlier next time.

The supreme court of Germany has decided that trusts and combines are perfectly legal on the ground that it is not for the public interest that prices should remain too low in industrial lines, and, therefore, a combine to prevent ruinous competition is a matter of self-preservation and for the good of the people, who would suffer if the industries are ruined by competition and over-production. That is a novel decision, and just the reverse of what the supreme court of the United States has decided on the same subject.

The city of Niagara Falls has more factories making chemicals by electricity to-day than any other city in the world. The plant for manufacturing chlorate of potash is the first to introduce this industry into the United States. The uses for this product are continually increasing. From 5,000,000 to 6,000,000 pounds are annually imported, a large portion of which is used in calico dyeing as an oxidizer. It is also employed in the manufacture of parlor matches, blasting powder and some of the smokeless powders, and is also taken medicinally for various ailments.

For the first time in years the United States army has its full enlisted strength, and recruiting officers have gone back to their regiments. One gratifying result is the large increase in the number of native Americans. "Thirteen dollars a month and found" has not proved much of an inducement to young citizens in the past, but they have at last come to understand that there are worse things than working for Uncle Sam even at this low wage. In the new army country boys have taken the places of the city loafers, and the service should be much benefited by the change.

When Daniel Webster said admiringly of Massachusetts: "There she is," he got the sex right. Statistics show that there are 70,000 more women than men in the state and 90,800 women are heads of families. There are 15,600 mothers-in-law to 5,000 fathers-in-law that sweeten the life of the son-in-law by living with him. Of the 2,500,000 people in Massachusetts 88 per cent. live in homes of their own and a little more than half of the people were born in the state. There are 80 cases where the woman is the head of the family. On the whole, the spokes in the vicinity of the Hub seem to be of good timber.

The attention of investors is being turned more and more toward Alaska. There is no doubt that not only the Yukon country, but many other parts of the territory, are rich in mineral resources, and that when transportation has made the country more accessible there will be a vast flood of emigration in that direction. A rich corporation interested in Alaska has completed arrangements for the construction of 36 miles of railway through a new pass, which will make it easier to reach the gold fields. The next century will see perfect railway connection between the Juneau district and our northwest ports.

MADE A RICH STRIKE.

Three Lucky Klondikers Return with a Snug Sum.

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 23.—The first party of Klondikers to brave the dangers of a trip overland to civilization arrived in Seattle Saturday on the steamer Starr, with 90 pounds of gold taken from five claims. Four are on Bonanza and one on Eldorado creek. The lucky miners are Edward Thorpe, of Seattle, who was supposed to be dead, George Stewart, of Tacoma, and Joseph Wining to Dominion creek. They were surcame out because food was scarce. They report rich stakes on Dominion creek and Stewart river. People are rushing to Dominion creek. They are surprised to hear of the intention of the Canadian government to collect royalty on gold, and predicted that the miners would resist. They estimate that the North American Transportation and Trading company's steamer Portland will bring down $100,000 to $500,000 instead of $1,500,000. They say that their clean-ups were made after the miners who came down on the Portland left the diggings. They say that there was a lack of rain up to July 12, and this interfered with working some claims.

Edward Thorpe, his brother William, George Stewart and George Bound, a cousin of the Thorpes, owned a half interest in the claim adjoining Clarence Berry's on Eldorado creek. They own four others on Bonanza creek, adjoining those of George Cormack, the discoverer. They do not pretend to give values of their claims. Winterholen owns a quarter interest in one and one-sixteenth interest in another on Bonanza. He said: "I have not done much work on my claim. The value of the dirt is from $1,000 to $1,200 to the length of the sluice box."

DOLLAR WHEAT.

Coveted Price at Last Reached—Further Gains Expected.

New York, Aug. 21.—At 1:40 o'clock Friday September wheat in the local market reached the long-talked of goal of one dollar per bushel. Naturally enough the incident created a tremendous sensation on the floor of the exchange and was greeted with prolonged cheers from 500 throats, being reechoed from the crowded galleries.

Philadelphia, Aug. 21.—The wheat market Friday was the most exciting ever experienced in the history of the exchange. Quotations jumped up 4¾ cents and brought the price beyond the dollar mark. There were sales of No. 2 red at $1.01 and No. 2 Pennsylvania red at one time was quoted at $1.02. This is the highest quotation here in many years.

Minneapolis, Minn., Aug. 21.—Wheat sold for one dollar a bushel in Minneapolis Friday. When the September option went to 90 cents Charles A. Pillsbury offered a dollar spot for 1,200 bushels of old No. 1 northern, which is selling at a premium. The offer was accepted. James Marshall offered the same price for 5,000 bushels, but it has not yet been accepted.

Chicago, Aug. 21. — September wheat had advanced six cents over Thursday night's closing price at 12:30 Friday, when it reached 93⅛ cents a bushel. Wild excitement reigned in the wheat pit all day. The opening of wheat was 3⅜ cents above Thursday's close and within a minute the price was 91½ cents. After another slump it rose to 93⅛ cents without any material decline. December wheat also fluctuated wildly. The market closed strong at 93 cents, a falling off of only one-eighth of a cent from its high point.

A MAN HUNT.

Infuriated Cook County (Ill.) Farmers Lynch a Tramp.

Chicago, Aug. 20.—Swift vengeance was meted out Thursday afternoon to a man who made a murderous assault upon Mrs. Paulina Fenske, wife of Carl Fenske, a poor German farmer living in Leyden township, one mile from the village of Franklin Park, and about 13 miles from the center of this city.

Early Thursday morning Carl Fenske left his wife and four children, whose ages range from one to four years, in their humble cottage and went to the farm of John Hansen, two miles west. Nearly all his neighbors were there, too, helping Hansen in threshing, as is customary in little farming communities.

About noon a stranger stopped at the Fenske home, and, explaining that he had walked a long way and was weary, asked if he might come in and rest. Learning that Mrs. Fenske was alone, he assaulted her with the butt of a pistol and rendered her unconscious. The man then searched the house, evidently hoping to find money. Failing to do so, he struck the woman again on the head and then ran from the house. Mrs. Fenske was so badly beaten that she may not recover. She was able to crawl a quarter of a mile and give the alarm at a neighbor's house.

A party of infuriated farmers, armed with rifles, revolvers, pitchforks and other implements, started in pursuit of the man, who had fled from the lonely farmhouse into the near-by cornfield. The man, who was a stranger in the locality and whose identity is still unknown, made a vicious fight for his life. He was armed with two huge revolvers and he fought his pursuers until his body was riddled with shot and he fell helpless to the ground.

EXCITEMENT OVER WHEAT.

"Dollar Wheat" Reached on the Chicago Board of Trade.

Chicago, Aug. 23. — "Dollar wheat" was reached on the Chicago board of trade Saturday. The floor and galleries of the big exchange hall were packed with a howling mob, in which were distinguished the cries of the vanquished and the exultant cries of the victorious.

New York, Aug. 23.—At the opening Saturday September wheat sold, on simultaneous sales made in different parts of the pit, all the way from $1.01¼ to $1.02 a bushel, against 99¾ cents, the closing price on Friday. The official closing at noon, after 1½ hours' trading, was $1.05½. The cash wheat quotations of Saturday have not been equaled since August, 1891.

St. Louis, Aug. 23.—The advance of December wheat Saturday was $1.02½, a net gain of 5¾ cents for the session. September closed at $1.02¾ and May at $1.05¼, both 5 cents up. The highest point December reached was $1.02¾, just as the bell tapped, but it was not allowed as regular.

Voluntary Increase in Wages.

McKeesport, Pa., Aug. 23.—The 3,000 employes of the National Rolling Mill company at this place received notice of a ten per cent. advance in their wages to take effect September 1.

CAMPS ABANDONED.

Court's Decision Gives the Miners' Strike a Body Blow.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 19.—Wednesday was operators' day and from present appearances they have made a most effective move and have nearly if not quite checkmated their opponents, the striking coal miners. The court's decree in making permanent the preliminary injunction restraining the strikers from camping, marching or in any manner interfering with the New York and Cleveland Gas Coal company's miners has had the effect of almost depleting the camps about those mines, and apparently a general demoralization among the campers exists. Judges Stowe and Collier handed down a decision in the injunction proceedings of the New York and Cleveland Gas Coal company against the United Mine Workers of America, Patrick Dolan, William Warner and others. The preliminary injunction was made permanent and the plaintiff was ordered to file a bond of $5,000 to answer for such damages as may be sustained by the defendants by reason of the injunction.

Uriah Billingham, in charge of the camp at Plum Creek, put a damper on the campers at that place Wednesday. He had just returned from the city, where he heard the court's decision in the injunction case. He told the men there would be no more marching and no need of such a large number of men at the camp. He advised the men to disperse to their respective homes and get work wherever they could. At this camp where Tuesday there were 800 men, there are now less than 100.

Camp Determination, at Turtle Creek, was reduced in numbers from 200 to 50. The men who were told to go home gathered in an angry crowd and denounced the officials bitterly. Sunny Creek camp is practically abandoned, and it is not known whether it will be opened again or not. All told there are less than 150 men now encamped about the three mines.

In order to follow up the advantage, the operators held a largely attended meeting Wednesday night at the Monongahela house and arranged for the starting of their mines with or without force. If force seems to be unavoidable, it is the intention to start a few mines at once under the protection of deputies, and whatever expense may result will be shared pro rata by the mine owners. This scheme to start the mines was adopted to break the national strike in 1894. President Dolan, of the miners' organization, does not believe the movement will be a success this time, as the strikers are more in earnest than in any former struggle.

FAURE MEETS THE CZAR.

French President Enthusiastically Greeted by the Russians.

St. Petersburg, Aug. 24.—From early Monday morning there was a scene of great animation here and a steady flow of people towards the quays, where they embarked on profusely-decorated steamers to meet President Faure at Cronstadt. After a rainy night splendid weather prevailed. A procession of 12 victorias and four landaus was formed. The czar and President Faure were seated in the first carriage.

The guard of honor, which was formed by the Red Cossacks, saluted and the procession slowly drove to the Peterhof palace, situated about 800 yards distant. The route to the palace was lined with troops, and behind the soldiers were massed enthusiastic crowds of people, who were frantic in their acclamations, which were redoubled when the procession having passed the ridges of soldiers no longer separated the people. Several bouquets of flowers were thrown into the imperial carriage while the latter was on its way from the landing stage to the palace. Upon arriving at the Peterhof palace, the czar presented President Faure to the various court officials, and then, reentering the victoria, his majesty drove along to the Alexandria palace, the residence of the czarina. A few minutes later President Faure emerged from the Peterhof palace, accompanied by Gen. Bildoring, and drove to the Alexandria palace, in order to offer his homage to the czarina. A private luncheon at the Alexandria palace followed. During the afternoon the French president visited the Russian grand dukes.

Exports and Imports.

Washington, Aug. 24.—The forthcoming annual report of the bureau of statistics will show the valuation of the imports and domestic exports of the United States by countries for the year ended June 30, 1897. The largest trade was done with Great Britain, the imports aggregating $167,947,820 and the exports $478,448,592. The next in volume was with Germany, the imports being $110,210,614 and the exports $123,784,453. France is third in the list, with imports amounting to $67,530,231 and exports $56,287,631. The imports from the dominion of Canada during the year amounted to $40,809,387 and the exports $56,465,048. The imports from Mexico amounted to $18,511,572 and the exports aggregated $22,726,596. The imports from Japan amounted to $24,009,756 and the exports $13,233,970. The imports from China reached a total of $20,403,862 and the exports aggregated $11,990,888.

Carried Over the Falls.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., Aug. 23.—Frank Webber, of Buffalo; Warren Bush, 21 years old, of Chicago, a former employe of the United States Express company, and Charles Glasner, 29 years of age, of Chicago, employed by the United States Express company, who have been camping on the banks of the Niagara river for the past week, with several companions, on Sunday hired a small boat at La Salle, and started to row across the Niagara river to the Canadian shore. In the heavy current their boat became unmanageable and upset. The men were seen by a number of people on shore struggling in the water, but before assistance could reach them, all three were carried over the falls, on the Canadian side. There is little probability of the bodies being recovered for some weeks.

Canovas' Assassin Garroted.

San Sebastian, Aug. 21.—Michele Angiolli, who shot and killed Senor Canovas del Castillo, the prime minister of Spain, at the baths of Santa Agueda on Sunday, August 8, was executed at 11 o'clock Friday morning according to the sentence of the court-martial imposed upon him on Monday last after his trial on the previous Sunday, which sentence was confirmed by the supreme council of war Thursday.

A CONFERENCE CALLED.

Organized Labor Will Hold a Convention in St. Louis August 30.

Columbus, O., Aug. 21.—The national executive board of the United Mine Workers adjourned Friday, after having issued the call for the conference of organized labor to be held in St. Louis August 30. The following is the call for the conference:

"To organized labor, its various divisions and subdivisions, and to all reform, social, educational and scientific bodies who condemn government by injunction and the use of force to coerce the people and deprive them of their rights as American citizens, greeting:

"The great miners' strike has gone beyond a struggle for living wages. A crisis in the affairs of the nation has arrived in which all patriotic people must determine whether they will accept and consent to live under the rule of an oligarchy of wealth or whether the institutions of free government, the rights of free speech and peaceable public assemblage are to be preserved. The present struggle has assumed a contest for the preservation of civil liberty and constitutional rights.

"The tyrannical and un-American injunctions of the federal and state courts are revolutionary, against the first principles of free government and derogatory to the inherent rights of the masses, endangering the public peace and destroying the personal security and individual liberties of the common people.

"The courts have deserted the temple of justice and now stand forth the defiant bulwark of confederated capital. Their arbitrary rulings have set up one standard of rights for the rich and another for the poor. They decree that capital is always right and labor always wrong. They have made it unlawful for starving working people to appeal against tyrannical treatment, present grievances or propose just and reasonable terms for the redress of insufferable wrongs.

"The present great miners' strike is an expression of discontent that originated in poverty and starvation; it was born in the sorrow and destitution of hungry women and children; it was the last protest of impoverished and enslaved labor, and it presents to the world a cause as righteous and humane as ever inspired the souls of a Christian people. The philanthropic heart of this great nation has responded in sympathy with the miners' appeal for the right to receive a respectable living for the most arduous and hazardous labor in the world. Their appeal for a small share of the wealth they create and for the right to enjoy some of the fruits of advanced civilization finds a responsive chord everywhere in the commonality of mankind, and if it were a struggle between miners and mine operators only, liberty would triumph over oppression, industry over greed, and right over wrong without the necessity of this call.

"But it is no longer a struggle between employe and employer. The judiciary has assumed the indefensible claims of the operators, and the struggle is between tyrannical courts and the whole people. The courts, although under oath to serve the rich and poor alike, have volunteered to defend the sordid interests of the rich as against the God-given rights of the poor, and now threaten to turn the Gatling guns and the Winchesters of criminals and thugs against all who dare protest against their despicable restraining orders. The judiciary is prostituted to the bidding of oppressive capital, has placed the rights of property above the rights of persons and has discriminated against the many in the interests of the few. That 350,000 miners should be condemned to lives of drudgery and starvation by the arbitrary rulings of the courts is an insult to a beneficent Creator, an outrage upon free government and a disgrace to the Christian civilization under which we live.

"The recent injunctions and their extreme application against the lawful rights of the poor, the arrest and incarceration of hundreds of innocent, inoffensive people, the general employment of armed thugs to overawe, harass and coerce the miners, have so exasperated the people in localities where applied that we feel that we can no longer be responsible for the public peace. To the end that a just and equitable settlement of the differences between employers and employes may be effected, the public peace, the liberty of the masses, the sacred institutions of free government preserved, and the courts estopped from these outrageous perversions of constitutional rights, we appeal to the higher, more humane and patriotic court—the great, plain people—who in times of trouble have always proven the just arbiters of every difference between diversified interests and contending elements in the government of human society.

"We appeal to the liberty-loving people of this great nation to send accredited delegates to St. Louis, Mo., where a mass convention will be held Monday, August 30, 1897. The object of the convention will not be to merely protest against the usurpation and tyranny of the courts, but to formulate plans to compel a return to the principles of free government and put said plans into practical operation. Our people have suffered all the evils that are sufferable, and we are left to the alternative of submitting to the injunctions of the courts and cowardly entreating our miners to return to the hovels of misery or shame or appealing to the patriotic hearts of America to consider our cause and render a verdict in accordance with the just claims of suffering humanity. We have chosen the latter and will accept the verdict with that fortitude and resignation becoming every liberty-loving patriot of this great nation."

The call is signed by the following members of the national executive board of the United Mine Workers of America: M. D. Ratchford, president; W. C. Pearse, secretary-treasurer; H. L. Davis, J. H. Kennedy, James M. Carson, Henry Stephenson, Patrick Dolan, W. E. Farms, Fred Dilcher. It is indorsed by Samuel Gompers, president American Federation of Labor, and J. R. Sovereign, general master workman K. of L.

ENCAMPED AT BUFFALO.

Annual Gathering of the Grand Army Veterans—Camp Jewett Opened.

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 24.—Grand army week opened with fair weather. Camp Jewett, the picturesque tent city erected for the accommodation of visiting veterans, on a bluff overlooking Lake Erie and the mouth of the Niagara river, was officially opened by Commander in Chief Clarkson Monday afternoon. The commander in chief was escorted from his headquarters by Mayor Jewett and other citizens, and by Bidwell Wilkeson post of Buffalo, and Columbia post of Chicago, headed by the regimental band of the Thirteenth United States infantry, which is assigned to Fort Porter during the encampment. As the commander in chief entered the camp a salute of 15 guns was fired in his honor by the federal troops at the fort. The general was escorted to the piazza of a park pavilion in the center of the camp, about which thousands of veterans and citizens formed a hollow square.

Stepping to the front of the piazza, Mayor Jewett, on behalf of the citizens' committee, presented the camp to the commander in chief, who accepted it in a graceful speech. Commander in Chief Clarkson entered the pavilion when the remarks were concluded and held an impromptu reception of officers from Fort Porter and officers of the national guard. Later he made an inspection of the camp, in company with the officers of his staff, after which he returned to his headquarters.

Sentenced for Contempt.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Aug. 23.—The courtroom was crowded here Saturday morning when Judge Nathan Goff ascended the bench to render his decision in the case of the 27 miners tried Friday for contempt of court. He found them guilty of having violated the injunction issued by Judge John Jay Jackson, of the United States court. He said he was determined to punish the offenders notwithstanding his earnest desire to show them every consideration which their unhappy position warranted. He tempered justice with mercy when he sentenced the 27 prisoners to be confined in the county jail until this (Monday) morning.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Good Bonds Scarce.

State Treasurer Koerner and State Auditor Dunn have returned from New York, where they have made advantageous investments of Minnesota's money. Their mission in the east was to invest $250,000 of the permanent school fund and $50,000 of the permanent university fund. They found, however, that good bonds were in such demand that they could with difficulty obtain securities assuring a minimum return of 3 per cent a year. Yet the state law requires that the school and university fund shall be invested either in state or government bonds paying 3 per cent income or in municipal bonds of Minnesota cities giving a a minimum return of 4 per cent. Messrs. Koerner and Dunn were able to purchase $150,000 worth of Massachusetts bonds netting a little more than 3 per cent, and they were able to arrange for the subsequent purchase of $150,000 worth of Virginia bonds netting about 4 per cent.

Fair Exhibits.

As Sept. 6, the date of the opening of the Minnesota State fair approaches, evidences accumulate indicate that the exhibit will surpass anything heretofore seen in the Northwest. Every day the entries pour in in the most gratifying manner. W. A. McHenry, of Dennison, Iowa, who has before exhibited, sends word that he will be there with his herd of Angus cattle, which is one of the best stock displays ever seen in the Northwest. A herd of full blooded Angora goats from Texas will be another stock item. The poultry entries, too, show that though a new building has been given that department having four times the space heretofore allowed, it will be crowded to its utmost capacity.

Important Decisions.

Judge Searle, in the district court at St. Cloud, granted an alternative writ of mandamus to Sylvester and Orin Kipp, St. Paul, to compel Auditor M. E. Kasner, of Benton county, to accept their tender of taxes without accrued penalty and interest, made pursuant to chapter 290, laws of the last legislature. Auditor Kasner, acting on the advice of State Auditor Dunn, refused to accept the taxes upon the ground that the law did not become operative until the first Monday in January, 1898. The court holds it went into effect on aproval, its sole purpose being to expedite and induce the payment of delinquent taxes in counties coming within the meaning of the act.

A Lucky Man.

W. L. Williams, of Winona, inventor of a rotary bicycle sleigh, which many people after seeing the model last winter did not take any stock in, is likely soon to be a rich man as a result of his invention. W. L. Williams and W. W. Williams and their attorney, W. J. Smith, have just returned from Chicago, where under the firm name of the Williams Rotary Sleigh company, they have entered into a contract with the Manufacturers and Merchants Warehouse company, of Chicago, for the sale of the new invention. The Chicago company reserve the right after paying five years' royalty, to buy the patent for $15,000.

To Shock Grain.

J. E. French, of St. Cloud, who has been exprimenting on a shock binder for 20 years, has now a machine in successful operation. The shocker is a sort of sheet iron basket arrangement that runs on two wheels and is firmly attached to the right of the machine, taking the place of the ordinary bundle carrier. The inventor claims that a harvester does not run any heavier with it than with a bundle carrier attached, as it does away with the side draft. When the bundle leaves the binder it is caught by a pair of steel arms that toss it over into the sheet iron receptacle.

Labor Day

Gov. Clough has issued his Labor Day proclamation, requesting that every place of business where labor is employed be closed on Monday, Sept. 6, that being the first Monday in September, the day set apart by law as Labor Day.

WHEN LYDDY'S COME.

I wish that I could go again
To that old spelling school,
Where we had fun on winter nights,
And helped to play the fool.
I spelled believe just like deceive,
And dropped the b in thumb,
Watching the door with anxious fear
Lest Lyddy shouldn't come.

When Lyddy, standing straight and trim,
Began her gum to chew,
My heart went raging up and down,
Worse than the wand'ring Jew;
I put a k in caraway,
A double m in hum,
And Friday's i changed off for y,
All just 'cause Lyddy'd come.

Bill Rogers he was worse than I,
Made such a thing could be;
And I know once he spelled machine
With s and double e;
But let us get our letters set
Most anyway but plumb,
Our side was always sure to beat
On nights when Lyddy'd come.

What prickles ran all down our backs,
How still the room would grow,
While master tried some word to find
That Lyddy didn't know!
Phthisic and schism, gneiss and chrism,
Oh, whist we sat and mum,
For there was nothing else to do
On nights when Lyddy'd come!

When Lyddy'd come we didn't need
The light of stars or moon;
The winter nights seemed brighter then
Than days do now at noon,
For Lyddy's eyes made glad our skies,
And though she spelled us dumb,
Jehoshaphat, how proud we were
On nights when Lyddy'd come!

MY LITTLE ADVENTURE.

By Willis B. Allen.

WE WERE both well tired out, one July evening in 1886, when we reached Chamounix, Fred, my old Latin school classmate, could bear mountain climbing, and, what was worse, mule-back riding, much better than I, so that, while I was glad to find my way to my room, in the top of the queer old hotel, at an early hour in the evening, Fred remained in the parlor, busily studying up maps and guides for an excursion over the Mer de Glace to the "Garden," a small, fertile spot, surrounded by eternal ice, in the very heart of the mountains.

Next morning he was off at four o'clock, leaving me to spend the day quietly in the valley. I was disturbed but once more before rising; this time by a herd of goats, who scrambled along under my window, with bells tinkling merrily enough.

In the course of the forenoon I strolled away, book in hand, following the course of the Arve for a little while, and then, striking off at right angles up the banks of a small-brook, which joins the larger stream just above the village.

The air was soft and sweet with summer sunlight, and the breath of the silent forests, reaching from my feet higher and higher, until the front rank looked on these desolate, glittering fields of snow that crown Mount Blanc.

Beside the brook the velvety turf was dotted with wild forget-me-nots and pansies, growing there as confidently as if they were not in the very track of last year's avalanche.

At length I came to a spot where the brook had in ages past strewn its own path with fragments of huge rocks, which it had loosened and thrown down from some far-off height, where the foot of man never trod.

One gigantic bowlder lay completely across the original bed of the stream, and rose like a wall beside the water, that turned out of its way, and ran off with a good-natured murmur.

The sun here lay warm and bright, just counteracting the chill breeze that came from the glaciers through the narrow gorge. I gathered a few dry sticks, kindled a fire, just for company, and nestled comfortably down into an easy corner to read the rocks, the brook, the sky, and, if there were time left, my book, which, if I remember rightly, was "Redgauntlet."

How long I sat there I cannot tell. It must have been two or three hours, for it was past noon when I looked at my watch, threw the smoldering firebrands into the brook and rose to return to the hotel.

As I did so, I noticed half a dozen footsteps in the steep, sandy bank that formed the side of the ravine at this point. It suddenly occurred to me that I had read in my guide book, while I was sitting in my own room, six months before, of a certain waterfall, which, from the description, must surely be on this brook. Yes, I recollected the base of the zig-zag path, that we had seen as we rode along the valley, on our way from Tete Noire, late the preceding afternoon.

I was feeling much refreshed and rested by my siesta, and, by a short cut over this embankment, I could doubtless strike that path after a three minutes' scramble, as some one had evidently done before me.

So I would have a little adventure, and see one of the sights of Chamounix all by myself.

Certainly there was nothing rash in this resolve, or formidable in the undertaking, though a certain feebleness resulting from a recent ill turn at Geneva should have warned me against tasking my strength too severely.

At any rate, at it I went, laughing at the easiness of the ascent as I followed the broad footsteps of my predecessor. My calculation was that I should come out on the path at a point 75 to 100 feet above my starting place.

Before I had proceeded far, however, the convenient tracks abruptly ceased. Beyond, and on each side, there was nothing but the gravelly bank, with here and there a big rock, which seemed ready to drop at the lightest touch.

Plainly enough, the first climber had become discouraged at this point, and had picked his way to the bottom again. As I looked back, I was startled to observe the elevation which I had reached, and I involuntarily crouched closer to the earth, with a sensation as of tipping over backwards.

The movement, slight as it was, dislodged a clump of stones and sand, which went rolling and plunging down at a great rate to the brook, the sound of whose waters was now hardly audible. No wonder the man had given it up! Should I go on, or literally back down, as he had done?

My determination was stirred, and, although I heartily wished Fred was on hand with his sympathetic courage, I resolved to complete what I had begun.

It was tough work. Hands and knees now—and carefully placed every time, at that.

Once I very nearly lost my balance by the unexpected yielding of a large stone, which gave way under my foot. How fearfully long it was before I heard it smite on the bowlders below! I knew if I slipped, or missed one step, the impetus of a yard would send me after the stone. As I looked over my shoulder, it seemed like clinging to the slope of a cathedral roof, where a puff of wind might be fatal.

There was no question now as to the course I must take. It was "Excelsior" in sober earnest—only I didn't have the inspiration of a maiden, with a tear in her bright blue eye, looking on.

Steeper and steeper! I was panting heavily in the rarified atmosphere, and trembling from exhaustion. It was so terribly lonely. Nothing but the dark forms of the trees, the waste of ice and snow, and now and then a bird, winging its way silently over the gulf, until my brain whirled as I watched its slow flight.

By to-morrow they would miss me, and organize a search, with Fred at their head. They would find my footprints beside the brook, where I had leaped carelessly across after pansies; then they would come upon the blackened traces of the little fire, and the loosened gravel of the steep bank; they would look upward with a shudder, and search the harder. Pretty soon one of them would lean over a crevice among the bowlders, shrink back with a cry of horror and beckon to the others. All this if I failed by one step!

But still I worked on laboriously, often pausing for giddiness or a want of breath, and digging with my finger-nails little hollows in the hard bank for my feet.

Once or twice a long, tough root of grass saved me, and very soon, to my joy, straggling bushes, strong enough to support a few pounds of weight, thrust their tops through the sand bed.

Then came scrubby trees, cedar and fir, oftentimes growing straight out from a vertical face of rock, and quivering from root to tip as I drew myself cautiously up.

I shall never forget the agony of the moment when one of them came out entirely, and let me fall backward. Fortunately its comrades were near enough to save me, though it was with rough hands.

To shorten the story, I climbed at last out upon a small, level spot, which proved to be the longed-for path.

Following it painfully up for a few rods, I reached a little hut, where I found a kind old French woman, who refreshed me with food and drink, helped to make my tattered clothes presentable and held up her hands after the demonstrative fashion of her nation when she heard of my climb.

"Had anyone ever ascended to the cataract upon that side?" I asked.

"Jamais, monsieur; jamais, jamais!" (Never, monsieur; never, never.)

And could she tell me the height from the valley?

A thousand feet! Well, I had had mountain climbing enough for one day, and after a visit to the Cascade, which was close by, I hobbled down the easy path and back to the hotel, to read "Redgauntlet" until bedtime.

When Fred got back and heard the story, his eyes were round enough, as he declared he would not leave me behind again, to play invalid, until we came in sight of the Cunard wharf in East Boston. And he kept his promise.—Golden Days.

AFFECTS MANUFACTURERS.

New Tariff Rates on Coal Felt on the Pacific Coast.

A change of importance to the manufacturing interests of the Pacific coast has been made by the new tariff, if the understanding now entertained is the correct one. Its importance is suggested in a note of instruction given by Collector Jackson to the deputy collectors in the following communication:

In view of the standard fixed by the new tariff of 92 per cent. of fixed carbon as the line of demarkation between anthracite and bituminous coal, you will exact a deposit on all cargoes heretofore passed as anthracite from Swansea."

Under the old tariff coal that exceeded 68 per cent. of fixed carbon was rated as anthracite coal and was admitted free of duty.

Most of the coal imported here from Swansea ranged from 89 to 90 per cent., and so came in free. Under the new tariff it will nearly all be rated as bituminous and will be charged a duty of 67 cents a ton. The instructions given were for the purpose of securing a deposit equal to the duty before releasing such coal.

Immense quantities of Swansea coal are annually imported at San Francisco port for consumption on the Pacific coast, mostly for manufacturing purposes. The kind of coal with which it comes mostly in competition is the Pennsylvania anthracite. Whether the duty is sufficient to cover the difference in the cost of transportation from Pennsylvania or not remains to be seen. If it does not, the result, it is said, will be simply to increase the cost of this kind of coal to the manufacturers who use it.

Queer Donation.

A Scotchman who had spent the greater part of his life in a secluded part of Scotland where there were no churches came to London. The first Sunday after his arrival he was escorted to church by a friend. After the service the usual collection was made. It happened that the Scotchman was the first person to whom the gentleman who was collecting handed the plate. The stranger stared at the plate, and his friend, noticing his astonishment, whispered: "Put something in the plate." "What shall I put in?" anxiously inquired the other. He was told to put in anything he could spare. Thereupon he dived his hand into his pocket and brought out about half an ounce of snuff. Placing it on the plate, he said to the gentleman who held it: "I suppose you take a pinch of snuff sometimes."—Scottish Leader.

Explained.

"See here, young man, I'll have to take you in. Your lantern's out."

"Hold on, officer. I'll explain. You see, I bought one of these two-dollar bicycle suits this afternoon, and it burst on me ten miles from home. Now I'm trying to get back as quietly as I can in the dark. You see the necessity of it?"

"That's all right—go ahead."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

THE CORN HARVEST.

Labor-Saving Devices Have Made Its Gathering Easy.

Harvesting the corn crop is being made easier every year by improvements in labor-saving machinery and devices. Large commercial crops are cut, tied and left in straight rows by the improved corn harvester, while the bundles placed in shocks or stooks of 12 to 20 bundles to cure are then drawn to the barn and run through the shredder. Farmers who cannot afford the latest and improved machinery, or who have small areas of corn, cut by sled as illustrated below, or by hand cutter. The armfuls thus cut have to be tied in bundles, various materials being used for this purpose, some using two or three cornstalks, others a small handful of long, strong straw, swamp grass or willows. But whether cut by improved machinery or by hand cutter, the large bundles, shocks or stooks have to be securely fastened to withstand the fall wind and storms.

To make a corn cutter, as portrayed herewith, make a platform with runners six feet long and two inches thick; the higher the runners the higher it will cut; eight-inch plank should do. Mortise three crosspieces of two by four into top of runners. Nail boards on cross ties to make a platform 30 inches wide and nearly six feet long. Get a good steel knife and make it very sharp, say 22 inches long and five inches wide. Bevel the edge from the bottom or underside. Have a rod made with an eye in the center and curved, in order to fasten either end to a runner and hitch a horse in the center. This rod should be of one-half inch round iron, and long enough to work nicely, as shown at a. Bore a hole in platform or runner, and put in a stake about six inches high (b), even across with the base of rod (c). Another stake of the same size, but 20 inches high, on the right side of platform near the edge, and 21 inches from the front of platform (d). Take a rod of five-eighth-inch iron 67 inches long and weld a piece of flat iron one-half inch thick and eight inches long to the end of it, bolt the flat piece to platform (13 inches from center to back of platform), and bend the rod forward 17 inches above the platform, as in e. Bend the rod so as to have it extend out over the edge of the platform, over and back of the knife (h), then bend the rod in so as to extend about two inches over the platform at the center two by four cross brace (f). From there bend the rod out to g. Be sure to have it carry the same height all the time.

The bends in the rod are made in order to bring in the corn and lay it across the platform without the help of a man. In this way the danger of standing over the knife is averted. Nail a small stick something like a lath from top of stake d to the outside runner a few inches ahead of the knife. Bolt the knife to platform about 26 inches from back part of platform with two bolts, and have the knife slant back considerably. I put a scrap piece of two-inch plank under the platform at e and h, to make the platform more solid where the large rod and knife were bolted fast. The large rod from g to e should be with bends 50 inches long. Directly across it is 48 inches, thus using two inches for bends. The large rod is outside of stake d about five inches. Hitch on a quiet horse, hang the lines on d and ride on rear of platform, and when a large pile of corn is cut and laid across the sled, stop and shock it up.—Farm and Home.

WOMEN AS FARMERS.

Peculiar Scheme to Be Inaugurated by a Nebraska Woman.

Mrs. Hattie N. Bemis, of Arabia, Neb., does not see why women should not be successful as farmers, and announces that she is going to try the experiment if she can get a dozen women to assist her. She owns a large tract of land in northwestern Nebraska which she says she intends to give to 12 deserving widows of northwestern farmers. In return she will require them to cultivate it without man's assistance. She says she will start them out with all the machinery they need, a sufficient supply of cattle, horses, swine and poultry to serve as a nest egg, and money to last them until the first harvest can be disposed of. She admits that the climate is dry, but proposes to instruct her wards in the operation of a system of soil culture by which method experiments have proved the rainfall of the section is sufficient to insure bountiful crops. The nearest the women will be allowed to come to dealings with men is to sell the crops to them. If Mrs. Bemis ever learns that a man has been employed about the premises the farms will revert to her. Any member of the community who marries will also forfeit her title to a share in the property.—Chicago Chronicle.

Maintaining the Standard.

One of the causes of the deterioration of flocks of poultry is the practice of selling off the old hens and using pullets. Pullets will probably lay more eggs than will hens the first year, but chicks hatched from eggs laid by pullets are not as strong and vigorous as those produced from eggs laid by hens. It is also less expensive to retain the hens than to feed the pullets a whole year before they are old enough to lay. Hens are serviceable until five years old, and sometimes longer, the stock being less liable to disease and loss of vigor if cocks 18 months old and hens over two years old are used for breeding purposes instead of pullets that are mated with cockerels.

Success Depends on Thought.

Many a farmer goes plodding along, earning but a scant living, with no rest in sight this side of the grave, who might by a little reasoning, and the adaptation of circumstances surrounding him to the idea in view, making a specialty of some one line of farming, and make a paying business of it. But this takes energy, both physical and mental—and he drifts on in blissfull ignorance of the chances and opportunities surrounding him, by which he might have gained a comfortable competence for his old age.—Rural World.

HIGH-CLASS POULTRY.

Why the Progressive Farmer Will Raise No Other Kind.

No man has a better chance to keep high-class poultry than the farmer. He has unlimited range for them, and this is conducive to health and best results in rearing the young. He produces at first cost every necessary food product that goes to keep a flock during the year, and no one who desires to purchase eggs for hatching would ever buy of a breeder who keeps his fowls penned up if he knew where he could get eggs from farm-kept fowls.

There is just as good a market for high-class poultry as there is for poultry for market, and the demand is always good for good stock. The farmer who keeps this kind of poultry has two chances to make money. His flock will be profitable as an investment at market prices, and he will make many sales without effort at much above market prices.

It is no trouble at all, as the writer knows from experience, to get from 50 cents to one dollar a dozen for eggs from high-class hens during the hatching season, and even at the smaller price there is an immense profit in the business.

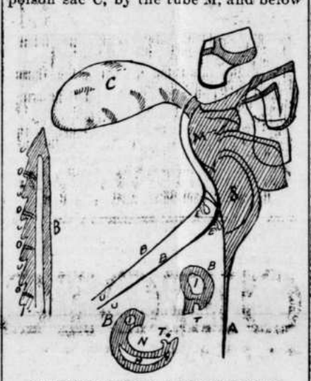
With the better care that is always given to good stock comes a greater return in eggs and meat for the feed used, and here is an additional profit on the transaction.

There is no excuse in these days that justifies any farmer in allowing his flock of hens to remain mongrels. The man who does this is standing in his own light and does not live up to his opportunities. It does not need fancy houses, elaborate systems of yards nor extraordinary skill in breeding to make a success with fine poultry. Plain, hard common sense, such as is needed to raise good crops and conduct any farm successfully, is better than any number of nice theories which are of no practical value.—Farmers' Voice.

THE STING OF A BEE.

It Is a Very Complicated and Delicate Structure.

The organ of defense which worker bees possess is a very complicated structure. The sting is composed of two highly polished, sharp hollow spears or lancets, B B, and an awl, A, as portrayed in the cut, held firmly together by projections T on the central one, which fit into grooves T on the sides of the other two. These lancets lying together form a tube between them. The central lance A, sometimes called the sheath, is larger than the others and has a cylindrical reservoir S at its base which connects with the poison sac C, by the tube M, and below



STRUCTURE OF A BEE'S STING.

by a slit with the tube made by the joining of the three lancets. The smaller lancets, B B, have at their bases peculiar valves, E E. Their points are barbed, U U, in the sectional drawing, which also shows the tube in the lancet, and the openings, O O, connecting the tube with the exterior. These barbs catch and hold, causing the sting to be left in when it is used. The poison is driven through the openings and through the tube formed by the lance, into the object stung. This poison is an acid fluid which the bee secrets and stores in the sac C. Being acid an alkali, as ammonia or soda, will neutralize it and help to allay the pain and swelling.—Farm and Home.

HINTS FOR BEEKEEPERS.

Shade the hives when the weather is warm.

Put starters of thin foundation in the section boxes.

Look out for robbers when the harvest becomes scarce.

Basswood is the greatest honey producer while in bloom.

Remove all frames filled with brood from the brood chamber.

Put the honey in the driest, warmest room about the house.

If exposed to cold or dampness honey will granulate in the cells.

Strong colonies at the proper time insure a good honey harvest.

If you work for extracted be careful not to extract too close.

A little pine tar smeared on a board will drive ants from the hive.

A weak solution of carbolic acid and salt is a good remedy for bee stings.

Where the honey is extracted a large number of extra combs are necessary.

Honey properly kept will improve. The longer it is kept the better it will be.

In using the smoker the judgment of the operator must determine the quantity.

When bees are building comb or raising brood they must have plenty of water.

Colonies with young queens are less liable to build drone comb than with old queens.

United bees will be more successful if the condemned queens are killed two or three days before uniting.

The only way to keep drones for any length of time is to keep them in queenless colonies.—St. Louis Republic.

Good News from Missouri.

Robert Cornwell, a Barton county (Mo.) farmer, living near Golden City, after numerous experiments, thinks he has succeeded in developing a potato that will grow without vines. They grow entirely under ground, and will do away with the fear of potato bugs, which cost so much to destroy each season, not to mention the damage they do. A field planted with the vineless potato may be worked with the ordinary harrow. Should the new potato prove to be a good producer, as Mr. Cornwell hopes, it is likely to supersede the present variety.

Story of a Scarecrow.

There is an honest Swede employed as a gardener in the East End, and his deliberate speeches are a source of much delight to his employer. He has been much annoyed by thievish birds, and a few days ago suggested that a scarecrow would be a good thing. It took him some time to make the employer understand what he meant, but finally he realized it was a dummy bird scarer, "lak in of country."

The employer fell in with the idea and told the Swede to rig up a frame. When this was completed the latter was given a bundle of cast-off clothing to deck out his dummy. He looked askance at the garments as he put them on the sticks and was evidently much impressed by their excellent condition. He glanced down at his own clothes from time to time and seemed to be making a silent comparison. Presently he put the scarecrow in the garden and returned to his employer, who stood at some little distance. He looked at the work of art with his head very much on one side, and finally said:

"Say, mister."

"Well, John?"

"Ay tank maybe it was better I change clothes with scarecrow, or else stand myself in his place."

He couldn't bear to see the dummy wearing better clothes than he did.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Pistols and Pestles.

The duelling pistol now occupies its proper place, in the museum of the collector of relics of barbarism. The pistol ought to have beside it the pestle that turned out pills like bullets, to be shot like bullets at the target of the liver. But the pestle is still in evidence, and will be, probably, until everybody has tested the virtue of Ayer's sugar coated pills. They treat the liver as a friend, not as an enemy. Instead of driving it, they coax it. They are compounded on the theory that the liver does its work thoroughly and faithfully under obstructing conditions, and if the obstructions are removed, the liver will do its daily duty. When your liver wants help, get "the pill that will."

DELANO, FRIDAY, AUG. 27, 1897.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE VILLAGE OF DELANO.

DELANO DIARY

—Read Schaffer's change of add.

—Al Hitsman and crew are going to help people about Park River, Dak., to thresh out their grain.

—C. G. Roosen purchased a saddle horse last week, of Leon Frazee, and now rides with a less foreign accent.

—Train loads of cattle from the West, in cars marked "C. C. C. C." pass East over the G. N. most every day now.

—Superintendant Lee held Teachers examination Friday and Saturday at the school house. About fifteen teachers were present.

—The horses to be auctioned here are the finest looking animals we have seen brought in for sale. Several sales have already been made.

—Monday, Sept. 6, has been set apart as Labor Day, a holiday. Schools are commencing on Tuesday the 7th on account of this fact.

—Delano has one of the best flouring mills and one of the best millers in this part of the country and we hear no "kicking" from any direction.

—An auction of 50 head of young mares and geldings will be held at Delano, on Monday, Aug. 30, at 2 o'clock p. m.

E. E. BILLINGS.

—Rev. Says has concluded to preach in English the last Sunday of every month. This is an inovation that will be appreciated by many of his congregation.

—C. H. Green & Co. so long the Northern Delano merchants are now more centrally located and they haven't moved either. They seem to be doing their share of the trade. Read their add.

—The Delano Furniture Company have the new post office nearly ready for occupancy. Mr. Lindsley will have an able corps of assistance, Mrs. L. and John Steffes having agreed to help him.

—It is expected that the Cargill elevator will be running soon again. Whether this will furnish competition in the wheat trade, or simply be a side show to the round elevator we are not prepared to say.

—Electrician M. E. Muckey subscribed this week for the Scientific American, and the GAZETTE. He proposes to be thoroughly posted on scientific matter and home news. He keeps his electrical apparatus up with the times.

—Rev. J. L. Farber will take a vacation for a couple of weeks. The Epworth League will visit the Armstrong E. L. next Sunday evening so there will be no services at the M. E. church on that evening. Prayer meeting Thursday nights.

—A game of base ball was played on Sunday at Delano. People drove from a distance. From all accounts it was a more than usually disgraceful affair. Respectable people don't care to have their names printed in connection with it. Sunday base ball is usually unsatisfactory.

—"Therefore leaving the principles of the doctrine of Christ, let us go on unto perfection;" a part of the first verse and the sixth chapter of Hebrews, was the text taken by Rev. Farber Sunday evening for an able sermon. A larger audience was present than during the hot season. More men attended than usual. This is as it should be. Let the good work go on, —Farmers complain that men to hire are not plenty now. Some of them have to work hard to save their crops. It is not so much how much grows on the farm as it is how much is taken care of. It pays to save everything that can be of any use to anybody. Straw can be sold for a dollar or more a load many times during the winter. Boys can get a dollar or so of their own by hauling it when they have opportunity. It beats burning it up while people need it.

—The parochial school will open Sept. 7th with an enlarged programme; one additional teacher has been secured this year. The teaching body consists now of five sisters and Father Savs. Sister M. Angeline remains the principal as before. A musical department is added this year in order to meet the desire of many music-loving pupils. Catholic as well as non-Catholic. Pupils of any denomination are admitted to this class. A lesson is charged 50cts. For particulars apply to the sister directress M. Angeline. All departments (musical department excepted) are under personal supervision of Rev. M. Savs.

—Minnesota is noted for her numerous lakes furnishing fine fish; her sportsmen have succeeded in stopping the catching of fish during much of the year, and instead of our people being supplied with fish fresh from the lakes at 5cts per pound, the usual price when there is any, J. J. Hill has a monopoly on the market for salmon packed in ice, from Oregon, at 8cts a pound. It would be better for our citizens to use the fish nature puts at their doors, and patronize the boys of their own neighborhood who make a living at catching them, than to pay more to J. J. Hill and other monopolies who catch salmon with wheels and other devices, and bring them here for their agents to hawk about the streets.

—Considerable plowing is being done already; and preparations for next years seed time are being made.

C. I. Johnson, the veteran all round printer's repair man was in town over Sunday. He is figuring on extensive improvements at the Eagle office, and incidentally will make some repairs for the GAZETTE.

The delegation from Delano bound for Buffalo, N. Y. left in good order and consisted of Dr. J. S. Shrader and wife and daughter Beth, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Matter, Rob Muckenheim, Joe Bauman, Ignatius Gutzwiller, Mrs. A. W. Wittman, Mrs. Thomas Rader, Miss Allie Murphy, Miss Maggie Steffes add Mrs. C. A. Brunkow.

County Cullings.

Adjutant General Saylor surely did not read proof of his man Tanner's article on the Howard Case. Bro. Tanner just went for the way that case is being handled, with his gloves off. That's right Bro. Tanner, we like to see a man independent, and have the courage to present to his readers the inwardness of such matters.

County Attorney Pidgeon may have made a point or so with the people interested most in the Howard case by getting the case into the hands of Attorney General Childs, instead of leaving it with Mr. Larabee, the choice of the County Commissioners. But when election time rolls round, unless the case has been conducted to suit the people, the people will be apt to remember who conducted the case and who appointed him to conduct it.

By what authority, we would like to know, can a County Attorney, appointed by the Board of County Commissioners, appoint the Attorney General to conduct the Howard case after the County Commissioners had appointed Frank Larabee to conduct it. It seems to us if we were the Board and had made such appointment we would try to harmonize them by asking for the resignation of the County Attorney and would then appoint a man who would see things about right.

When a man's popularity is allowed to rest on his postoffice recommendations, he is sure to last quick. No man should attempt to boss that job in any county and hope to receive party suffrage afterward.—Delano Eagle.

What has the gizzardless old gormand stuck on now? Which of her friends has scooped her in nominating postmasters? Does she mean Page Morris, or Billy Culkin? And which postmaster is it that she is ruffling her feathers at, anyway? Come Old Bird, out with it. Don't leave your readers in the dark; but let them know what's up; and whos'e to blame.

Editors Eaton and French who used to work in the same yoke have got to pulling off terribly. There seems danger of a bow pin breaking, or pulling out and letting the pair apart. Couldn't the "bosses" do something to prevent this catastrophe? At present it looks as if Eaton was the nigh ox and would free himself entirely from restraint, while the off steer would go off with the heavy yoke to drag through the brush all alone. Such great party dissentions can hardly result otherwise than injuriously to the party so long in power; unless ex Governor Merriam may be able, during prosperous times, to collect some of his bad debts and again become rich enough to prevail upon some of his old "cringers" to again aid him in his political aspirations.

The Howard Lake Herald and the Minneapolis Times are trying Joe Boxell for the murder of his father. The Times is prosecuting while the Herald defends. The verdict of the people is reserved until after court sits again. The Times claims that Alex McVeety swore out a warrant for the arrest of Joe Boxell soon after the Times published its version of the story in July, and that as yet, the county officials have not served the warrant. The Times says one of McVeety's friends says the reason why the warrant has not been served is that a reward of $750 has been offered for the arrest of the right party and the county officials, if making the arrest on McVeety's warrant would not share in the reward nor in the glory. There appears to people so far away from the scene of murder even as Delano that there is a nigger in the fence somewhere about making arrests in the case. Weeks and months have been allowed to go by and unless a trial is had at the next term of court, the people will learn to look upon the case as they do upon several others that have occurred in the county simply as past history, not to be stirred up.

We don't believe in criticising, unjustly, county officials. They should have time to make arrests, after hunting up evidence; but it does seem as if Thomas Boxell and wife had been dead long enough for evidence enough to be found, if it ever is to be, to convict the right parties. And when people hint that the reward is what is wanted, worse than the prisoners, is it not possible that the defense might offer a bigger reward than the plaintiff in the case?

The A. O. U. W. Lodge of this place will celebrate Labor Day in grand style, this year. There will be an industrial parade in the forenoon and a programme of games and sports in the afternoon. They also expect Grand Master Workman Hines to be with them in the evening and put through a class of eleven.—Annandale Post.

To the Press.

J. I. Wilkins left home, in Farragut, Iowa, July 22. He drove a brown pony to a top buggy and had two boys aged 4 and 6 years respectively, with him. Mr. Wilkins wears and artificial foot and limps when walking, is a school teacher and a telegraph operator. Last heard from when passing through Sloan, Woolbury Co., Ia. Any information as to his whereabouts, or that of the boys will be thankfully received by his wife, left destitute and grieving for information in regard to their present location. Benevolent people, mothers especially, are earnestly requested to write any information as to the boys.

HOW A PUZZLL WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, by authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

IN SADNESS PREFERRED.

(From the Wilmar Tribune)

I would rather be weak and feeble.
And kind to my brother man,
Than a giant in strength and labor
With never a noble plan.

For a shuddering thought comes homeward
To my shivering heart's affright—
To strive for selfish gains alone
The grandest soul would blight.

For hoarded treasure blackens,
If men are enslaved to buy it;
And the gall of earth is scarcely worth
The shrinkage of life to try it.

ORPHA WORTHINGTON KIRBY.

GREEN LAKE, Minn., Aug. 20, 1897.

THE racing world has been looking for years for a two minute horse. On Saturday they realized their fondest hopes. Star Pointer, the famous pacer paced a mile in 1:59½, at Readville, Mass.

MANY people, when they run out of arguments, poke fun at their opponents; try to "laugh them out of court." Newspapers are like the people who make them. The St. Paul Globe has one of the funniest funny editors in the state at present.

THE Bank of Minnesota, in Minneapolis, has again closed its doors. It has never flourished, it seems, since Phil Scheig was sent to Stillwater and Bofferding committed suicide and Gov. Clough got re elected Governor. Such a commotion among the officials of an ordinary everyday bank is about enough to bust it, and the Bank of Minnesota evidently was one of this kind.

ANOTHER bond issue by the U. S. Government is seriously talked of. This government has now about all the bonds out that she can pay interest on, and when it comes to issuing more to raise money to pay interest on old ones it looks bad and will not aid the credit of of any Government that runs on that principle. It is about time that the government begin to pay off rather than increase its bonded indebtedness.

WHILE corporations make it a point to contract with professional men and others whose services they require, at half regular rates, it is hardly to be expected that the best talent will be in employ. While railroads contract with editors, lawyers, doctors, and others along their line at half rates people must expect their employes will be half rate men. The best, and most skillful workmen, are not bargaining away their services, as a rule, to corporations, at half price. Professional men who make such contracts with railroad companies deserve little sympathy from others whom they charge regular rates, or more, in order to eke out an existance for themselves and families.

THE Pioneer Press Washington Bureau claims that the Dingley bill will furnish revenue sufficient to run the Government; that it is much better than the Wilson bill, and in the same article bewails the fact that we are loosing our export trade; that Germany is getting it from us; having supplied $24,000 worth to South America that the U. S. ought to have had.

The P. P. claims that Germany has a way of sending out an army of "drummers" for trade, who exhibit goods and make a market for them, and suggests that the U. S. do the same! Make a lot more offices, eh! Why, another twist would have to be given the Dingley bill to get sufficient revenue to pay these foreign agents.

Wouldn't it be easier for the U. S. to lower her tariff rates so that foreigners could bring their goods here and exchange them for what they need, and take away our products and bring us what we would be glad to get from their lands, than to send out a lot more government officials to work up trade? England, the P. P. says, has the bulk of trade in the market of other countries. England allows other people's goods to come to her little island home comparatively free of duty, consequently her people get a chance to trade their goods off as the vessels prefer to return loaded.

If the Dingley bill brings in enough money to run the government and our export trade falls off like that, who pays the tariff? Is it not America?

A SCHOOL row is on in Spring Valley, Ill. It seems the Spring Valley Coal Company have for seven straight years been defeated at the polls in their effort to get control of the schools; but the last election gave them a majority of the board when they hired teachers. They gave one of their members of the board a fifty dollar job turning a bridge and he moved across the river when his seat on the board was declared vacant. The other side being in the majority, another set of teachers was hired, and after an injunction had been in force for awhile and dissolved, the two sets of teachers and a lot of police to preserve order, opened school. The pupils, in many instances refusing to recite to the coal companies teachers. This carrying the war into the schools is sure to soon bring things to a focus. What is our country coming to anyway? Every honest man should think well over these things and vote his honest convictions and the God of the Universe will take care of His own.

THERE seems to us to be a good deal of fake about several things that at the present time are exciting the populace of this country. There is a great cry about gold, in the Yukon river, Alaska; enough to flood the country; all it wants is to be got. Then comes the announcement that you must not go there until spring; you will freeze or starve to death sure, if you do. It might about as well be told that there is a bag of gold at the end of the rainbow and be done with it. Then comes the hurrah that wheat is a dollar a bushel! Prosperity has come! This is nice. We like prosperity; but we can't find anybody that has got a dollar a bushel for wheat this year yet. It is claimed the grade is poor; that farmers had better hold it until it dries; that then they will get a better grade for it. This may be all right; but, if we possessed a crop of wheat we would endeavor to get the best possible grade and a price as near a dollar a bushel for it as we could and sell it; keeping only enough to be sure of supplying our own needs and for seed.

There are elections to be held in several states soon. After these are over it is our belief that the wheat market will be more settled; the grade better; and prices lowea. That the Klondyke fever will be several degrees lower, and things take on something of their natural state under the circumstances.

Section 22.

Quite a commotion has been stirred up over Section 22, of the Dingley tariff bill approved July 24, 1897. Some of the Senators have tried to crawl out at the well worn hole made by their predecessors who voted to demonetize silver and didn't know it. Congressmen are claiming they didn't know that it was loaded; that they never knew that it meant what it is now supposed to mean. The member from Minnesota, Mr. Tawney, is accused of having injected Sec. 22, into the bill. The section is not very plain to many. Everybody should read it over and see if they would be proud of being a Congressman to vote for it to say nothing of having injected it into the bill.

Below we give the section in dispute. Read it carefully several times and then if you are satisfied what it means and will send us your interpretation in as concise a statement as possible we would be pleased to publish it for the enlightenment of the people. Send in your interpretation as early in the week as possible:

SEC. 22. That a discriminating duty of ten per centum ad valorem, in addition to the duties imposed by law, shall be levied, collected, and paid on all goods, wares, or merchandise which shall be imported in vessels not of the United States, or which being the production or manufacture of any foreign country not contiguous to the United States, shall come into the United States from such contiguous country; but this discriminating duty shall not apply to goods, wares, or merchandise which shall be imported in vessels not of the United States, entitled at the time of such importation by treaty or convention to be entered in the ports of the United States on payment of the same duties as shall then be payable on goods, wares, and merchandise imported in vessels of the United States, nor to such foreign products or manufactures as shall be imported from such contiguous countries in the usual course of strictly retail trade.

Coal Operators and Miners.

The great coal miners strike grows larger and larger. Statements and replies from both sides of the controversy are being published.

The coal operators committe gave out a statement in reply to President Rachford's manifesto. They claim that Mr. Rachford's statement "that the operators never asked for a conference but declared a determination to build stockades and to employ Gatling guns and Pinkerton detectives" is false. The statement claims Mr. Ratchford declined to accept any of four propositions made, and again of five propositions. It claims that under a 54 cent rate miners earned more than a majority of mechanics in mills and factories in Pittsburg; and more than any common laborer on railroads east of the Rocky mountains.

If claimed, many things said by Mr. R. are false and untrue.

Col. W. P. Rend, a mine owner, is reported as saying: "Who are these great champions of labor's cause? One is an extreme socialist, another is an industrial fire-brand, and the remaining member of this trio of sedition is a Judas and a traitor to the cause of labor. Debs, Sovereign and Ratchford have united together in their evil design. Such a general strike as contemplated by them would be a colossal crime against the entire country."

Col. Rend shows himself about as much master of "lurid language" "grandeloquence of spurious patriotism" and so forth as he imagines "leading orators born in Europe, or of European parentage," to be. Wonder where he came from, and who he is anyway? And if his parents were native Indians, or came from the Cannibal Islands?

Such inflammatory talk in the newspapers tends to provoke discord as much as does the marching of striking miners, soberly and quietly done.

So long as operators can crowd down labor and cause the men to strike and lay idle, while they advance the price of coal and wring from poor defenseless people thousands of dollars in advance prices, so long will there be strikes. So long as railroads can arbitrarily raise freight rates and cut down men's wages as they see fit, and greed controles their motives, so long will the laborer have to be hard pressed for the necessities of life, and will leaders be found and followers easily obtained to cry out against such injustice.

Cargo of Silk.

From the Pioneer Press of Aug. 30, we clip the following:

TACOMA, WASH., Aug. 29.—The steamer Columbia arrived here to-day on her voyage from Yokohoma with 125 passengers and a full cargo of freight. The Columbia's cargo includes 1,700 bales of silk, valued at $500,000, which will go across the continent, via the Northern Pacific, in a special train of eight baggage cars. The Columbia brings Oriental advices up to July 27.

Seventeen hundred bales of silk! Five hundred thousand dollars worth of silk! This silk, requiring eight baggage cars to carry it, must weigh considerable; and in its raw state the tariff is 40cts per pound. This will help Uncle Sam to run his government quite a little. Wonder if the farmers are all going to buy their wives and daughters silk dresses this winter? And who will pay that tariff of 40 cts per pound anyway?

Chippewa Commission.

Ex-Congressman M. R. Baldwin don't like being unceremoniously fired out of office any better than his comrade Mc Donald, of the St. Cloud land office did. Both claim their terms had not expired. Both claim to have been soldiers of the late war; comrades of President McKinley. Baldwin was a member of the famous Iron Brigade, and prides himsels on that fact. He claims, in his letter, that he is a "sound" money man, also. But when he failed to comply with a request to resign he was promptly notified that he "is hereby removed" from his office Chairman of the Chippewa Commission.

Mr. Baldwin has a lengthy letter in the great "sound" money Democratic Daily Globe of Monday in which he sets forth his view of several matters. Incidentally he pays a little respects to Mike Doran and Dan Lawler for sidetracking him into the Indian business while he was on the main track for Marshall or Surveyor General.

He then deals with the way affairs have been run by those in power. He claims he tried to get justice for the Chippewas and was fought by pine line sharks, and his superiors in office would not listen to his complaints.

Mr. Baldwin complains that the estimating of pine on the Chippewa lands has cost entirely too much; that the estimates have fraudulently been made too low to the detriment of the Indians by thousands of dollars, while "the gang" have raked in the returns.

Mr. B. says he could wind up the business of the bureau in six months if allowed to; that the office is clearly under the Civil Service rules and he is fully entitled to hold it. And cites as an argument in favor of this proposition that when he took charge of the work the salaries connected with the commission were $2,400 per month as against $600 per month for the three months last past.

The ex-Congressman is evidently much more in a fighting mood now than when he formed that famous epistle to brother Democrats advising them to refrain from voting at the last election. McKinley ought surely to have his attention called to that fact in connection with the Major's other arguments for holding onto his job.

Swallowing Dirt.

The humorist, Bob Burdette, gives this recipe for swallowing dirt:

"My homeless friend with the cromatic nose, while you are stirring up the sugar in a ten cent glass of gin, let me give you a fact to wash down with it. You may say you have longed for years for the free, independent life of a farmer but you have never been able to get money enough to buy a farm. But there is where you are mistaken. For some years you have been drinking a good improved farm at the rate of one hundred square feet at a gulp. If you doubt this statement figure it out for yourself. An acre of land contains 43,560 feet; estimating, for convenience, the land at $43.56 an acre, you will see that it brings the land to just one mill per square foot. Now pour down the fiery dose and imagine you are swallowing a strawberry patch. Call in five of your friends and have them help you gulp down that 500 foot garden. Get on a prolonged spree some day and see how long it will take to swallow a pasture land to feed a cow. Put down that glass of gin; there is dirt in it—three hundred feet of good, rich dirt, worth $43.56 per acre."

POLAND NOT YET LOST.

American Poles Banded Together for Its Liberation.

The ultimate freedom of Poland and the propagation of good citizenship are the principal aims of the Polish union, whose national convention will be held in St. Paul next week. It seeks to keep alive among Polish Americans the history of their native land and at the same time make of them good American citizens, and it aims to keep them advanced along the lines of education, morals and religion.

The union was formed in St. Paul six or seven years ago, chiefly through the efforts of Rev. Father Dominick Majer, the pastor of St. Adelbert's Polish Catholick church. Since that time the union has spread throughout all the states that contain colonies of Poles until at present the order has about 2,000 members scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

The annual national convention will meet in St. Paul Tuesday, Sept. 7, and will last several days. There is considerable business of importance to the order to be discussed, among other things the assessment of the members and the formation of a reserve fund for the payment of insurance, for the order is beneficiary and pays $750 insurance in case of death.

There are three branches of the union in St. Paul and one in Minneapolis, the four branches having a total membership of about 300. The union insists that its members become citizens of the United States, and it believes that as Poland was once free it shall again gain its independence. The organization does not favor revolutions or anarchy, but believes that by peaceful means can its objects be obtained. It also insists that its members shall be believers in religion and it seeks to spread the doctrines of Christianity.

There will probably be one hundred delegates at the convention, coming from nearly every state, but the greater portion from Minnesota, Wisconsin, the Dakotas, Ohio, Michigan, Iowa, Nebraska, Pennsylvania, New York, and New Jersey. The meetings will begin with a mass at the Polish church on Charles street Tuesday morning. The sessions of the convention proper will be held in Jarosz's hall, corner Thomas and Gaultier streets.

The following are the national officers of the union: President, A. Trondwoski, Buffalo; secretary, M. Zogorski, St. Paul; vice secretary, Mr. Okornesski, St. Paul; treasurer, Mr. Jararz, St. Paul; chaplain, Rev. D. Majer, St. Paul.—Minneapolis Times

The Toledo Weekly Blade.

Every intelligent family needs in addition to their local paper, a good national weekly. The greatest and most widely known general family newspaper is the Toledo Weekly Blade. For thirty years it has been a regular visitor in every part of the Union and is well known in almost every one of the 70,000 post offices in the country. It is edited with reference to a national circulation. It is a Republican paper, but men of all politics take it, because of its honesty and fairness in the discussion of all public questions. It is the favorite family paper, with something for every member of the household. Serial stories, poetry, wit and humor; the Household department, (best in the world). Young Folks, Sunday School Lessons, Talmage's Sermons, the Farmstead, the Question Bureau (which answers questions for subscribers), the News of the Week in complete form, and other special features. Specimen copies gladly sent on application, and if you will send us a list of addresses, we will mail a copy to each. Only $1 a year. If you wish to raise a club, write for terms.

Address THE BLADE, Toledo, Ohio.

Among Our Exchanges.

Litchfield Independent:—C. F. Spencer, the editor of the Atwater Press, had his $100 typewriter smashed by an enemy one night recently. A window pane of the office was broken, the writing machine taken out through the window and smashed on the sidewalk.

Minneapolis Tribune:—When natural and artificial conditions combine to restore prosperity there can be no doubt of its genuiness and its permanency. President McKinley summarized the situation the other day in this characteristically felicitous fashion.

Pioneer Press:—More petitions have been presented to the trustees of Brown university asking that President Andrews' resignation be not accepted. The world is a long time learning to mind its own business.

Independence Incidents.

The late rains we have had will moisten up the ground for plowing and will be a great benefit in many other ways.

Hugh Hanlon, Frank Hanlon, and O. R. McGary drove to Minneapolis yesterday.

Quite a good many of the farmers are having their threshing done. Wheat is turning out 12 to 20 bu. per acre.

A good many of the Independence people attended camp meeting at Rockford last Sunday.

Farmers have done but little plowing yet.

Last Saturday James Personett arrived home with his new bride and a grand reception was given him at the home of John Pagenkoff. Jim will follow his same old trade, that of teaching school.

School will begin in District 102 next Monday. Miss Edith Ames Teacher.

All the sick that were previously reported are improving.

The Klondyke movement and the price of wheat has caused no little excitement in these parts but with good care and perseverance it is hoped all will recover from the malady.

Some say times are on the upward move. We hope this is true for the country is in great need of money and brains.

Died in Independence, latter part of last week, Jacob Dick, one of the early settlers of Minnesota. We cannot give a detailed account of Mr. Dick's death as we have not learned the particulars.

A Kentucky man left his family and stayed away five years. When he returned and found his wife married to another man he promptly shot him.

Klondike is much nearer the states now than was California in 1849 and 1850, when it took from four to five months of marching to reach the gold fields.

The visit of Emperor William to the czar is said to have resulted in an understanding that Russia and Germany will act together as obstructants to British expansion.

One-fifth of a column is what the New York papers give now to an account of an execution by electricity. The current has a great mission if it is to cut down the supply of yellow rhetoric.

President McKinley receives an average of 60 begging letters a day. People in all parts of the country write soliciting his aid to get them temporarily out of trouble. The other day the total amount requested was $25,000.

A New York paper recently wrote to the governors of all the states and territories for estimates of the present population. All the reports have been carefully compiled and show that the total population of this country is now, in round numbers, 75,000,000.

A cyclist in Portland, Me., took his wheel to pieces to clean it, putting the balls, bearings, etc., on the doorstep, where they were gobbled up by some chickens. Instead of egg-bearing chickens he now has a flock of ball bearing hens and the way they go through a flower bed is a marvel in mechanism to the neighbors.

A Pennsylvania husband came home drunk and tumbled into bed with his boots on. His patient wife sewed him up tight in the sheets and proceeded to give him a sound thrashing. As soon as released he had her arrested for "assault," and the judge proceeded to commend the wife and gave the husband ten days on bread and water in the workhouse. Some men have no appreciation of the efforts of a good wife.

Life has its romances, tragedies and comedies as sweet, as sad and as terrible as any which novelist, poet or playwright ever conceived. The original of "Evangelina" was probably no more romantic or truly poetic than the story of the two Scandinavians, Lena Olson and Christopher Bergstrom, who, parted as lovers in their youth, both died in the Dunning (Ill.) asylum, where they had lived for many years in their old age, not knowing each other.

It may be interesting to know that the felt sombrero is regarded as more of a protection against heat than the straw hat in the hottest countries. The cowboy of the western plains, who is without the shade of trees, always uses the former. It keeps out the hot air, which the latter lets in. The principle is exactly that recognized by the Arabs of the desert and the Hindoo of India, who pile up fold after fold of linen turban over their heads and between their skulls and the tropical sun.

The Klondike discoveries have caused a renewal of efforts upon the part of gold seekers in other sections. There is great excitement in California over new finds, and not in 30 years has prospecting been so generally indulged in. Elsewhere and in almost every state in the union gold is being found. As a matter of fact it is to be found almost everywhere, but the trouble is that in most cases it is in such minute quantities that the men who rely upon their findings for support will assuredly starve to death.

A Minnesota farmer says corn makes a better and cheaper fuel than coal. He raised enough on ten acres to heat his house and feed two horses and a cow through the winter. Nevertheless, he is on the wrong track. Coal has but one use, while corn has many. Corn is bringing an increasing number of golden millions from other continents, and will soon take one of the highest places in our list of exports. To a patriot sitting by a corn fire the vision of good things vanishing up the chimney would be painful. Somebody will be proposing next to heat buildings by extracting the caloric in maple molasses.

The report of the United States commissioner of education, Dr. William T. Harris, for the year ended July 1, 1896, has just been completed. It brings the educational progress of the country up to that date and embraces the latest statistics the bureau had gathered. The report shows a total enrollment in that year, in the schools and colleges, both public and private, of 15,997,197 pupils. This was an increase of 308,575. In addition there were 418,000 pupils in special schools and institutions, business colleges, music conservatories, Indian and reform schools, making the total for the country 16,415,197.

It is proposed in the Pacific coast cities to send to the Yukon river some of the great earth and mud-eating machines that are used to redeem tide lands. The dredger can handle as much gravel as 500 men, and properly equipped it is expected to devour sandbars at one end and turn out gold bricks at the other. All work shall be done in American territory. The '49ers will be astonished by the new wrinkles to be applied in the Alaska diggings. Invention has been lively in the last 50 years and the army of Americans in Alaska will shake up that corner of the earth in a way to interest all mankind.

Epitome of the Week.

Prescott, president of the International Typographical union, of Indianapolis, was chosen temporary chairman, and A. M. Pearce, of Columbus, temporary secretary.

The committee on credentials made its report immediately upon the assembling of the conference for its afternoon session. It was shown that 88 delegates, representing the following organizations, were represented:

United Mine Workers of America, the Social Democracy, the American Federation of Labor, the Stonemakers' International union, Brotherhood of Painters and Decorators, Brotherhood of Bottle Blowers, Building Trades Council of St. Louis, the Patriots of America, International Brotherhood of Track Foremen, the Single Tax League of America, Central Labor Council of Cincinnati, the International Typographical union, the People's party of Kansas and the Industrial Order of Freedmen.

The temporary organization was then made permanent, and the chairman read the call for the convention.

The chairman then named as the committee "on resolutions and plan of action" W. C. Pearce, of the miners; W. D. Mahon, of the street railway men; Victor Berger, of Milwaukee, who represents the Social Democracy, in whose favor Mr. Debbs declined; G. C. Clemens, of Topeka, representing the populists, and James R. Sovereign.

Mr. Ratchford then took the floor. He went over the miners' strike from its inception to the present day, and dwelt particularly upon "government by injunction." He pleaded for prompt action, and coming to the point of his argument, advocated a special session of congress as the best, and in fact, the only relief. "I believe," said Mr. Ratchford, "a special session of congress is necessary to define the rights of the people of this country—if they have any. I believe if sufficient time were given, the president of the United States will call a special session of congress to act upon the matter of injunctions and find means of relief from the existing troubles in the labor world.

"In case of refusal," said Mr. Ratchford, impressively, after an outburst of cheering had subsided, "it will then be time to consider more extreme measures. I am in favor if the president refuses to call congress together of a complete paralysis of business. I believe then in a sympathetic strike."

Mr. Sovereign put himself on record as opposed to Mr. Ratchford's plan. He believed this would be the last convention to be held under present conditions, and that the crucial test now confronted organized labor.

SMALL OPERATORS REVOLT.

Are Inclined to Break Away from the "Big Thirteen."

Pittsburgh, Pa., Aug. 30.—The big coal operators who control the lake business are about to face another force in addition to the strikers. The small operators, who are in the majority in the Pittsburgh district, have at last broken out in open revolt against the dictation of the "big thirteen," as the lake shippers are called. They openly defy their former masters, and declare they will open their mines at once, conceding the price demanded by the strikers. If the plans formulated by the small operators are carried out it is more than probable that their mines will be in operation by the latter part of this week, and the price paid to the miners will be 69 cents per ton. They have been willing to pay the demands of the miners ever since the strike was inaugurated. Owing to the fact, however, that they sold their coal to the "big thirteen," or companies composing the lake-shipping syndicate, President Dolan refused to give his consent to allow their miners to work. These smaller operators now have plans which they will present to the president of the United Mine Workers, and it is thought he will approve of them, and the strikers will gain a temporary victory.

NEW AMERICAN PARTY.

Favors the Demonetization of Both Gold and Silver.

St. Louis, Aug. 27.—The new American party was launched Thursday by a convention of between 40 and 50 delegates, who have been in session in this city for the last few days. They represent nine states and territories, and are said to have backing in a large number of other states. A national committee was elected of ten members, with Col. E. H. Sellers, of Detroit, as chairman. A platform was adopted, and Detroit was selected for the committee headquarters for the ensuing year.

On the financial question the platform has this to say:

"Since nearly or quite 99 per cent. of all business transactions of the country are accomplished without the use of specie, we favor the demonetization of both gold and silver, the prohibition of contracts for payment in coin of either metal and the substitution of metallic tokens for our present minor coins.

"We believe that all currency should be in the form of treasury notes of unlimited legal tender quality, and in such quantities as shall facilitate the freest commercial exchange, and that every form of currency notes should be withdrawn from circulation."

Grain Blockade.

Chicago, Aug. 31.—Railroads and elevators in and around this city are being literally swamped with the unprecedented movement of grain from the west. The railroads not only have every box car in service, but are loading up stock cars and rigging up other equipment in vain efforts to handle the traffic. The St. Paul, Burlington and Rock Island are blocked with grain trains for miles out of the city and every side track in the country is being used for storage tracks. Monday 6,065 cars of grain were offered for sale on the board of trade. This means two days' receipts. Bulk stuff is being contracted to go east via water. The demand for vessel room is so great that the lake rate from Chicago to Buffalo has advanced 100 per cent. or to two cents per bushel, and boats cannot now be secured at this rate.

The Season's Seal Catch.

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 31. — Advices from the Behring sea by the steamer Portland show that the entire catch of the North American Commercial company for the season was 20,000 skins, which are now en route to San Francisco on the steamer Del Norte. Last year's catch amounted to over 20,000 skins. Instead of over 70 sealers that hunted last year in the Behring sea there are but 29 this season.

RAID ENDS IN DEATH.

Posse Attacks Stronghold of Arkansas Moonshiners.

Little Rock, Ark., Aug. 31.—Six men were probably massacred in the wilds of the mountains of Pope county Sunday afternoon. Two were killed outright, two were fatally wounded and left for dead, and two have mysteriously disappeared, and are either dead or being held captive by the bloodthirsty bandits who committed the awful crime. The killed are Capt. B. F. Taylor, of Searcy county, a deputy United States marshal; Joe Dodson, of Stone county, a deputy marshal. The fatally wounded are two brothers named Renfrew, of Searcy county. The names of the missing men are not known, but they are supposed to be deputy sheriffs from an adjoining county. The victims were all officers, deputy United States marshals and deputy sheriffs, and the men who did the awful work of carnage are moonshiners of the boldest and most desperate class.

The scene of the bloody crime was a gulch or ravine in the mountains of Pope county, at an isolated spot 35 miles from Russellville, the nearest telegraph office, and ten miles from Will Springs. The region is wild and isolated. It has for years been the favorite rendezvous for counterfeiters and moonshiners, and a district in which no law-abiding citizen could live.

Capt. B. F. Taylor, the richest man in Searcy county, and a man of much prominence, determined to aid the officers in putting down crime in that section. He secured a commission as a deputy United States marshal and led the posse in the raid that resulted in his death. A few years ago a successful raid was made in the same locality in which a dozen moonshiners were captured and brought to Little Rock. One of them told the officers at least 50 large distilleries were operating in the same neighborhood.

Capt. Taylor was an ex-captain in the federal army. He had served two terms in the state legislature, and was noted for his bravery.

ENCAMPMENT IS OVER.

G. A. R. Meets Again in Cincinnati—Gobin Its New Commander.

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 27.—The first addresses delivered after the opening of the session Wednesday morning were those of Gov. Black, Mayor Jewett and Commander Shaw, welcoming the veterans respectively on behalf of the state, the city and the New York department of the G. A. R. Comrade Foster, of New York, then read an original poem.

Commander in Chief Thaddeus S. Clarkson proceeded to deliver his annual address. After the usual compliments and felicitations he proceeded to touch upon a variety of subjects. In relation to the story of the war as taught to children in the books of the public schools, and which has recently come in for a large share of public attention, the commander in chief said:

"It is certainly not the object of the Grand Army of the Republic to keep open the wounds of the war, but of this we are determined—that one side of that great struggle was right and the other side was wrong—and we were not the wrong side, and we don't intend that our children shall be taught that we were."

After reports of the other officers had been presented, the hall was cleared for the executive session, at which Cincinnati was chosen as the next place of meeting, and Gen. Gobin was elected commander in chief.

Buffalo, N. Y., Aug. 28.—The grand army encampment Friday, after electing Alfred Lyth, of Buffalo, senior vice commander; Dr. David Mackey, of Dallas, Tex., surgeon general; Francis B. Allen, of Hartford, adjutant general, and Rev. Frank C. Bruner, of Chicago, chaplain in chief, adjourned to meet at Cincinnati next year.

A NEW MILE MARK.

Star Pointer Makes a Mile Under Two Minutes at Readville, Mass.

Boston, Aug. 30.—Star Pointer, the wonderful pacing stallion, owned by James A. Murphy, of Chicago, on Saturday wiped out forever the two-minute mark and ended the controversy which has been going on for years as to the speed qualities of the light harness horse. Accompanied by a runner, the big bay Tennessee-bred pacing stallion went the distance in 1:59¼. It was the most wonderful performance ever made by a light harness horse and was witnessed by about 8,000 people. It was the more wonderful because on Friday Joe Patchen, with the great Geers behind him, had made a shot at the mark set by Robert J. and John R. Gentry and had failed to reach it by a second and a half. Because of this it was not thought possible his greatest rival in the race line would get down below the two-minute mark.

The great event occurred on the track at Readville. The track was in excellent condition, and Star Pointer made the record with hardly an effort. When he started it was not thought he would do better than 2:02. When he passed the quarter post in 30 seconds flat, however, there was intense excitement. The half mile was turned in :59¾ and the third quarter in 1:29. On the stretch the horse seemed to fairly fly, and crossed the tape in the wonderful time of 1:59¼. Star Pointer was driven by McClary.

President at Cleveland.

Cleveland, O., Aug. 30. — Saturday afternoon the members of the Tippecanoe club assembled in their club rooms to arrange for the reception of the president. They formed in line and carried out the programme arranged for the preceding day. With the music of brass bands, the fluttering of myriads of flags and the cheers of the people, President McKinley, Secretary Alger and Senator Hanna were received in carriages at the east end of the viaduct. Thence the parade over the original line of march began, embracing Superior street, Euclid avenue and the public square. It was a magnificent occasion. People crowded the streets many rows deep, banners floated in the air and the downtown business blocks were beautifully decorated with flags and bunting. The president was heartily cheered all along the line of march. When the Hollenden hotel was reached the presidential carriage halted and the parade passed in review in front of the president. The president then entered the Hollenden and held a public reception in the ordinary. Thousands of citizens met him and shook hands with him.

Indiana Banker Dead.

Greenfield, Ind., Aug. 31.—Philander P. Boyd, 79 years old, died Monday. He has been for 25 years president of the Citizens' bank of this city and was very wealthy.

TALES OF THE KLONDIKE.

Told by Passengers on the Portland Just from Alaska.

Seattle, Wash., Aug. 30.—The steamer Portland arrived here at three o'clock Sunday morning. It was 14 hours after the Portland was sighted off Cape Flattery before she arrived here. The Portland carried 13 miners, each of whom brought only a small part of his stake. The total amount of dust on the vessel is perhaps $575,000. The Portland was delayed by the failure of the P. B. Weare to arrive at St. Michael's and by a storm on the North Pacific ocean. The miners on board, with the amount of their total mining profits, parts of which were brought with them, are as follows: J. Rowan, $50,000; Jim Bell, $54,000; Joe Goldsmith, $35,000; N. W. Powers, $35,000; W. W. Caldwell, $35,000; W. Oler, $30,000; C. K. Zilly, $25,000; F. W. Cobb, $25,000; W. Zahn, $15,000; A. Buckley, $10,000; M. S. Lansing, $15,000; B. W. Farnham, $10,000; M. R. Camler, $15,000.

The Portland made the trip from St. Michael's without a convoy of revenue cutters. But she will be guarded by Uncle Sam's armed ships on her next trip. She brings news from Dawson City that provisions are every scarce. Coffee is worth 80 cents a pound.

While the small amount of gold brought from the Yukon by the Portland was a disappointment to many the miners who returned unite in saying that the country is fabulously rich. The claims which have been worked promise well, and, in fact, many of them give assurance of proving very rich. All estimates of the amount of gold which will be taken out of the Yukon next year must necessarily be very rough, as there is no means of determining how much work will be done. If men could be secured to work the claims already located there would undoubtedly be many millions of dollars taken out, but the majority of men who go there prefer to prospect on their own account, notwithstanding the fact that high wages can be had wherever claims have been located and have proved rich. Statements have been made that the steamer Portland on her next trip will bring fully $2,000,000 in gold, but the most reliable men from Dawson City say that no such amount of money will come, as it has not been taken out of the ground. One miner who came down places the outside figure at $1,000,000.

One of the returning miners says that the remarkably rich claims on Eldorado creek will number 140. He estimates that at the rate these 140 claims are now producing, and considering the ground yet to be worked, in the next three years they will aggregate about $70,000,000. To this must be added the favorable possibilities of new gulches and the development of claims already found, but not opened so as to permit of the greatest production. There have been other rich strikes on Stewart river, Hunker, Henderson and Indian creeks, but none of these are as rich as claims on Eldorado and Bonanza creeks.

There are two facts about the Klondike brought out clearly by interviews with passengers on the Portland. They are, first, that Alaska's fields are rich with gold; second, that awful perils threaten those who seek it. The Yukon miners who came back on the Portland without exception estimate that not less than $10,000,000 will be taken out of the Klondike district next winter. Many of them think the amount will reach fully $15,000,000. Following are extracts of interviews with some of the passengers:

"You can believe almost any statement about the richness of the Klondike diggings that you hear. They are rich beyond description."

"It's hardly fair to judge the Klondike by the returns of this year, sensational as they may seem. The work that has been done is little more than 'gophering.' It was impossible to do systematic and thorough prospectng of claims. Next winter they will get down to solid work. Then look out for results."

"It is just as good and even better than the Canadian side," says a firm believer in the American part of the Yukon. "There is lots of rich gravel on our side. Outside of the Klondike strike nearly all the gold diggings have been found on American territory. There are good chances there for prospectors and for capital."

"Warn people to stay out of the Yukon this winter. Tell them it means starvation there. Telegraph to every paper in the country that miners will starve there if more people go in."

"In warning people to wait until spring I simply act for the miners, who speak in the name of humanity. There is gold in Yukon country, plenty of it, but to seek it this season under these circumstances is sheer madness. It is even worse, it is criminal to those who already are in the country."

"It is almost impossible to take enough supplies, and to go without supplies means stravation, as there is not near enough food in there now for the people already in the district."

"The Yukon is the last place on earth for a man to look for a soft snap. The very best will be hard living there."

The Luetgert Case.

Chicago, Aug. 30.—The jury in the Luetgert case was completed Saturday when the last four jurors were selected and the whole 12 were sworn in to the long task of trying the case. Saturday evening a human body, obtained from a medical college, was boiled in the vat in which it is maintained by the prosecution the body of Mrs. Louise Luetgert was reduced to fluid and then flooded away with the sewage of the sausage factory. Those who were present at the experiment were the lawyers and scientists interested in the defense of Luetgert. The boiling was done under the same conditions in which it is alleged the murder was committed, and the witnesses of it say the test will disprove the state's theory. Dr. John H. Long, head professor of the Northwestern medical college, who was in charge of the experiment, said that at the end of three hours' boiling the big bones were still intact. This, he says, will have a tendency to destroy the state's case, as the testimony on that point is to the effect that Luetgert did the work in two hours.

Erastus Corning Dead.

Albany, N. Y., Aug. 31.—Erastus Corning died of apoplexy aged 70 years. He was descended from Samuel Corning, of Beverly, Mass., and was one of the wealthiest men in the state. His charities were numerous.

More Troops to Be Sent.

Madrid, Aug. 31.—At a cabinet council held Monday it was declared to summon the next class of 80,000 reserves, 27,000 of whom will be sent to Cuba and 13,000 to the Philippine islands.

Burglars Loot a Bank.

Kingston, Ont., Aug. 31.—Burglars entered the Dominion bank at Napanee last Friday night, and, knowing the combination of the vault, opened it and stole $32,000.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS.

The Settlers Win.

The St. Cloud land office received notice from the general land commissioner that nearly 40,000 applications in Otter Tail county had been allowed. The Northern Pacific Railway company had applied to select these lands as indemnity lands in 1888, and the application of the settlers to homestead had been contested by the railway company. In October, 1896, the commissioner of the general land office decided in favor of the settlers, but in some way the Northern Pacific failed to appeal. By this default on the part of railroad, this decision now becomes final, and settlers will be allowed to make a proof of their residence. The lands involved are among those in dispute between the Northern Pacific and the St. Paul, Minneapolis & Manitoba railways, and which the supreme court of the United States awarded to the Northern Pacific. The lands are north of Fergus Falls and are said to be valuable farming properties.

Shot By an Officer.

Officer Roach, at Moorhead, shot Thomas Pringle, of Fargo, through the leg for riding on the sidewalk in violation of the bicycle ordinance. Pringle and Miss Nelson were riding together when the officer called upon them to stop. Pringle called to Miss Nelson, who was riding ahead of him, but the lady did not hear, so he rode on to speak to and warn her. Roach afterward placed Miss Nelson under arrest and insisted upon taking her to the lockup. He finally allowed her to go, keeping her wheel to make sure of her appearance in court next morning. The bullet was extracted from Pringle's leg and he was able to walk to Fargo. Miss Nelson and Mr. Pringle rode on the sidewalk in order to pass a part of Ridge avenue where the pavement had been torn up.

Get Medals of Honor.

Captain L. N. Holmes and Mr. Hanna of Mankato, have received letters from the secretary of war notifying them that, by direction of the president and under the provisions of an act of congress, congressional medals of honor have been presented to them for most distinguished gallantry in action.

At Nolinsville, Tenn., Feb. 15, 1863, these men belonged to a detachment of 16 from company H, Second Minnesota infantry, escorting a wagon train that was attacked by 125 rebel cavalrymen. After a most heroic defense, under Mr. Holmes, who was then first sargeant, the attack was repulsed and the train saved.

Killed in a Hold Up.

Three men were on a stock train passing through Hancock on their way to North Dakota. When within two miles of town and just after the train got to a high grade and was running very slowly, five men made their appearance in the car and ordered the three to throw up their hands. This being done too slowly to suit, one of the men was shot through the left eye, death resulting instantly. The culprits then threw the body out on the ground and made the remaining two jump off the moving train.

Is It Murder?

Lying face down upon the ground in the brush between the Milwaukee and St. Louis railroad tracks, about a half mile beyond Hopkins, and a short distance south of the poor farm, the skeleton of a man was found by section men. From the mass of bones there was nothing to identify the remains, and it is not likely that the mytery of his death will be clearly established. Two bullet holes were found in the skull.

Lagoons, Not Lakes.

Engineers have made an investigation of Bear creek, at Rochester, as regards the advisability of making a lake. They report that one cannot be built, but advise a series of parks and little lagoons connected by channels at a cost of $15,000, which would be of more value to the city for park purposes than a lake.

News in Brief.

Stoinclaus Fraine, aged 11 years, was killed by the incoming Green Bay train at Winona. While attempting to catch a ride, the lad slipped and was cut in two pieces at the waist.

Mrs. Ole Onstad, a well known resident of Hader, was severely gored in abdomen by an ugly bull.

The Christian Science society of Minneapolis will erect a $5,000 building.

The city of Red Wing will prosecute the Milwaukee railway for not keeping a flagman at the street crossing.

Henry Bock was assisting in putting up hay in Renville, and while at work he partook of two glasses of beer. After having drank the second he fell back and expired.

A court of Foresters has been instituted at Pierz.

Capt. L. D. Frost, of the Winona Guards, company C, Second infantry, N. G. S. M., has sent in his resignation to the adjutant general.

The bankers of the Twin Cities gave a banquet to James H. Eckles, the comptroller of the currency at the Minneapolis club.

Freeman Getty has been appointed postmaster at Beauford, and L. G. Gates at Curry.

Andrew Fisher, an employe at the Horn & Danz establishment at St. Paul, caught his hand and arm in a tin press he was feeding, and the arm almost to the elbow was mangled and crushed.

The pawnshop of C. F. Low, St. Paul, was robbed of property valued at $700. He kept his property in a roll top desk.

Loais Rehl, of Minneapolis, was killed by a gasoline explosion.

It cost the state $3,263.04 for the labor of examining state high school papers for the year which closed Aug. 1. The examinations are held twice a year, and at each there are not less than 10,000 papers to be reviewed.

August Pruden, a convict, who skipped out of the police court at St. Paul, after having violated his parole, has been recaptured at Hunter, N. D. He will be returned to Stillwater to serve nearly two years.

Paulina Nagel, of Princeton, eloped with John Wigge, who was working the town with a silver plating scheme.

Senor Romero, the Mexican minister, will represent that country at the national gathering of farming organizations in St. Paul.

Michael Conlin, a teamster, died in a Duluth hospital under circumstances that seem to indicate murder. He was found with his head crushed.

The corner stone of the New Odd Fellows building at Mankato was laid with appropriate ceremonies.

Gold has been discovered in Russell, Lyon county.

LOVE'S GREETING.

Molly meets me at the door
When the toil of day is o'er,
When the summer sun at setting,
Flashing through the leafy fretting,
Flecks with molten gold the floor—
With a smile of Love's begetting,
Molly meets me at the door.

Molly meets me at the door,
'Neath the porch's fragrant store,
'Neath the sweet wistaria, clinging,
With its purple cluster swinging,
And the apple-blooms galore,
In her voice a welcome ringing,
Molly meets me at the door.

Molly meets me at the door,
Fair as in the years before,
When our vows of love were spoken,
And I begged the ribboned token
At her dainty throat she wore.
With our love-knot still unbroken,
Molly meets me at the door.

Molly meets me at the door,
Ah, pray God, for evermore,
Till my last faint breath is fleeting,
Till my heart has ceased its beating,
May she meet me as of yore:
Grant for aye, with cheery greeting,
Molly meets me at the door.

LINDA'S COMING HOME.

BY MARY A. DENISON.

"HOW old is Linda, Mrs. Shippins?"

"Linda? Let me see. Why, she was born when I was 20, an' I'm 62. Of course Linda must be 42. Good gracious! it can't be possible; but it is. I'm an old, old woman, an' I wasn't spry at 40."

The person addressed sat near the fireplace, knitting. Her gray hair, very abundant yet, was pulled together and turned in a thick knot at the back of her head. She had a weary, discouraged look, as if expectancy and endurance of trials had set an unalterable seal upon her face. A thin cap came low on her hair and her eyes were hollow.

The person who questioned her was Nancy Holland, a wiry little woman who went out to days' work and had come to Sparrow cottage to finish the ironing, over which Mrs. Shippins' strength had given out.

"Well, I'm sure! and you hain't seen her for 20 year, did you say?"

"I did. It's 20 year since she left the town with her husband and a pair of twins, the beautifullest boys I ever sot eyes on. They both died when they were ten years old, an' she's lost two more sence then, pore creeter. Now they've lost all the property they had in the world by the flood. So he's gone to New Mexico on a small salary an' she's comin' here. I declare, I almost hate to see her, for she must be bowed down to the very earth with sorrow."

"Any children left?" asked chipper Nancy Holland, whose usually bright face had taken on a somber expression.

"Yes; there's the two youngest, Freddy and Myrtle. She'll bring 'em on with her. Much as I want to see 'em, I'm so worried for fear they'll be into everything, as children always is, an' maybe pert and saucy into the bargain. I'm so used to quiet; an' to have them children rompin' and racin' in and out! But they're Linda's children, an' she's willin to help me out, an' I dare say we'll git along somehow," she finished, with a doleful sigh.

"You don't seem very happy over the thought of their coming on," said Nancy Holland.

"Oh, yes, I am, dretful happy, only I'm so bowed down with the thought of all her sufferin's for the last ten year. I'm sure she'll be all broke up an' miserable, though she ain't never wrote like it, an' I'm just worried to death to know how to comfort her. I've fixed up the north bedroom, an' took out some of the brighter things for fear it would make her feel bad to see it as it used to be. An' I'm preparing to mourn with them that mourn."

"I sh'd think you'd want to make everything more cheerful for her," said the other, pulling hard at a lace kerchief. "I'm feared I put too much starch in this. Would you rense it out?"

"No, I like it stiff," said Mrs. Shippins. "Ef Linda's like me, I never wanted the sun to shine when I was in trouble, an' as to colors, an' flowers, an' birds, I jist shet myself out of their sight. They sort o' mock one with their happiness. Well, I guess I'll go an' make that strawberry shortcake. They'll be here by five, Linda an' the little ones, an' I do wish, Nancy Holland, you'd stay to tea an' help me to bear my burden."

"Why, of course, I will," said Nancy Holland. "I'm awful fond of strawberry shortcake, and I'm jest dyin' to see your folks, and—" (she hesitated a moment) "sympathize with 'em."

So it was arranged. The shortcake was made in the largest pan the house afforded, and was a marvel of beauty as it stood smoking upon the sideboard. The table was set with old-fashioned dishes and cut glass that had been in the Shippins family for generations.

By the time the travelers were expected, the supper, garnished with substantial meats, was ready, and Mrs. Shippins prepared with an extra large handkerchief to wipe away the tears which she intended to shed as a part of the welcome home.

When the door was thrown open, and a youthful-looking matron came in, with a handsome boy on one side and a pretty girl on the other, Mrs. Shippins just sat and stared.

"Why, you ain't Linda," she said. "I'm sure you can't be Linda!" But her face was caught in two firm hands, and kisses were showered upon her cheeks, lips and forehead.

"One kiss for every year, mother," said the woman, laughing joyously. "I can't make it seem 20 years, though, since I saw you last."

"Why, child," and the big kerchief was deftly put aside, "you're younger looking now than when you went away," her mother said.

"Of course I am. I'm a good deal younger now than when I was 16. They used to call me an old child. Why, I'm every bit as young as these two children. Catch me growing old!"

"Well, I declare!" and her mother watched her as she threw aside her wraps and helped the children off with theirs; "you don't seem as if you'd ever had a care in your life."

"Oh, yes, I've had plenty, but I play with care. I don't allow it to plow over my face and trample on my heart. What's the use of living if you're going to turn life into a graveyard?"

"But you have lost four of your children, an'—"

"Oh, no, I didn't. I never felt for a moment that they were lost. I simply gave them to the keeping of One who could do better for them than I could. Lost! oh, no! I sometimes think they are nearer than these two here. But we are tired and hungry, and the table looks so nice! Shall I go right into my own room, mother? I hope it isn't altered a bit. Come, children."

"Land! I wish I hadn't put away them things," said Mrs. Shippins. "I'll put 'em all back to-morrer."

It was a happy family party that sat down to the strawberry shortcake. The old mother stared like one in a dream. Nancy Holland helped them all, and declared that she never did see such well-behaved children nor a handsomer, brighter woman; and there was new life and beauty in the old house.

Mrs. Shippins had put away her handkerchief with a sigh, for she felt that she was cheated out of her sorrow. Tears were not in order. That daughter of hers could not look on the dark side of anything. She reconstructed every room in the house and made them cheerful with flowers and pictures and tidies and all the bric-a-brac she could muster. Laughter and music had come with her—absolute determination to see good in everything. The clergyman, who had been asked by his devoted parishioner to come on a visit of condolence, left the house and had a severe fit of penitence when it occurred to him that he had actually forgotten to pray for "this our sister in affliction."

"But then," he soliloquized, "I don't see where the affliction came in, and I guess she is one of the kind who are abundantly able to pray for themselves."

Everybody noticed the change in everything except Linda's cheerful spirit and sunny face.

"And I'm just going to make mother over," she said to her friends. "She has forgotten how to be young."

Mother made protest at first, but it was very faint. When the children capered round grandma because she had discarded the hideous cap and allowed Linda to do up her hair, she grew almost a child herself, and the years fell off all the time she was pooh-poohing and pshawing, till her next-door neighbors told her she had grown ten years younger since Linda had come home.

Roses in her bonnet! no, never! that she would not endure; but in her laughing way Linda insisted, and the close black frame gave way to a bright-looking gray bonnet, with just a cluster of violets. And presently the woman found herself in the midst of cheerful gatherings, and where she had hugged her fireside, refusing to be comforted by bright faces and merry voices, now she sought her long-delayed rights, and welcomed them, along with her youth, back again.

"WHY, YOU AIN'T LINDA."

The children with their songs and dances made her glow and grow radiant, so that her dim eyes began to sparkle, and her cheek made acquaintance with the dimples as of yore.

"Oh, mother is a young woman yet," Linda would say, when mention was made of improvement. "You see she is being built up with new thoughts, brightened with new life-environments, and made to feel that this earth is a young and giddy thing yet, full of good cheer and innocent healthy enjoyment."

Folks listened and commented. Insensibly there grew up in the town a wholesome love of the beautiful. Maids and matrons benefited by the change. Linda's coming had done it all. The clergyman preached healthier sermons, the doctors shortened their faces by the sick-bed. The lawyers stopped their conventional lies—well, there were only two of them, and the bald-headed one seriously contemplated buying himself a wig. Grocer, and baker, and candlestickmaker felt the change. The only complainant was the undertaker, who said business wasn't so good as it used to be. But nobody sympathized with him.

And so the influence of thought, the wave of feeling, rolled over and permeated the town, sweeping out old ideas, old edicts, old superstitions, and, best of all, old age, and it was Linda's coming home that had done it all.—Eleanor Kirk's Idea.

Got $2,000 for Driving His Wagon.

A few years ago a well-to-do but extravagant farmer living out on the Russell Cave pike went to Mr. Hart Boswell and asked him to see his brother Dave, of the Northern bank, and tell him that he wanted to borrow $2,000, and tell him that it would be all O. K., etc. Mr. Boswell told him that he would not do it, but gave him the following tip: "I see you or your wife calling negroes out of the field two or three times a day to hitch your rigs up to go to Lexington, and I see you stop hands from their field work to drive a load of corn to market. You stop all this foolishness and drive the wagon of corn yourself, then go to the bank and ask for what you want." The man went according to directions, and after he had sold his corn he went to the bank and asked for the $2,000. Mr. R. T. Anderson, one of the directors, was present, and, without asking any questions, said: "Any man who drives his own wagon can borrow all the money he wants at the Northern bank." This little transaction changed this man's condition in life, and he was no longer a money borrower.—Lexington American.

—Russia, according to the recent census returns, has a population close to 130,000,000, about equal to that of any other three European states. Half a century ago its people numbered very nearly what ours does now; that is, they have just about doubled in that period.

TRICKS OF A TRAMP DOG.

Vain Attempts of a Louisville Canine to Live Down His Past.

He is not fair to look upon, is this hobo dog, with his unkempt whiskers and tangled hair—bright and expressive eyes being the one defect in his tramp "make-up." Persistence may, however, atone for lack of pulchritude in his case, for the tramp dog is determined to find a home and become a respectable member of canine society. He does not force himself uninvited into any house or yard—he has too much sense for that. He has gained knowledge of human nature in his wanderings, for he pays no attention to men, while boys he only watches warily for stones and clods, for which he was the target evidently in memory. Let a woman pass along, however, and he is all alertness. Trotting along with her, he perks his head aside and says, as plainly as a dog can:

"Look here, madam, I am a right good little dog. Suppose you take me home and give me a bath and a bone and let me play with the children? I am lots better than I look to be."

This failing to elicit any answer other than an occasional "Get away, you ugly little beast!" he plays another card. Scampering into the street, he returns with a twig or a bit of paper and renews the conversation.

"Just look at me a moment, please," he says. "Don't you see I am a smart dog? I can carry a twig in my mouth. The children will have no end of sport with me if you take me home."

So he persists until the end of his self-appointed beat is reached and the woman passes on. He stops then, disconsolate and disgusted, dropping his air of cheerfulness and relapsing into a plain, uncouth canine tough. With nose between outstretched forepaws he seems to soliloquize:

"Say, dese guys make me tired. Wot do dey want a dawg ter do, anyhow—talk French and sing a sopranner solo? I'm dead stuck to get a chance to live straight, but it don't look like it's no use. I guess I'll have ter stick to the cold handout game, but I'll chew one of them French poodles er a pop-eyed pug before dey land me in the pound, anyhow."

Another woman comes along about then, however, and hope again rises within him. Time after time he repeats his little confidence game, but so far with the same dispiriting result. He is working hard for his rise in life. He deserves it, and more than one passer-by who has watched him day after day hopes that he will yet gain the snug quarters he deserves.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

THE PANTRY IN SUMMER.

Much Care Should Be Devoted Toward Keeping It Wholesome.

If the atmosphere of a cellar or pantry is not sweet and the refrigerator cannot be thoroughly ventilated, it may be greatly improved by placing a few trays of charcoal on the floor and shelves. The air will soon become pure and sweet. The temperature of a pantry may be kept very cool by hanging at the window or door a wet cloth or sheet.

Bacon, joints, or hams should hang from hooks driven in the ceiling, rather than be laid on shelves. Again, where there is but little or no ice, joints should be sprinkled with powdered charcoal.

To keep fresh fish in warm weather it should first be thoroughly cleaned and dried well inside with a clean linen cloth, then rubbed internally wth good brown sugar, after which hang it in a well-aired and absolutely dry place. Wash off the sugar before cooking.

Soups, broths, gravies and soup-stock can often be kept from turning for two or three days by boiling them once, or, in great heat, twice a day.

Of course many of these precautions may be entirely dispensed with where the household boasts a large, well-packed refrigerator.

Too many cooks from ignorance, and their mistresses from carelessness, have a mistaken idea that a refrigerator is an excuse for neglecting simple hygienic principles. When meat is brought in from the butcher's, it should be well looked over, all objectionable little tag ends of fat and bristle should be removed, and, after salting, the meat should be placed at once in the ice chest.

Great care should be taken to remove all crumbs and scraps from the shelves and floor of a pantry, since they attract insects more than anything else. If there are windows in the pantry, netting should be nailed tightly over them to prevent the flies from gaining access. The bread box should be well washed and dried two or three times a week and placed in the sun. The fresh loaves should be wrapped in a slightly dampened linen bread towel, and the lid of the box left a little open, so that the fresh air may circulate through it. All stale crusts and bits of bread should be placed in a china dish with a cover, until they are ground into bread crumbs.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

Lace Is in Vogue.

Lace appears on all our gowns this year, and it seems as if Dame Fashion were determined that every one should be suited, for novel ways of arrangement are constantly appearing. The very latest is to have the lace tied in knots and placed on the dresses in such a way as to completely trim them. One costume, arranged after this style, was made of batiste covered with mauve gauze, the decoration being entirely composed of great Louis XVI. knots of lace. These knots are so very large that it requires only one to trim the front of the skirt, while two more are sufficient for the sides and back. This is entirely new, and for our fortunate sisters who are tall is a particularly graceful style.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Chocolate Almonds.

Blanch the almond meats by pouring boiling water over them and let them stand a few moments; then turn the hot water off and throw cold water over them. The skin may then be easily rubbed off. Break some sweet chocolate into small pieces, put them in a small dish and stand this dish over the fire in a pan of boiling water. When the chocolate is melted put a blanched nut meat on the point of a hat pin and dip into the melted chocolate; then lay it on oiled paper to cool. When the chocolate becomes set the meats may be again taken up with a pin; such a second coating of the chocolate will please many that are very fond of chocolate.—N. Y. Tribune.

Doctors Do Not Always Differ.

What the Leading Homoeopathic Physician of the State of Iowa says of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

From the Gazette, New Hampton, Iowa.

Dr. D. S. Byers, who is the head and manager of the New Hampton Sanitarium, and the leading homoeopathic physician of Iowa, if not of the broad and breezy west, was recently interviewed by a reporter of the Saturday Gazette at his office in the Sanitarium, as to his opinion of the merits of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and for any comment he might wish to make on the extraordinary cures, published far and wide in the press of the country, said to have been effected by them.

Dr. Byers declared that he frequently used Pink Pills in his practice, at the Sanitarium, in paralytic, catarrhal, scrofulus and neuralgic troubles, while in diseases of females, of which he makes a specialty, he has found them invaluable.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness either in male or female. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent postpaid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50 (they are never sold in bulk or by the 100) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

FOR EXCHANGING THINGS.

A Mania That Affects All a Woman's Transactions.

She sat down and slowly drew off the black chiffon boa which she wore.

"What a pretty—a—aw—constrictor that is," said the man, toying with its fluffiness.

The girl laughed. "Well, you came pretty near it; you got as far as its last name. It is a pretty one, isn't it? I bought a white one first, and then I decided I needed a gray one much more, so I exchanged it. You know my new gray suit? Well, the gray boa looked perfectly dear with it and—"

"Gray? It's black," interrupted the man, dangling the thing before his eyes.

"Of course it is," she replied; "I exchanged it again. You see, I decided that the gray one would soil easily, and, beside, Margaret has a gray one, and I can—that's the nice thing about Messinger & Slinger's store; you can exchange everything, they're so accommodating. Do you know—" she continued, her mouth and eyes perked up in an expression of mystery.

"No," he interposed, "I understand nothing of women's business methods; they're too complicated for my feeble brain."

"I was going to say," she continued, unruffled, "that if I ever have to marry I'm going to get my husband at Messinger & Slinger's, so that I can take him back if he doesn't suit."—Chicago Inter Ocean.

Getting It Right.

They were riding on the rear seat of a Collamar car, and were strangers to each other. One of them was short and stout; the other was a man of medium size, to whom everything along the route seemed to be new.

As they were passing along near the car barns the medium-sized man looked up at the fine residence upon the bluff and said:

"Do you know who lives in that large house up there, with the big veranda?"

"That big brown house?" the other returned.

"Yes."

"You mean the one with the porch running clear around it?"

"Yes; do you know who lives there?"

"The third one from the end of the row?"

"That's it."

"I mean the third from the westerly end of the row."

"Yes; that's the one I mean."

"That one with the green awnings?"

"Yes."

"Let's see! Blamed if I know who lives there."

The medium-sized man said no more, but he looked as if he wanted to fight.—Cleveland Leader.

A New Departure.

"I know it is unprecedented, my dear," said the popular minister to his wife, with a look of firm determination upon his face. "I know the public will consider me a sensational, unorthodox innovator, but something must be done to fill the church and bring me into notice."

"But," said his wife, "consider what an abnormal, extraordinary and unparalleled thing it is you propose. I have never been in favor of your discussing in the pulpit subjects that will startle and invite criticism from the congregation and public. Why not confine yourself, as other preachers do, to matters that they naturally expect from a minister of the gospel?"

"They no longer attract attention," said the minister. "The people now demand something new and electrifying, and I think I have hit upon a plan of discourse that will create a furore in the religious world. I have decided to abandon the old beaten paths and give them something next Sunday that will come like a thunder clap upon the congregation."

"Very well," said his wife, with a sigh of resignation, "if you have fully determined to take a text from the Bible I will try no longer to dissuade you."—Chicago Tribune.

Philosophy at the Zoo.

Two youths looked into a cage of monkeys. Through their nostrils puffs of smoke came forth at regular intervals from white-wrapped cigarettes.

Their heads were nicely balanced by a wealth of hair parted exactly in the middle. Light bamboo canes grasped firmly in the middle showed they were full-grown men.

"See," said one, "what we have descended from."

And they looked into the cage of monkeys and laughed.

The mother monkey called her children about her.

They climbed gravely on the perch to listen to her words.

She pointed to the young men.

"See," said the mother monkey, "what some of our ancestors have degenerated into."

And the children monkeys returned to their corners and wept.—Chicago Record.

Misled by the Papers.

"Now, Henry," said the dear old lady, "I do hope you will never play baseball."

"Why not, grandma?" asked Henry, with natural surprise.

"Because it is so very dangerous."

"Dangerous! Why, grandma, it isn't any more dangerous than any other game."

"It is exceedingly dangerous," said the old lady, in a tone of deep conviction.

"But, grandma, you never saw a game, and don't know anything about it."

"Perhaps I don't, but I know it is highly dangerous. Almost every day the papers tell about men who have died on the bases."—Baltimore American.

No: Worth a D.

Chief Justice Peters, of Maine, has a reputation for telling witty stories. At the recent commencement of the University of Maine he told this one:

"I knew a young man who was seven years getting through another college. Then he went into the ministry, because he didn't have sense enough to practice law. He went into the Episcopal ministry because he didn't have to make prayers and could steal his sermons. Then he went out and got the degree of D. D. from a university. One would have done just as well, and such a degree isn't worth much."—N. Y. Herald.

THIS PHOTOGRAPHER KNEW.

Consequently He Succeeded Where Others Failed.

There is a South side girl who until recently her friends thought the hardest person in the world to please. Not in general, but in a particular crochet of hers, that was photography. She used to have an inordinate number of likenesses of herself taken. The proofs generally seemed to please her very well, but on receiving the finished product she would go away somewhat disappointed and in a day or so inform her friends that the pictures were not a success, that she didn't like them at all and that she was going to try some other studio. It was in vain that the latter persisted that the pictures resembled her very much, or that they were exquisitely finished, or that they were from one of the best places in the city. She continued to be dissatisfied again and again. She would point out an imaginary speck or what she considered a defect in light or shade, then criticise the pose and say that she looked like a fright and finally wonder how the photographer could ask such prices for so mediocre a piece of work.

She was not by any means bad looking, but many of the photographers flattered her. Her friends knew that she was aware of this, consequently they could not attribute her peculiarity to injured vanity. They made various guesses and surmises at the real reason of her fastidiousness, but all were sooner or later disproved. At last, when they had about given up she came home one day perfectly radiant. She explained that she had at last found a photographer who understood his business. She dilated on the cleverness with which he had posed her and his thorough appreciation of everything truly artistic. Then she produced some very inferior photographs. Her friends were amazed. They couldn't believe she was serious. She went on descanting on her successess.

"I won't need to have any more taken, girls," she said.

They were at a loss for her reason until the conclusion of her ecstasy, which ran about as follows:

"Yes, he's just the loveliest photographer I ever went to. So thoroughly appreciative. Why, do you know, when I left he asked permission to put one in the window."—Chicago Times-Herald.

Prosperity of Farmers in Tidewater, Virginia.

There is cause for rejoicing among the farmers in Virginia. The crops of melons, potatoes, peanuts, general grain and truck have been unsurpassed and the prices obtained in the Washington, Baltimore, Philadelphia and New York markets have been the highest ever paid.

A Sick Church.

They dedicated a church in a certain New York village a few days ago, and shortly after the incident the daughter of a citizen living over the way was heard to say to her mother:

"I wonder what's the matter with that church. Ma, do you know?"

"No," replied the mother. "Why do you think there is anything the matter with it?"

"'Cause," answered the child, "I heard 'em say it was medicated."—Boston Courier.

Encouraging Statistics.

The Baltimore and Ohio officials are very much pleased with certain statistics that have recently been prepared of the performance of freight trains on the Second division, which handles all the east and west-bound traffic between Baltimore and Cumberalnd. Before the new freight engines were purchased, and the improvements made in the track in the way of straightening curves and reducing grades, the average number of cars to the train was 28 1-2. Now, with more powerful and modern motive power and a better track, the average is 40 cars per train, an increase of 41 per cent. The average east-bound movement per day for the first ten days of August was 1,123 loaded cars. On the Third division, Cumberland to Grafton, where there are grades of 125 feet to the mile, the engines used to haul 19 1-2 loads to the train. Now the average is 25 2-3 loads per train, an increase of 31 per cent. It would certainly appear that the money spent in improvements on the B. and O. is being amply justified, and that the cost of operation is being very materially reduced.

Do We Need Big Muscles?

By no means. Persons of herculean build frequently possess a minimum of genuine vigor, and exhibit less endurance than very small people. Real vigor means the ability to digest and sleep well, and to perform a reasonable amount of daily physical and mental labor without unnatural fatigue. It is because a course of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters enables the enfeebled dyspeptic to resume the allotted activity of every day life, as well as to participate without discomfort in its enjoyments, that it is such a preeminently useful medicine.

KIDNEY TROUBLES

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Also Backache.

I cannot speak too highly of Mrs. Pinkham's Medicine, for it has done so much for me. I have been a great sufferer from Kidney trouble, pains in muscles, joints, back and shoulders; feet would swell. I also had womb troubles and leucorrhœa. After using Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and Blood Purifier and Liver Pills, I felt like a new woman. My kidneys are now in perfect condition, and all my other troubles are cured.—Mrs. Maggie Potts, 324 Kauffman St., Philadelphia, Pa.

Backache.

My system was entirely run down, and I suffered with terrible backache in the small of my back and could hardly stand upright. I was more tired in the morning than on retiring at night. I had no appetite. Since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I have gained fifteen pounds, and I look better than I ever looked before. I shall recommend it to all my friends, as it certainly is a wonderful medicine.—Mrs. E. F. Morton, 1048 Hopkins St., Cincinnati, Ohio.

Kidney Trouble.

Before taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I had suffered many years with kidney trouble. The pains in my back and shoulders were terrible. My menstruation became irregular, and I was troubled with leucorrhœa. I was growing very weak. I had been to many physicians but received no benefit. I began the use of Mrs. Pinkham's medicine, and the first bottle relieved the pain in my back and regulated the menses. It is the best kind of medicine that I have ever taken, for it relieved the pain so quickly and cured the disease.—Mrs. Lillian Crippen, Box 77, St. Andrews Bay, Fla.

BUFFALO GAZETTE

DELANO, FRIDAY, SEPT. 3, 1897.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE VILLAGE OF DELANO.

DELANO DIARY

—The public school rooms have been scrubbed, and the house thoroughly renovated prepatory to occupancy next week. It is well.

—Mrs. O. L. Billings has rented the Mowatt building on River Street and will soon occupy it as a restaurant and confectionary store.

—Rev. M. Savs preached in Engl sh last Sunday. He intends following up the plan of preaching in English on the last Sunday of each month.

—Members of the I. O. O. F., of Delano, visited Maple Plain Saturday night and helped initiate several members. They report a fine time.

—On Tuesday night occurred one of the most soaking rains that this country has had since early summer. It will be of vast benefit to agriculturists.

—The afternoon train on Saturday last was three and a half hours late; much to the discomfiture of several parties desiring to reach Minneapolis before night.

—A good, clean, respectable home paper should be in every family. What a family is, depends much on what it reads; much more than people think sometimes.

—That beautiful palm in George P. Schaffers' store window was brought home by him from Litchfield; the gift of Charley Brasie It sets off the window in good shape.

—Harris Williams has the thanks of the GAZETTE office for one of the finest boquets we have seen this season. Mr. W. is quite a florist and also has a nice vegetable garden.

—Mesdames Everson and Utter are busy arranging decorations for the grand parade during fair week, in Minneapolis. They did the same kind of work last year, hence their orders now.

—Delano Public and Parochial schools will begin on Tuesday, Aug. 7. Every scholar should begin with the term and never be tardy nor absent, in order to get the full advantage of the school.

—Farmers complain that plowing is the hardest now it has been for years. Though we have had rains this summer since July, they have not been very heavy, and the ground is dry.

—We understand that the fine gray horse sold by T. M. Shaw a few weeks ago to Mr. St. John and taken to the prairies, sickened and died. A change of climate, or masters, or something didn't seem to agree with him.

—F. H. Lindsley took charge of the post office Wednesday, Sept. 1. People got their mail for the first time from their new boxes that morning. Delano now boasts of as fine a post office as Wright county affords.

—Though nights are cold and people fear frost no harm as yet seems to have come to the bountiful crops. In a short time, if things don't change, corn and potatoes will be harvested in abundance. Hay, though pronounced short, has been made, and the second crop secured, and there is now enough and to spare.

—Some of our readers came promptly to our aid in building a new office. We have the office up and are into it. If a few more readers will conclude to pay the printer while prosperity is here, we will be enabled to finish up our office and make it comfortable for the winter. Thanks to all who are doing their best.

—The Delano Epworth League visited the Armstrong E. L. on Sunday evening last. The Christian Endeavor of Maple Plain visited at the same time, making a large and good meeting. More meetings of this nature would be good for all societies of the kind and it is altogether likely more visiting will be done soon.

—Several of Delano's young men expect soon to leave for the cities to take a course in a business college. that is right. It will be much benefit to them. With a good common school education rounded off by a business course a young man is in a fair way to succeed in life financially. A fondness for reading news and good books aid him still further in holding his own in society.

—Dr. C. B. Ames reports that John Wordick, aged 75 years, of Cochrantown, met with quite a serious accident on Thursday of last week, while untying a cow staked out with a long rope. He got entangled in the rope when the cow started for the water trough, throwing him to the ground in such a manner as to break his right leg above the knee. Drs. Powell, of Hanover, and Ames, of Delano, reduced the fracture and he is reported as doing well.

—Some of J. J. Hills trains are so heavy that the men have hard times getting them out of town. The Delano station is at the bottom of a long grade from both East and West. The large heavy trains stopping here have to do their best to pull out; many of them back far as possible, then getting up all possible speed go through town for the next hill. Some jerk the train over by inches at a jerk. Jim should grade down, or fill up, or run smaller trains. He should not compel his men to lay themselves liable to arrest every day in the year by running fast through town for the sake of saving his road a few dollars for gradsng.

—W. D. Freeman's black Mexican sweet corn is fine eating.

—Councilman Nick Frank is quite lame in the right hind leg this week.

—Plums don't seem to turn out as well as was expected a few weeks back. They are uncommonly small.

—Some nice native apples were among the fruit for sale at C. H. Green & Co's, this week.

—Dr. J. E. Soper has purchased a fine driving horse, a native of Montana. He has him in J. S. Cooper's barn.

—Tomatoes, home grown are now to be had in our markets. They are about a month late in the season but if frosts hold off for a few weeks will be quite plenty.

—September 11 will be Delano Fair Day. This will, doubtless, be more largely attended than have several of the last days. Fall is coming on and farmers will want to dispose of surplus stock before cold weather comes.

—St. Peter's parochial school opens Sept. 7th. Special attention will be given to music, art shorthand and typewriting. Lessons in art consists in drawing and painting from objects and from nature.

Those wishing a knowledge of shorthand and typewriting are instructed in the theory and practice of these arts after the best methods.

For further information apply to the Directress.

—When J. J. Hill raises his freight rates so that grapes costin 2cts per basket from Minneapolis here, now costs 3cts; watermelons and other necessaries of life in proportion he ought not to forget to raise the wages of his section men from $1.10 to $1.65; that would be in proportion. Such an astute business manager as James ought not to wait for local papers along his line of railroad to call his attention to such an important matter as the welfare of his employes. We like to see railroads and other kinds of enterprises prosperous. But, it is a poor kind of prosperity that doubles wealth for the wealthy and leaves the laborer to fight the wolf from his door at the same old hard times wages. Jim, divide up with your men, and be liberal about it too.

North Delano Happenings.

The Ladies Aid met with Mrs. Farber and the following ladies were present: Mrs. Wilder, Mrs. Burrel, Mrs. Maxfield, Mrs. Gross, Mrs Green, and Miss Catlin. There was considerable work accomplished. It being time to elect officers for the comming three months. Mrs. Burrell was elected Pres., Miss Catlin, Vice Pres., Mrs. Wilder, Treas., Mrs. Green, Sec.

Last Tuesday Mr. Green took a party consisting of his wife and sister and Miss Hattie Gross, and Miss Anna Quinn to Lake Sarah. The ladies got a boat and tried to fish but gave it up as it was too windy, so Mr. Green hitched up and came back to Lake Rebecca, and the ladies tried their luck again with much better success. Just before going out on the lake there was an accident, nothing serious, but very laughable for those looking on. One of the school mams stepped into the lake and found the water about 3ft deep more or less. There were lots of fish but they would not bite.

Last Thursday there was a family reunion at Wm Gross. Those present from nbroad were Mrs. C. M. Coffin and son, of Benson, Mrs. L. Frazier and two sons, of Minneapolis. Mrs. E. E. Castle son and daughter, of Lyndale, Mrs. E. S. Babb, and two sons and daughter, besides several others of the family. It seemed strange to see so many little ones at Mr. Gross's though we always enjoy one of those gatherings. Let them happen as often as they can.

The E. L. of Delano, visited the Armstrong League last Sunday evening. There were sixteeen in all who went down. We found their League in a very flourishing condition and we all enjoyed the meeting very much. It was a very pleasant ride both going and coming though the laad Mr. Maxfield took says they can thank Mammie Farber for their safe arrival home as it was so dark he could not see the road at all so he held the lines and she did the guiding of the team and not only that but she shared her shawl with the driver as it was quite cool.

Miss Amy Lyons, of Wayzata, visited her relatives here from Saturday until Monday.

The L. A. S. met yesterday with Mrs. Stanley. There were six members present and three visitors. The ladies brought their lunch along with them, and then Mrs. Stanley gave us a grand treat of lovely cream and peaches besides cookies, and two kinds of pickles, and cold meat sliced. Mrs. Stanley is a very nice lady to meet with. We all enjoyed ourselves so much. It is a very nice walk out there.

In the World of Art and Letters.

As the result of the development of our public school system and the cheapening of books, there has grown up a large class of men and women who seek broader education, or desire to extend their knowledge along special lines. Their duties in life, or lack of means, exclude them from the universities. THE COSMOPOLITAN MAGAZINE has undertaken the task of bringing liberal education, in its broadest sense, within the reach of those who have the aspiration, but are deprived of the opportunity. Doctor Andrews, late of Brown University has undertaken the Presidency of THE COSMOPOLITAN'S educational movement. The work, thus begun, is not intended to take the place of regular university work, but to supply a gap in existing educational facilities. Those who are really in search of knowledge will find direction and aid. It can do nothing for those who have not the desire to study. An intending student sends to THE COSMOPOLITAN, New York. his name, occupation, previous courses of study, studies desired to be pursued, objects and purpose for which course is designed, and the number of hours, daily or weekly, study which can be given. No charges of any kind will be made to students.

Personal.

Albert Rochl now clerks at the Meister Hotel.

Miss Irene Cheeley is to teach at Brooklyn Center this winter.

Peter Peterson, who is clerking at Waverly, visited home over Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. George P. Schaffer visited friends at Litchfield, Saturday.

E. J. Swedeback took the early train Monday morning for the Saw Dust City.

Mr. and Mrs. James Danforth, of Minneapolis, visited Delano friends this week.

A. Thornton, of Benson, made a visit with his old friend, L. M. Maxfield, Monday.

Ed Stewart and family and Post Master Castle, of Lyndale, did business in town and visited friends Wednesday.

Ezra W. Ferrel, of Montrose, made Delano a business visit Tuesday. He says wheat is a good but oats a poor crop in his neighborhood.

Patrick and John Dunn from the West, are taking a vacation with the old folks at home, and visiting relatives and friends in and about Delano.

A blind man and little boy called on our benevolent citizens Wednesday with considerable success.

Dr. O. R. Fassett, of Rockford has returned from his visit east, and again calls on his Delano patients.

Miss Minne Cruickshank, who has been attending the University summer school, returned Tuesday evening.

Charley Metzzer, one of Minneapolis burly policemen, visited friends at Watertown last week. We acknowledge a call on the way home, Saturday evening.

Charley Green, Fred Lindsley, and several others left, Monday, for the prairie to get some of the first shots at the prairie chickens. We haven't seen any of their game yet.

S. A. Putnam of Buffalo, made us a pleasant visit Wednesday. He will probably be the strongest candidate in the Republican field for Court Commissioner at the next election.

Frankie Schaffer and John Coolen will attend St. Thomas busines college at Merriam Park this winter. They start next Monday. George Barth, of Watertown, will accompany them.

Mr. Williams, who has been attending summer school at the University, has returned home. He was favorably impressed with the school. He says there was an attendence of 1,200.

County Cullings.

Marion Satterlee has started a new Republican paper at Annandale where the Rankest Republican sheet in the county already existed. Frank Lamson is to start another of the same faith at Buffalo, where Senator Eaton has the field. His is to appear next week. Andrew Bertram, it is rumored will launch another at Monticello soon; making the third additional paper for the G. O. P. and eight in all in Wright county, with the Journal, Tribune, Messenger, and GAZETTE forninst 'em. An even dozen papers in Wright County ought to furnish the news and make things lively.

From the Minneapolis Tribune we clip the rollowing list of delegates for Wright county, appointed by Gov. Clough to attend the Farmers meeting being held at St. Paul this week:

"Wright—J. H. O'Connel, J. Mc Hale, P. J. Dowell, J. H. Kennedy, F. F. Ballock, W. S. Huntington, W. D. Gordon, M. W. Mann, W. G. Menz, A. P. Praught, C. MacLachin."

Most of the names do not sound familiar. The joke of the whole thing is that though the Governor appointed an even thousand from the state, but nine delegates are allowed a voice in the meeting; the balance are honorary

Our County Commissioners are to be commended for being careful in some instances. But they should not be duped into cutting down bills where several are interested by having one put the price away down, and then paying the others the same price while the one setting the cheap price makes it up on other bills where competition does not come in. Scan your work a trifle closer Commissioners. If they wish to work cheap against competition let 'em; but as to others, until you satisfy yourself it is more than the law allows, give them what they swear to as just and honest. There are many tricks and those that play them, and not the innocent, should suffer by them. Be a little more careful where you cut bills.

The action of County Attorney Pidgeon, in asking Atttorney General Childs to conduct the Howard case, is, we understand, creating quite a feeling among people about the County Seat who are somewhat conversant with the case and the extraordinary efforts apparent to not have the case tried on its merits. We are creditably informed that one of the conditions on which Mr. Pidgeon was appointed County Attorney was that Frank Larabee should prosecute the Howard case. If this is a fact and Mr. Pidgeon has violated his contract he should forthwith be ousted from office and a successor appointed who would try to have this case fairly tried and settled to the satisfaction of law-abiding citizent of Wright County.

SAM JONES.

"THUNDERBOLTS,"

the latest and grandest book by this world-wide celebrity now out and for sale exclusively by subscription. The only book given to the public by Sam Jones in ten years. Edited by Rev. B. F. Haynes. Introduction by Bishop Joseph S. Key, of the M. E. Church, South. 600 pages. 122 splendid illustrations. A bonanza for agents. Most rapidly, easily selling book of the age.

AGENTS WANTED.

Send 85 Cents for Agent's Outfit, and 10 Cents for Our 70-page, Illustrated Catalogue of Bibles, Albums, Etc.

WONDERFUL SALES.

$10 Every Day Can Be Made by Agents.

To prove it, we give a few items from actual sales made within the last few weeks:
One agent sold 27 copies in two and a half days. Another sold 15 copies in two days, and another 30 in three days. One agent in Indiana sold 15 copies in two days. An agent in South Carolina sold 43 copies in three days. One agent in Georgia sold 25 in two days. An agent in Central Georgia sold 82 copies in ten days. When you consider the commission we allow agents, and the immense popularity of this wonderful book, and the ease with which it sells, there is nothing in which a live, pushing man can engage which will yield such profits. For instance: one agent made $108.25 in ten days selling "Thunderbolts." Another made $39.60 in three days; another $9.25 in one day; another $33 in two days; another $56.75 in three days.

WARREN'S ADDRESS.

Stand! the ground's your own, my braves!
Will ye give it up to slaves?
Will ye look for greener graves?
Hope ye mercy still?
What's the mercy despots feel?
Hear it in that battle peal!
Read it on yon bristling steel?
Ask it—ye who will.

Fear ye foes who kill for hire?
Will ye to your homes retire?
Look behind you!—they're afire!
And, before you, see
Who have done it! From the vale
On they come!—and will ye quail?
Leaden rain and iron hail
Let their welcome be!

In the God of battles trust!
Die we may—and die we must:
But, oh, where can dust to dust
Be consigned so well,
As where Heaven its dews shall shed
On the martyr'd patriot's bed,
And the rocks shall raise their head
Of his deeds to tell?
—John Pierpont.

IF, as some would have us believe, McKinley has raised the price of wheat to a dollar a bushel, he must be a very mean man to bring starvation to the people in Indi; and even to poor people in cities in this country, just to gain favor with the farmer.

IT is claimed that the young lady aeronot nearly lost her life at the Fair Wednesday, because a St. Paul police man who was to fire off his pistol as a signal for her when it was time to come down, could not get the gun to go off until she was out of hearing distance. Probably that's about as near as that policeman ever came to killing anybody.

A TERRIBLE head end collission occurred between two of the fastest trains on the Santa Fe road Wednesday, killing about a dozen people and wounding many more. William Jennings Bryan was on the rear car of one train but was uninjured. He did leroic work with others in helping care for the killed and wounded. One train was pulled by two engines. All three boilers exploded, making a terrible hole in the ground, and the cars over the hole burned.

THE Village of Atwater offers a premium of $100 for the arrest and conviction of the parties who broke into the Atwater Press office and extracted a $100 typewriter and an International Dictionary. Whoever did so wicked a thing must be fully as bad as the Press ever said they were. They haven't helped their cause a bit. Let law and order prevail. Mr. Spencer can write with a pen and without a dictionary enough to demolish all such individuals as indulge in foolishness of that kind.

WHY should Republicans wag their heads and say "I told you so" so gleefuly as they tell to their neighbor, who favors silver and gold coinage, that silver is depreciating every day. They seem terribly glad that the silver in a silver dollar is only worth 44 cents. What good can that be to anybody? Is it right to pay farmers for their grain in silver dollars worth less than even the much harped on 50 cents? And isn't silver one of the products of this country? Don't there lay buried in Nevada, Montana, and other states, beds of silver awaiting the digging? And isn't there hundreds of men paying the advanced prices for eatables and wearables and workables, while they cannot afford to work at mining silver at the present outlook? Why not put silver where it used to be and where it ought to be?

SOME of the state papers are kicking because the Minnesota Capitol is to be veneered with four inches of Georgia marble. Georgia has some fine marble while Minnesota has not. Minnesota wants a fine capitol. If four inches of Georgia marble will make it any finer, why not use it? Do all these editors that are making such a howl, wear home spun clothes? Do they haye their socks knit in the chimney corner, at home? Do they dine off of earthen ware made in America or do they contribute to the goyernment their share of tariff on Queensware from England? It is astonishing how strong protectionists eyen some of our good Democratic brethren have grown to be when it comes to having a contract for furnishing stone for the new capitol let to some of their friends. And it is also astonishing that a commission and Governor of the G. O. P of protection to home industries would send away down to Georgia to secure stone to build a capitol in this great state of stone and iron and brick.

YELLOW FEVER has put in its appearance in Missippi Louisiana and other places in the South.

MR. THURSTON, of Nebraska, is retiring from politics, but keeps insinuating that free silver is a dead issue; that Bryanism was completely squelched. But his actions speak louder than his words. He seems willing to pull out of politics for the present.

THE big strike don't seem to settle very fast. Operators offer 65cts for what they have been giving 54cts. Some of the miners are holding out for 69cts.

St. Paul the Whole Thing.

St. Paul has the new capitol.
St. Paul has the architect.
St. Paul firm gets the contract.
St. Paul men will do the work.
Minnesota will pay the bills.
That is the situation in a nutshell.—St. Cloud Journal-Press.

St. Paul and Alva agree for once. Both favor protection to home trade.

Bryan Grows Greater Daily.

In answer to the New York World's inquiry of National Committeemen the following from our own Committeeman appears in that paper:

(By telegraph to the editor of the World.)
St. Paul, Minn., Sept. 3.

Improving conditions will haye a tendency to strengthen the party in power regardless of the actual cause of the revival. However, we believe our party friends in this state are sufficiently enlighteded to distinguish between external demand and internal remedy.

W. J. Bryan grows greater daily in the estimation of pure Democracy in Minnesota.

THOMAS J. M'DERMOTT.

Lind Going to Ohio.

New Ulm, Minn., Sept. 4.—(Times Special)—John Lind will leave next week to take part in the Ohio campaign. He will deliver several speeches.

Power of Injunction.

The American people are studying the animus and effects of certain recent exhibitions of the power of injunction. The danger of mob violence must be guarded against, but the right of free speech and of orderly assemblage must not be interfered with.—The Methodist Herald.

Saloons Wrecked by the Police.

KANSAS CITY, Kan., Aug 31.—Ten saloons were raided by the police last night and $3,000 worth of liquor seized and poured into the gutters. Saloon furniture and fixtures filling ten big drays were seized and carted to Police Headquarters, where they will be burned. Similar action will be taken against seventy other saloons.—World.

Hog Cholera.

We are informed that hog cholera is prevalent to an alarming extent among hogs in this vicinity. Phil Haley, Frank Baum, and Frank Minton have lost a large number of hogs, and other farmers in this vicinity haye also lost some. Altogether 150 hogs are dead so far. The state veterinary is expected to morrow to see if anything can be done. The disease is contagious and animals and persons can carry the virus from a diseased pen to healthy hogs. Hence do not allow anybody or thing, that has been in the vicinity of diseased hogs to get near your hog pens.—Willmar Tribune.

Bryan on Prosperity.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., Sept. 4.—The St. Louis Post-Dispatch to morrow will print a letter from William J. Bryan, the first utterance after three months of travel and observation during the return of prosperity. Among other things he says:

"Wheat has risen because the foreign crop has been exceedingly short."

"The fact that silver and wheat have parted company will cause no dismay to those who understand that the law of supply and demand regulate the price of both."

"Nothing can better disclose the weakness of the republican position than the joy manifested by the republicans over events for which their administration and their policies are in no wise responsible."

"If the republicans desire to claim credit for the high price of wheat, they must assume the responsibility for the famine in India."

"A general rise in price should be followed by a rise in wages."

Mr. Bryan says that the joy over the increase of money from wheat is evidence that we have too little money; that if the farmers are benefitted by the rise in one of their products, how much better would it be if the rise was universal; that the price of wheat will fall when the foreign demand becomes normal, and that the present spasmodic rise will aid rather than injure the cause of bimetallism.—Minneapolis Times.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. Sept. 3, 1897.

It has always been considered the proper thing to make support of the National platform of a political party the test of a man's loyalty to his party. The platform adopted by a party in National convention is the only authentic declaration of the principles of that party and must be so considered until another National convention meets and adopts another platform. These facts are so self evident that mention of them seems almost unnecessary, yet objection is being raised because democrats are insisting that the platform adopted by the Chicago convention must be accepted as the principles of the democratic party. To do anything else would be a radical departure from all political precedents.

There is a clash of authority in the Interior Department between Secretary Bliss and Indian Commissioner Jones that may end in a big row among prominent republicans. Mr. Jones' present assistant is Mr. Thomas P. Smith, who is a democratic holdover. Mr. Smith has made a tip top record and Mr. Jones would like him to remain in his office. Boss Hanna directed sometime that one of his Ohio proteges-Tawner, by name,-who has been serving as the private Secretary of Secretary Bliss, should be appointed Asst. Commissioner, and the appointment was about to be made when Commissioner Jones heard about it and notified Secretary Bliss that he would not have Tawner for his Assistant. Then there was a high old time in the office of Secretary Bliss, and the relations between him and Commissioner Jones are very much strained, but Tawner has not yet been appointed. Of course, if Boss Hanna insists he will be, and if Jones doesn't like it he can resign. It is a custom to consult the wishes of bureau chiefs in selecting their assistants, and upon that custom Commissioner Jones relies.

Republicans would rather not talk about the deficit of about twenty-six million dollars shown by the official figures of the government's receipts and expenditures for July and August, the first two months of the new fiscal year. They haye already done too much talking about the surplus that the new tariff was certainly going to produce.

Senator McLaurin's success in the S. C. primary election, which means his nomination and election to the Senate, was the source of no little pleasure to his numerous Washington friends. He has already shown that he will make a Senator of whom his state and section will be proud.

Representative De Graffenreid, of Texas, is in Washington. Speaking of Wheat and silver he said: "Our farmers are this year blessed with abundant crops and the wheat producing countries on the other side of the ocean have short crops. In other words, the demand for American wheat is almost greater than the supply; hence the big prices which the speculators are just now getting. I am sorry to say this will not always continue, for next year the demand for wheat by reason of good crops on the other side may be only normal and in that event our farmers will not receive any more for their wheat than formerly. Let the mints of the United States, England, France, and Germany be opened tomorrow to silver, and you would see the price of the white metal rise steadily until it reached the level of gold. Why would it rise? Simply because of the demand-just the same as demand has raised the price of wheat." Mr. Graffenreid expressed his opinion strongly of those who are constantly decrying the four hundred million standard silver dollars the country now has, and ended an interesting chat by saying: "The only solution of the question is to open the mints to silver the same as gold. Permanent prosperity will never come through the further contraction of the currency, which the gold bugs are trying to bring about by discrediting our standard silver dollars. What the country needs is more money. That will be the issue in the next campaign, and, in my judgement, the democrats will win upon it."

Mr. John Russell Young, the new Librarian of Congress, is now having a hard wrestle with the more than seven thousand applicants and their friends, who were disappointed when he, this week, announced the appointments to ten of the best positions at his disposal. He still has forty or fifty small places to dispose of and although they only carry small salaries the pressure to get them is something awful to contemplate.

Kennedy's Own.

"Kennedy's Own," the Minneapolis magazine that was started something over a year ago, in the midst of financial depression, by William Kennedy, seems to be enjoying a measure of prosperity that is indeed surprising. It is difficult to understand how Mr. Kennedy has managed to procure the able contributions which have adorned the pages of his magazine from month to month, and made it a peer of many a literary publication in the east. The newspapers of late, throughout the length and bredth of the land, have teemed with commendatory comments on "Kennedy's Own," the August number of which, completed the first year of its existance.

The success of this magazine in the perilous times through which we haye been passing, and in a field strewn with wrecks of journalistic enterprises, not only speaks well for the moral courage and tireless industry of its projector, but stamps him at once as a man whose literary and executive ability must be of the very highest order—the possessor of an unusually rich and resourceful mind. Mr. Kennedy has won distinction in a way that has entitled him to the apparently limitless admiration and confidence which he is receiving from an appreciative public. He has won his spurs in a hard fought battle. We hope and believe that the permanent success of "Kennedy's Own" is assured.—The East Side News.

Alumnium.

The beautiful and useful metal aluminum is now only 30 cents a pound. In 1856 it was $92 a pound, and the general opinion was that it would never be much cheaper, because it was so hard to extract from the clay of which it formed so large a part. But scientific men set their minds to work on the problem and by 1886 the bright metal had declined to $12 a pound. It is now cheap enough to be introduced largely into domestic and manufacturing industries. It is already extensively utilized for shining kitchen utensils. For the backs of hair brushes and for other toilet articles it is lighter than silver and does not tarnish like silver. It seems now as if it might be utilized extensiyely in place of iron and steel for articles to be used at the seashore, where needles, scisors, knives and forks, hinges and screws are attacked and eaten by the salt sea damp. At least a strong alloy of allumnium might be used for these articles apparently, eyen if the pure metal itself could not be. At any rate the experiment is worth making. —Wright County Times.

To Stop Swearing.

In an essay to reduce the regular local output of profanity, the Non-Swearing Knights are preparing to establish divisions in Chicago, says the Chronicle of that city. The work of organizing is in charge of R. C. Wynn. The candidate for unprofane knighthood is required only to promise to try to abstain from swearing. It is not eyen insisted that he will swear to this pledge. There are no penalties for violating the vow, and the society has no objections other than the diminution of the use of ultra strong adjectiyes. Women are eligible, but men with deep, bass yoices and unlimited vocabularies are most in demand. The organization has as yet no school in which members can be taught to restrain their impulses to thunder expletives, but such an auxiliary is contemplated.

A Non-Swearing Knight indorses a printed statement that reminds one of W. Kerr's anti-spitting notices. It affirms that "swearing is a violation of the laws of God, of this state and a good society and I am, therefore, neither a good Christian, a good citizen, nor a gentleman if I swear." When a man or woman signs this statement and encloses it with 5 cents to the secretary, he or she becomes a member.

Ten years ago Mr. Wynn conceived the idea of organizing the Non-Swearing Knights. He first worked among the railroad men. The result was speedily pleasing. Instead of securing only a few members, he has enrolled 2,100 railroad men, who have promised to try not to swear when their fingers get pinched between buffers, or when their shoe heels are torn off in frogs.—St. Paul Dispatch.

Bryan Still the Leader.

(From the Washington Star)

In Iowa, Ohio, Kentucky, Virginia, Pennsylyania and Nebraska, where the Democrats have held State conventions, Mr. Bryan's leadership is enthusiastically recognized. In Massachusetts it is soon to be. In New York an effort will be made to have it recognized, with the promise of a lively row in case the effort is defeated. Only in Maryland has Mr. Bryan failed to receiye his due, and that is attributable to the personal scheming of Mr. Gorman, whom Mr. Bryan and his closest friends have never trusted. Why, therefore, should not Mr. Bryan accept himself as being still the Democratic leader and essay to lead when the party so accepts him?:—World.

Minneapolis Tribune: There can't be much in that reported gold find over in Michigan. The locality is too easy of access.

Foot Prints:—"British gunboats in Behring Sea" is not an alarming but rather a reassuring announcement. The vessels are welcome there, for they are needed there to fulfil a duty to the United States as well as to Great Britain.

Litchfield Independent:—Eastern judges are going so far in the injunction business in connection with the coal strike that one judge granted an order enjoining a preacher from holding Sunday religious services in the camp of the strikers.

Oregon Agricultnrist:—It is impossible to tell when wheat will reach its highest price and begin to fall. The farmer who sells at the price now prevailing may feel pretty well satisfied even if the price should go higher before the drop commences.

Duluth Herald: Attarney General McKenna has given up the section 22 puzzle and will let the question rest until the president and the other members of the cabinet return to Washington. Then he will let the administration shoulder the responsibility for the interpretation.

Minneapolis Tribune:—Bryan and Towne were given an ovation on Saturday at Denison, Iowa, the home of the Republican candidate for governor. It is evident that it will not be prudent for the Iowa Republicans to conduct their campaign on the theory that they will have a walk-away.

Minneapolis Tribune: North Dakota has over sixty millions worth of products to sell, which means $1,500 for the head of every family in the state. We will not particularize the different crops for fear of affecting their price in the markets of the world, but they are there on demand.

Sherbourne County Star News:—R. L. Brown threshed out an average of 25 bushels of wheat per acre from a 11 acre field and Burns Plummer realized 25 bushels per acre from a nine acre field. Both these farms have been under cultivation 30 odd years. This speaks well for sandy soil that "won't raise beans."

Lake County Rustler (Oregon): The discovery of such vast gold fields in Alaska, and the activity it has caused all along the coast in business, only proves what we have claimed all along, that to increase the circulating medium (money) would increase business and make better times. Increase the money and you increase the business.

Waseca Herald It is admitted by every intelligent man, that the wheat famine in India and the short crops in Argentina, Hungary, Australia, Russia and other countries constitute the main cause of the advance price of wheat. Was it the election of Mc Kinley that caused the famine and short crops? Will Brother Graham please explain?

Wabasha Democrat: The western farmer who has been taught by republican protective organs to believe we can get along without the aid of foreign countries, should haye that theory badly shattered by the present condition of the markets. Where would the price of our grain be if we were not able to sell in the free trade markets of the world? It is the foreign demand that is making dollar wheat.

N. Y. World:—Senator Chandler's declaration that a clause seriously affecting the commercial interests of the whole country was inserted in the Dingley Tariff bill by a trick, and that it became a law without the knowledge of anybody except the few men engaged in the trick, is one of the gravest import. If this has been done once it can be done again. And if laws can be made by tricks not only without the consent but without even the knowledge of Congress, government by the people has, for practical purposes, perished.

Minneapolis Tribune: The Pennsylvania gold Democrats, having been overwhelmingly beaten in the Democratic state convention, have decided not to put a ticket in the field, notwithstanding their pre-convention threats to do if the silverites presumed to carry things with a high hand. They have decided to make no fight until the congressional elections of next year, when they will probably throw their strength to the Republican candidates.

Said Gladstone to the brewers, "Give me a sober population, not wasting their earnings on strong drink, and I will know where I get my revenue."—W. C. T. U. column in Willmar Tribune.

The statistics show that out of 2,300,000 Germans who have left the Fatherland since 1871, 2,100,000 have come to America.

Every boy and girl in the old-time schoolhouse understood "the art of telegraphing without wires" long before modern scientists discovered it.

The latest printing press turns out 96,000 eight-page papers an hour. Men not yet old can remember when the fastest press could not print that many four-page papers in 48 hours.

In 1820 the entire world's product of gold from the famed Ormus and Golconda, from the Andes and Brazil, only amounted to $8,000,000. Things have greatly changed in these closing years of the century.

It has been finally demonstrated by Prof. Alfred M. Mayer, of the Stevens Institute of Technology, New York city, that there is a film of air on the surface of water strong enough to uphold a small piece of chemically clean and dry metal.

The young women of Harper, Kan., are forming an organization and taking pledges not to go with men who drink, smoke or use profane language. Their motto should be: "The man who furnishes draft for a pipe cannot furnish a draft on New York for me to spend at the seashore."

A year from now the official reports upon the gold finds of Alaska will tell the true story of the value of the Yukon. A good many people are waiting till that time before venturing in the first rush for the diggings. In the meantime California is stemming the tide with the news of some surprising gold discoveries within her own borders.

There are now 27 societies in the United States membership in which depends on descent from ancestors who distinguished themselves by coming over to America at an early date or doing something notable at that time. Meanwhile the great-grandfathers of the rest of us were minding their own business and we ought to organize.

It is estimated that the production of aluminium next year will reach 42,460 pounds daily, or about six times the output of 1895. Not many years ago aluminium was nearly as valuable as gold, but it will soon be classed as one of the cheapest metals. It is found to be especially valuable for its malleability, exceeding lightness and freedom from rust.

Hottentot is hard to pronounce if the graphic description of Dr. Aurel Schulz does it no injustice: "I can safely liken the language to the clicking of a multitude of different rusty old gunlocks simultaneously set in motion. It is simply appalling to hear the fatty click gut tkoot, tick, lick, mktchuk, gtkowktok gtu-gktigakkij, accompanied by many gugglings."

Prince Luigi of Italy has rendered a very distinct service to geographical science by his successful ascent of Mount Saint Elias, in Alaska, the highest peak in North America. He has approximately determined the height of the mountain and established the fact that it has never been, as had previously been supposed, a great volcano. For this service he is entitled to the thanks of the American people.

Italy appears to be the home of the anarchists, although they are men who know no country. The murderers of President Carnot and Premier Canovas were both Italians, and it is satisfactory to note that the police of Milan and other cities are taking steps against the incendiaries. It is only a question of time before the governments of the world will be compelled to unite in a relentless war against the reds, who themselves make war upon society.

History shows no parallel to the present European situation. There are six great nations armed to the teeth, and each one watching the slightest move made by the others. None of them wants war, but all are ready. They are bosom friends, but one and all suspect treachery. Hence the system of vows and protests and nicely balanced attentions. It is a grim satire on civilization that millions of armed men are thought necessary to keep the peace, and that war is only to be averted when everybody is afraid of his neighbor.

Some antiquarians in the state of Washington, who were evidently under the impression that nothing is sacred to a scientist, have been required to reinter the remains they recently removed from an Indian graveyard. It seems that the relics belong to an existing tribe who are not particularly interested in ethnology, and desire to be let alone. Learned pundits should be careful to restrict their grave explorations to prehistoric man, who has no surviving friends, and who should regard it as a very high compliment to be ticketed and given a place among the properties of a scientific museum.

The death of Mrs. John Drew, at the age of 77, leaves a void on the American stage which cannot immediately be filled. For 69 years as child and woman she has been before the public, and in that time impressed her winning personality on two generations. She stole into the hearts of theater goers when at the age of six, and known as Louise Lane, she made her debut in the character of a boy in "Timon of Athens" at the Liverpool theater. Every year that followed has served to strengthen the attachment, for the promise of her childhood was realized in the genius that developed in her as she matured.

A report to the state department from the vice consul at Hanover indicates that there is a growing desire in Germany for American horses. The original difficulties in shipping horses from this country seem to have been overcome, and transportation is now so perfect that horses arrive in Hamburg and Bremen in good condition. The American horses which sell most readily in Germany are the thick-set, working animals of the Percheron breed. Until recently these horses have been sent from Belgium. The report states that American horses have been sold in Hanover at prices ranging from $225 to $300 each.

OBSERVE LABOR DAY.

Notable Parade of Workingmen in Chicago—Bryan at St. Louis.

Chicago, Sept. 7.—Filing between vast throngs of applauding citizens, cheered by lusty lungs and inspired by the martial music of 23 bands, 40,000 of Chicago's sturdy sons of toil marched through the streets in honor of labor's great day. Business was suspended, and the vast majority of the downtown stores were closed, but their employes, as a rule, did not mingle with labor's cohorts.

St. Louis, Sept. 7.—The feature of Labor day celebration in this city Monday was an address by Hon. W. J. Bryan at Concord Park. The biggest crowd ever seen in the park greeted the speaker His speech throughout was enthusiastically applauded. Previous to the meeting Mr. Bryan reviewed a parade of 15,000 laboring men. Mr. Bryan spoke in part as follows:

"The labor organizations have been one of the most potent influences in improving the condition of the wage-earners. Labor organizations are almost entirely responsible for the fact that skilled labor wages have not fallen as much as prices, although they have not always succeeded in keeping employment up to full time. While giving to these organizations credit for what they have done, it is only fair to suggest that neither labor organizations nor any other form of protection can secure to the laborer permanent immunity if the general level of prices continues to fall. The idle man is the menace to the man who has employment, and the number of idle men must necessarily increase if we have a money system which constantly raises the value of the dollar and constantly lowers the market value of the products of labor. Arbitration of differences between large corporate employers and their employes is one of the political reforms most needed by wage-earners. Until arbitration is secured the strike is the only weapon within the reach of labor. Society at large is interested in the application of the principle of arbitration to the differences which arise from time to time between corporations and the employes.

"Laboring people have a special interest just now in securing relief from what is aptly described as 'government by injunction.' The extent to which the writ of injunction has been abused within recent years has aroused a hostility which is almost universal. It is only a question of time when government by injunction will be cured by legislation. The main purpose of the writ of injunction is to avoid trial by jury. Trial by jury is more important to the American people to-day than it ever was before in American history. It was originally intended as protection against the royalty and it is to-day the main protection of the people against plutocracy, which is to the country what royalty is under a monarchial form of government."

At night the champion of the silver cause was given a reception at the Jefferson club. At least 5,000 people attended during the evening and many of these were given an opportunity of meeting Mr. Bryan.

Philadelphia, Sept. 7.—Crushing out of "government by injunction," the municipal ownership of gas and water plants and street railways, the government ownership of coal mines, telegraph service and railroads, and the establishment of postal savings banks—these were the keynotes with which John P. Altgeld sounded a grim warning and pointed a moral Monday afternoon. Altgeld was the principal speaker at a meeting of workingmen held under the auspices of the Union Labor league at Washington park on the Delaware. Thousands listened to him and applauded his speech.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 7.—Labor day was not observed generally in Pittsburgh. All the mills, factories and other industrial establishments with but few exceptions, were running as usual, and but few workmen laid off to celebrate the day. The Labor day picnic and mass meeting held at Calhoun park under the auspices of Local Union No. 6, Brotherhood of Painters and Decorators, was the only public demonstration during the day. Between 3,000 and 4,000 people were in attendance at the park during the afternoon and evening. Addresses on various phases of the labor question were delivered from the platform in the open air by W. J. Brennan, James F. Burke and Joseph Howley.

A BETTER TONE.

Previous Activity in All Lines of Trade Maintained.

New York, Sept. 4.—Bradstreet's says of business conditions:

"Previous activity in all lines of trade is maintained. There is a better tone to demand from jobbers and the volume of business in wool, leather, clothing, hats, groceries and light hardware has increased. There is a better request for woolen and cotton goods, jewelry and rubber goods and for boots and shoes. Some wholesale merchants at western centers report the largest volume of August trade on record. There has been an increased consumption of cotton by southern mills. Western iron and steel mills have orders to keep them busy until January 1. In the central western states the bituminous coal strike has had a further depressing effect upon the general industrial situation. At the northwest some commercial houses have had to work overtime to meet the demand for goods, and the warm weather is reported to have practically assured the Indian corn crop. On the Pacific coast wheat exports have been checked by inability to secure crews for vessels. Mercantile collections have greatly improved in some sections. Last week's general and unprecedented expansion of prices for staples is continued, wool, cotton and woolen fabrics, hides, leather, white pine lumber, sashes and doors, iron and steel bars, billets and rods, wire nails, barbed wire and southern foundry iron, wheat, corn, lard and sugar having advanced and higher prices being expected for boots and shoes. Lower prices are recorded for cotton, wheat flour and coffee, while those for oats, pork, print cloths, petroleum and coal are unchanged.

A White Man Lynched.

Raleigh, N. C., Sept. 7.—A special from Mount Airy, N. C., to the News and Observer says that Sunday afternoon near Friends Mission, Va., Miss Sadie Cook, a young white girl, was outraged by Henry Wall (white), aged about 21. After accomplishing his purpose, Wall dealt his victim several blows over the head with a hoe, rendering her unconscious, and then placed her head on a log, crushing it with a stone, which was left lying bloody near by. Wall then cut the girl's throat, severing the windpipe, and dragging the body some 50 yards up the ravine threw it into a branch, where it was afterwards found. Meantime, he went to a spring and was found washing the stains from his clothing. The excitement became so intense that Monday afternoon Wall was taken from the officers and lynched near the scene of the crime.

Trusted Man Missing.

Chicago, Sept. 4.—Warrants charging embezzlement have been issued for the arrest of Charles M. Charnley, for 15 years treasurer of the Presbyterian board of aid for colleges and academies. He cannot be found. The American Surety company caused the warrants to issue, and alleges that Mr. Charnley has confessed to a shortage of $50,000, the trust funds contributed for educational institutions having been used in speculations on the board of trade.

FUSION IN NEBRASKA.

Three State Conventions Unite on a Single Ticket.

Lincoln, Neb., Sept. 3.—As predicted at the start by the party leaders, the three parties, democratic, populist and silver republican, joined hands in fusion and the ticket placed in the field is: For supreme judge, John J. Sullivan (dem.), Columbus; for one state university regent, E. von Forell, of Kearney (pop.); for the other regent, George F. Kenower, of Wisner (silver rep.).

Many delegates maintain that the fusion was perfectly harmonious, while there are others who claim that there may yet be dissension on the silver republican side, as about one-third of those delegates went home before fusion was effected. For awhile in the three conventions Thursday morning it looked rather precarious for harmony, and it was not until the announcement that the democrats had agreed with the silver republicans to substitute John J. Sullivan for W. H. Thompson that signs of fusion began to appear. Even then it was not until Judge Neville urged the indorsement of Mr. Sullivan that the populists gave in. At noon the agreement to fuse was finally reached and the rest of the proceedings were of short duration. It became very evident near the close of the convention that neither Scott, Neville nor Thompson could be nominated by any two of the conventions, and the maneuver of the democrats in substituting Sullivan was considered a coup d'etat that cut short what might have resulted in a long-drawn, knotty convention, full of fight and ultimately separating the three parties so widely that fusion would have been an unknown condition for years to come. This is the opinion freely expressed on every hand. There were 15 counties unrepresented in the populist convention and about the same number absent from the other gatherings.

Lincoln, Neb., Sept. 3.—The conference committee of the populists, silver republicans and democratic conventions, after holding sessions that lasted until three o'clock Thursday morning and failing to agree upon a ticket, made the following report to the three conventions:

"We recommend that the three conventions meet separately and ballot for judge. All nominations shall be presented to the three conventions and balloting shall continue until one man shall receive a majority of two conventions. Each ballot shall be announced to each of the other conventions before another ballot is taken. The regents shall be given to the parties which do not secure the judge."

The report was adopted by the democratic convention, but the committee was not discharged.

The populists adopted the cottage home for their party emblem, the same symbol as that of the populists of Colorado. The silver republicans adopted the liberty bell with a crack in it.

DEADLY BLASTS.

Six Persons Killed and Many Injured in an Indianapolis Suburb.

Indianapolis, Ind., Sept. 6. — Broad Ripple, a suburb of Indianapolis, ten miles from the city proper, was Saturday morning the scene of one of the most terrible disasters that has ever visited the state. Six persons were burned to death and many people are lying in the homes of neighbors burned, scarred and racked with pain from broken bones. Four buildings occupying a block of the town are in ruins. Of the six dead nothing but charred and blackened bones with hanging strips of foul-smelling flesh remain.

At ten o'clock a foul odor was noticed in the drug store of J. M. Watts, and a lamp in a dark room used for amateur photography went out. It was lighted, and as the burning match was thrown to the floor streaks of flame of a bluish tint ran along the joints between the boards, showing the presence of escaping natural gas, and then up the walls. The next instant the explosion came. The walls were hurled in every direction and the top of the building fell with a crunching, grinding sound, covering all. The ruins were burning immediately and shrieks could be heard from those buried beneath.

A hundred persons were at work on the ruins and trying to save Gresh's grocery adjoining, pulling at the ruins to save those buried beneath. While thus engaged and 20 minutes after the first explosion when the second came from beneath the grocery it was with a mighty roar and hurled the building to atoms. Forty people were knocked senseless, were strewn in all directions with broken bones and burned bodies, while many more escaped with small bruises. The shock made the whole town quiver.

Testimony in Luetgert Case.

Chicago, Sept. 6.—The strongest blow of the week was given the defense in the Luetgert trial Saturday. Mrs. Christine Feldt, in whom the state presents the motive for the alleged crime, took the stand for the prosecution and furnished the most sensational episode of the hearing. She related declarations made by the defendant which tended strongly to show that he purposed doing violence to his wife as soon as his business troubles were over and settled. She produced letters which he had written to her while in jail. They contained expressions of love, devotion and vows of fidelity. They informed the woman that if she would stand by Luetgert he would go away with her when the trouble was over and they would ever after be happy in each other's company. Luetgert was placed in the strong light of a lover who was waiting to gain his freedom to join the woman with whom he was infatuated.

Czar and Sultan Agree.

London, Sept. 6.—The Constantinople correspondent of the Standard says he is credibly informed that the sultan has been in direct communication with the czar and that the correspondence has resulted in the making of mutual arrangements by which the sultan agrees never to use his influence against Russia in central Asia and the czar pledges himself to uphold Turkish rights in Europe.

Dives from a Bridge.

Chicago, Sept. 7.—George W. Clarke broke the world's high-dive record Monday afternoon by jumping off the railing of the Halsted street lift bridge when the structure was raised to an elevation of 165 feet. The diver was taken out of the river uninjured and placed under arrest by the policeman whom Clarke had evaded when preparing for his perilous leap.

YELLOW FEVER.

The Dread Plague Makes Its Appearance in Southern Towns.

Jackson, Miss., Sept. 7. — Gov. McLaurin has just received the following telegram from two members of the state board of health, who went to Ocean Springs, Miss., Sunday to investigate the yellow fever scare:

"After a most thorough investigation in every conceivable light, it is the unanimous opinion of representatives of Louisiana, Alabama and Mississippi state boards of health and the marine hospital service that the fever now prevailing in Ocean Springs is yellow fever.

(Signed) "H. H. HARRANSON,
"J. F. HUNTER."

Mobile, Ala., Sept. 6.—Despite the quarantine proclamation against yellow fever sufferers at Ocean Springs and vicinity, about 100 persons from Scranton, Biloxi, etc., tried to get into Mobile on the midnight train, but the police surrounded the cars, and but four passengers were let off, they being through from New Orleans, and being subject to examination by the physicians here. The others were taken on to a point above Mobile, where they will be transferred to the west-bound train and taken back where they came from. It is said the excitement down the road is very great, and that crowds went into New Orleans on the late trains. They did not wait for their baggage, and some did not even fully clothe themselves, such was their hurry to leave. The state board of health has decided to enforce a rigid quarantine against Biloxi and Ocean Springs.

New Orleans, Sept. 7.—Raoul Gelpi, who had been spending the summer at Ocean Springs, was brought to this city Thursday, and died Monday. Dr. Walmsley, acting president of the board of health, after an autopsy, announced that Gelpi had died of yellow fever.

Jackson, Miss., Sept. 7.—A telegram from Edwards, Miss., 30 miles west of here, states that Hon. S. S. Champion, a member of the state legislature since 1890, and a prominent politician, died there Sunday evening from what was supposed to be yellow fever. A family of nine persons named Anderson, living near Edwards, has been sojourning at Ocean Springs. After their return seven of the family were taken sick, and Mr. Champion visited the family to inquire after their health. Two or three days afterward Mr. Champion was taken sick and died Sunday. The attending physician pronounced the case one of yellow fever.

ANDREWS DECIDES,

Will Be Head of the New Cosmopolitan University.

New York, Sept. 4.—Dr. E. Benjamin Andrews, president of Brown university, Providence, R. I., whose resignation as head of the faculty of that institution is still in the hands of the officers, has accepted the position of president of the new Cosmopolitan university, founded by John Brisben Walker.

Dr. Andrews resigned from Brown university because of his radical views on the silver question. His resignation was taken up recently by the trustees, and the learned president was requested to reconsider his action. Not that Brown university accepted or stood sponsor for his economic ideas, but that Brown university wanted Dr. Andrews.

In the meantime Mr. Walker had offered to Dr. Andrews the presidency of a university that, it was promised, should be world-wide in its scope—a university without fees, without diplomas, without red tape and expenses of any kind. Friday night Dr. Andrews gave out a statement in which he announced his acceptance of the offer, and said that the work to be done by the new corporation is in the nature of the university extension already carried on by Brown university, so that the head of Brown university might conceivably be the same person who had charge of the new work. He, however, did not deem such a union desirable, and if resorted to it will only be a device to tide over a temporary difficulty.

McKinley at Home.

Canton, O., Sept. 6.—President and Mrs. McKinley arrived at their home town Sunday night. When the Baltimore & Ohio train steamed into the station at 6:20 o'clock Saturday evening they expected to take a carriage and go quietly to the home of the president's mother, but the station ground and the street in every direction were crowded with a surging mass of humanity. The old McKinley reception committee of the historic campaign days greeted the party, a part of the committee having met the presidential train at Akron. Men, women and children made a rush for the McKinley car, and it was with difficulty the officers could keep a line open to allow the party and their escort to reach the carriages. Later in the evening the earlier crowd was surpassed, when the reception committee, headed by the Grand Army band, which was at the St. Louis convention and the recent Buffalo grand army encampment, tendered President and Mrs. McKinley a serenade. After "Home, Sweet Home" had been rendered, President McKinley, in response to thousands of calls, appeared on the stoop. He spoke briefly, thanking his townsmen for their warm welcome.

German Ire Aroused.

Berlin, Sept. 3.—It is asserted upon reliable authority that the German government will demand from France an explanation of the dispatch sent by M. Meline, the French premier, in reply to the message of congratulation of the Alsace-Loraine society upon the signing of the Franco-Russian alliance, in which dispatch M. Meline expressed the hope of a reunion of Alsace-Loraine with the French republic. Germany, it is announced also, will demand satisfaction for the excesses committed before the German embassy in Paris on the evening of President Faure's return from his visit to Russia.

Vagrants Burned to Death.

Fargo, N. D., Sept. 6.—Tramps began to rob and pillage stores at Conway, a small town in western Walsh county, Saturday afternoon. The city marshal and a posse captured three of the ringleaders after a hard fight and placed them in the city jail. At one o'clock Sunday morning the jail was discovered on fire and before the flames could be extinguished one of the vagrants was cremated and the other two have since died of frightful burns. It is supposed the men tried to burn a hole through which they could escape and the blaze got beyond their control.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Foreign Stone.

The contract for the construction of the new state capitol was let by the board of commissioners to the Butler-Ryan company, of St. Paul, the contract price being $696,000. The material to be used is Minnesota (St. Cloud) granite for the basement, superstructure of Georgia white marble, and dome foundation and piers of Kettle River sandstone.

It was evident from the prolonged session of the board that its members could not agree upon the kind of material which should enter into the construction of Minnesota's new state house, and this final result of their deliberations, which is in the nature of a compromise, was not altogether unexpected.

As to the labor interest affected there will be three years' work furnished by this contract to the granite cutters of Minnesota. The rough marble, to be finished at St. Paul, will supply many months of employment to Minnesota workers in soft stone, for granite cutters and soft stone cutters are distinct classes and unable to perfoam each other's tasks.

As to the amounts of the bid accepted, it is only $5,000 less than the entire amount supposed to be available for the superstructure.

Made a Member.

James J. Hill has been made a life member of the First Minnesota regiment. This was done in recognition of the many courtesies President Hill has conferred upon the Old First, and especially the favors shown at the time of the recent trip to dedicate the monument at Gettysburg. At that time Mr. Hill gave free transportation over the Great Northern road to any members of the First who lived on his lines, and who wished to go to Minneapolis to rejoin the regiment in the excursion to the Gettysburg field. Last of his favors was the bestowal of four Great Northern sleepers for the use of the train and the securing of the remaining number from the Soo and Northern Pacific roads.

Gold at Duluth.

Gus Schroeder, a Duluth policeman who was let out the first of the month as a result of the mayor's policy of retrenchment, is prospecting for gold within the city limits, and he has already found color. He is an old miner and believes he has found a quartz vein bearing gold in paying quantities. Recently he crushed out a small piece of ore and he was rewarded by several specks of gold. He also says that he has good reason to believe there is a placer mining field in the city.

Narrow Escape.

The tenement house of Frank Drowskowski, at Little Falls was totally destroyed by fire, with all the contents. The occupants of the building had a narrow escape and were carried out in their night clothes. The families burned out are those of Peter Miller, Frank Kenopkic, John Drowskowski, Peter Kenopkic. Their loss on the building is $1,800, partially insured. The fire is supposed to be of incendiary origin.

To the Scrap Pile.

Rumors concerning the fate of Hotel Lafayette are again afloat, and it comes on good authority that next season the big building will be demolished. If this is true, it will be a most serious blow to Lake Minnetonka interests, and will practically ruin the north shore as a place of residence except for those who have already established themselves there.

News in Brief.

A farmer near Wells lost 27 hogs by cholera.

Carl Anderson was enticed from the side of his family at the Union depot in St. Paul by bunco men and robbed of $35.

Parry Long, who came to Minneapolis in 1853, died at the age of 99 years.

A stranger unsuccessfully attempted to pass forged checks upon several Red Wing firms. The forger escaped.

The corner stone of the new church of St. Vincent de Paul was laid by Archbishop Ireland at St. Paul, the ceremonies accompanying the event being unusually impressive.

The safe in the Northwestern depot at Redwood Falls was blown open by burglars, the outer door being blown off, but they failed to penetrate the second door leading to the money chest and tickets. The money drawer in the office was rifled, but the burglars secured nothing.

Mrs. Karst, of Grand Meadow, attempted to fill a gasoline stove while burning. She was enveloped in flames in a minute. She died the next day.

A. J. Roekne has been appointed receiver of the Bank of Zumbrota.

While hauling hay a few days ago, Postmaster Brown, of Popple, saw four bears within forty rods of the postoffice. Several in the vicinity have lost sheep, which it was supposed wolves had taken.

The prison committee has ordered about $13,000 worth of additional twine machinery for the state prison, increasing its capacity one-third. It was bought of the John Good Manufacturing company in New Jersey.

Van Dusen, Harrington & Co., of Minneapolis, bought the R. D. Hubbard flouring mill at Mankato for $88,675. This mill was among the assets of the Hubbard Milling company, which made an assignment a few weeks ago.

The common council of Little Falls has passed an ordinance closing the saloons at midnight and prohibiting gambling.

Guy Earl Baker, of Minneapolis, while rowing a boat on Lake Minnetonka, was seized with a fit, and falling into the water was drowned.

During a severe electrical storm at St. Cloud, Sam Orton's big barn south of the reformatory was struck and burned to the ground. Ten horses were stunned and one killed. Nine men were asleep in the barn and three of them, including Charles Volley, were severely stunned, but all got out. Loss on barn about $1,500.

Mrs. Guestomozyk was killed by the cars at Winona. Her body was nearly cut in two from head to foot.

The Minneapolis owners of the Arctorus iron mine have given an option on it to the Illinois Steel company at $100,000.

The Bank of New England, which failed in Minneapolis in 1893, has paid the state, a preferred creditor, but the depositors do not get a cent.

Moorhead bicycle riders now breathe more freely. The policeman who entertained himself by shooting at their golf upholstered legs as they rode past him, has been dismissed from the force.

MRS. TIBBITTS.

BY ANNA SHIELDS.

WHEN did I first become deeply interested in Mrs. Tibbits? Was it when Frank Tibbits, my young friend and godson, came to me to help him out of the "scrape with Jones" that cost him the tidy sum of $3,000 before it was adjusted to Jones' satisfaction? Or was it when Frank began to get "into difficulties" and I had to compromise with his various creditors? Or was it when the sheriff hung a red flag from his windows and I flew to the rescue of his Lares and Penates?

He was a good fellow, honest, frank, cheerful and industrious, with no more of the get-along ability than a six-months baby. More times than I can count did he start in some small business, to sink all his capital and fail in his enterprise. He had a hopeless faculty for muddling his accounts, letting his bills run up and his stock run down, that I never saw surpassed by a man whose whole intention was honest.

When he married Laura Heywood I held up my hands in amazed horror. Laura Heywood, of all women, to take the place of active partner to one of the great army of incapables! She was the tiniest woman I ever saw—pretty, winsome and gentle, with waving brown hair, large blue eyes, shy and timid, always veiled by snowy lids and long brown eyelashes, hands and feet that might have been stolen from Queen Mab and a voice that was low, sweet and slightly plaintive.

When I would call upon Frank to try to adjust his many and varied business complications and he would sit rumpling his curly brown hair and gazing helplessly at me, I always found Laura with her pretty hands clasped over Frank's, her soft blue eyes looking appealingly into mine and her tender voice cooing consolation, as if her husband was a baby to be soothed and petted.

They were a pair of babies, and should have gone to housekeeping in a big nursery, with a doll's tea set and candy and cake enough for a perpetual feast. Sunshine was their native element, and they cowered under a storm.

They lived upon hope and a touching faith in good times to come. To see them when Frank had just started in some new business that was to make his fortune, and they invested in some utterly useless finery, was a sight to make the prudent shudder. She had no more idea of economy than a butterfly, and her housekeeping was only to be compared to that of Dora Copperfield.

Well, well, so he was—a grown-up child!

But if she fluttered in the sunshine, the wee, blue-eyed wife, she never complained for herself in the storms. For "poor Frank" many tears were shed, many moans made. She sold all her small finery with cheerful willingness to give Frank a good supper or help to pacify an enraged butcher.

Being an old bachelor and a wealthy one, I came to regard these two as adopted children and to make it my "mission" to set Frank on his feet as often as he knocked himself down. Laura, who was half afraid of me at first, with a vague apprehension of the dreadful things I might do to annihilate Frank if he displeased me, soon became confiding, and would nod her pretty head to enforce my prudent advice in a manner bewildering to see. She learned that my most severe lecture was followed by some removal of the last difficulty, and would nestle her tiny white hands in mine and whisper: "How good you are to us!" with all the loving confidence of a child for an old uncle or grandfather.

But one dreary, dreary day she sent for me by a boy, who said:

"There's something awful the matter at 28 E—— street, sir, and the lady says please come as soon as you can. She's all white and shivering, sir, and couldn't hardly speak. I'd hurry up if I was you, sir!"

Shivering! I looked at the street, scorched and dusty in the blazing August sun, and seized my hat. Something awful! It must be worse than usual, or Laura would have written one of her dainty little notes.

Hurry as I would, it was too late. Upon the sofa where we had settled so much momentous business was stretched the unconscious form of my dear godson, his face rigid and white, his kindly eyes closed, his merry smile gone forever. Two physicians were gravely watching him, and Laura hung over him, tearless, mute, utterly horror-stricken.

"Sunstroke!" one of the doctors whispered to me.

"Not dead?" I said.

"Yes! Can you coax the wife away? She does not understand yet."

It was no time for the indulgence of my own grief. I gently touched Laura's trembling hand.

"My dear," I said, softly.

No word answered me, though my touch had broken the spell holding her. One look into my face, one long, shivering moan, and she dropped at my feet in a dead faint. There was no relative to call in, no woman near and dear to the stricken widow, only the sobbing servant girl. I was like a father in the house, so I stayed while the doctor gave me directions and offered service in other than professional capacity.

It is useless to dwell upon the sad days that followed. Too many such scenes are familiar to all to need description.

Laura was not ill. Young and strong, she bore up physically, and tried, as she pitifully said, "not to be any trouble."

But the little drooping figure, the white, wan face, the desolate eye and quivering lips were in sorrowful contrast to the bright little wife Frank had worshiped. There had been no cloud upon their love, even if life had been full of perplexity, and not one self-reproach or memory of harsh words added to the widow's grief.

Less than nothing, for there were debts to pay, was the result of winding up the business Frank was conducting when so suddenly stricken down. Laura knew this, for there were never any secrets between her and her husband. When the first shock was over she appealed to me, as usual, for advice. "I was thinking of taking boarders," she said. I looked down upon the sweet, pale face, the sky-blue eyes trying to face life bravely, and I thought of the varieties of martrydom in this plan. How insolent servants would bully her! How swindling boarders would cheat her! How fault-finding women would frighten her!

"I don't think it would do," I said.

"Because I am not a good housekeeper? But I could learn. Frank didn't mind. If I was making a pudding and he wanted me to make out some bills, and the pudding burned up while I did it, he never scolded a bit—only laughed."

"But boarders would scold."

"I wouldn't have anyone to call me away," she said, her tears falling fast.

"Can you make out bills?" I asked.

"Oh, yes! I know all about bookkeeping. I was my father's bookkeeper until he died. At home, you know."

"Well, I think I can get you some to do!"

And I did. By having the work done at very low prices, I persuaded some of my business friends to intrust this work to "a young friend of mine," and took care that the money passing through my hand was sufficiently increased for Laura's wants.

It was amazing to see how bravely she met the trouble, and how much Christian submission lay in her loving heart. She could talk quietly of her brief, happy married life, recalling all her husband's love, and yet patiently bearing her loneliness and sorrow. She worked faithfully, and many acts of charity came from her slender resources for those who were poorer than herself.

I, who had felt a pitying tenderness for the child-wife, was forced to add to that bygone feeling a sincere respect for the true woman developing in poverty and grief to such a noble character. Three years had passed since that August day when my godson died, when there came from California a cousin of Laura's, a bronzed and bearded stock farmer, who had won wealth in that fruitful country by honest toil and fortunate investments. He was the most startling contrast to Frank Tibbitts, a strong, self-reliant man, with a loud voice, a will of iron and a sound, clear head for business. Investing his handsome fortune in various ways, he went into the business of managing his own estate and the recreation of courting his cousin Laura.

"I have loved her ever since she used to bring me her dolls to mend, and cry her blue eyes red over pet kittens," he told me, "but I was a sort of big brother, and when Tibbitts came along, whew! I was nowhere! But I'll win her now, Heaven bless her!"

I gave him my best wishes. Stay! Did I? I gave him my best spoken wishes, and I tried to hope that a second marriage might be as happy as the first, and have none of its perplexities.

"I SPOKE OF HER COUSIN."

But I was sorry to see how this new excitement disturbed Laura's life. Was it a sense of disloyalty to Frank that made her eyes so often bear marks of bitter weeping? Did she fear to trust her cousin that she grew so restless?

She grieved me to the heart by shutting me out from all confidence in the matter. As soon as I spoke of her cousin she would become immensely dignified and sew or knit in solemn silence, never lifting her eyes from her work. If I praised him she gave a feeble assent. If I blamed him she did not defend him. If I questioned her directly she gave me bare facts without comment. Never once did she give me an opportunity to hint at my knowledge of his hope to win her.

"She knows how I loved Frank, and she is afraid I will blame her for marrying again," I thought.

But I was rather staggered when the California cousin asked me to make his proposals.

"You see she looks on you as a second father," he said, frankly, "and she will let you speak to her. By Jove, I can't get a chance!"

"Why, I thought you were there every day?"

"Well, so I am. But if I hint at my love she begins to talk of Tibbitts. How can a man propose to a widow when she is actually talking about the dear departed as if her heart lay in his grave?"

"They were a most devoted couple."

"But she is so young to go into perpetual mourning. Why, Laura is not 26!"

But, though he pleaded eloquently, I refused to be his messenger of love. That very evening, as I went to see Laura, he dashed out of the house, nearly upsetting me in his haste, and never stopping to apologize. I found Laura crying. How was it? What did I say? What did she say?

All that is my business and hers! But I found the California cousin had asked for a love already given to me, and at this moment a little blue-eyed woman is challenging my admiration for a crowing, kicking bit of humanity that will call me papa, and Mrs. Tibbits ceased to be Mrs. Tibbitts two years ago, when she became my wife.

The California cousin has gone back to California.—N. Y. Ledger.

Tomato Force.

Put a layer of tomatoes in the bottom of a baking dish, cover with a layer of bread crumbs, then sprinkle with salt and pepper, put in more tomatoes, bread crumbs and seasoning until the dish is full. Put the bread on top, cover with bits of butter, and bake 20 minutes.—Housekeeper.

SHE HAD HUSTLED.

Her Life Had Been Full of Action, and Her Memory Was Good.

"I want you to state to the court exactly what your occupation has been during the past five years," said a lawyer to a buxom-looking lady of about 35 years, who was on the witness stand.

"Well, let me see," said the witness, reflectively, with half-closed eyes. "I've hustled, I can tell you that to begin with. Five years ago I was running a railroad restaurant in Wyoming, but I give it up 'cause the trains stopped stopping there for meals. Then I opened up a newsstand and cigar store out in Shooting Iron, Dakota, but it didn't pay very well, so I sold out and took up a quarter section of land and thought I'd go into the sheep bizness, but that sort o' thing was too lonesome for one of my disposition, so I give it up and opened a boarding house in a mining town, and that was lively enough, until the bottom dropped out o' the camp because of the mines petering out. Then I published and edited a newspaper for six months, and spent the next six months as my own lawyer fighting the libel suits I had on hand. Then I opened up a dressmakin' establishment, but that was too confinin', so I give it up and started out in the Christian science business and done well at it for awhile, but I found that I could do better teachin' dancin', so I went into that for the winter, and the next spring I opened up an employment office, but it didn't pay very well, so along in the fall I started out as a singin' evangelist, and during the winter I married a revival preacher, but I left him when I found that he had another wife, and I opened up a bakeshop in a new town in Arizona, but the town didn't grow as I thought it would, so I sold out and opened up a real estate office in Colorado, but hard times struck the state, so I went to New York to sell stock for a coal mining company, but I found I could do better lobbying in Washington, and I went there, but the climate did not agree with me, so I went to Minneapolis as a book agent, and on the way there I married a man in Chicago, who said that he was a rich publisher, but he lied, and I left him after three months and went down to New Mexico to open a sanitarium for consumptives. Then I started out and went through nine states as a magnetic healer and trance medium, and I made big money at that until I got converted at a Moody meeting and joined the Salvation army, but I—"

"I guess that will do," interrupted the lawyer.

"All right," responded the witness, "but I ain't half through yet. I tell you, but I've hustled."—N. Y. World.

PERFECT BREAD.

Some Suggestions Which May Be of Value.

The only flour which gives to us a bread which may truly be designated as the "staff of life" is that which is rightly called "entire wheat flour." This contains not only the starch, the carbonaceous part of the wheat, which so largely predominates in white flours, but the nitrogenous principle as well. To fail to supply this flour to our children, the consumers of so large a proportion of our bread stuffs, is to fail to supply them with healthily constructed bones, muscles and nerves, while to people generally it is almost as important. But if prejudice, or habit, or taste demands a white flour, see to it that it is of a rich, yellowish white, and so rich in the nitrogenous principles that it will receive and retain the imprint of the hand when closely pressed within it. Perhaps of all the kinds of flour that called "graham" is the most difficult to obtain of a really good quality. Farmers who send their own wheat to mill and receive it back again get good graham flour; but seldom, if ever, do we acquire it under other circumstances. By many it is preferred to any other kind, and to many it is invaluable, the husk acting mechanically in helping to break up the effete matter and so helping it in its passage through the intestinal canal.

Next let the lard and the butter be of the very best (do not use that abomination called "cooking butter"),and use both cold and hard whenever possible. The manner of mixing some of the fancy breads necessitates the use of softened — not melted — butter, but plain bread requires hard lard or butter.

As to yeast: Compressed yeast is good; liqnid yeast, good old-fashioned potato yeast, is much better; hop yeast is excellent also when used very judiciously, but no receipt can convey an absolutely correct formula for making it. There are hops and hops, and some are more bitter than others, and great judgment is necessary to its proper construction and use or the bread will be bitter also. Care is needed also in the use of compressed yeast. If much is used, much haste should be used also in lightening the bread; much compressed yeast and a slow fermentation makes the bread taste rank. Less yeast of any kind is required in summer than in winter for the same amount of flour. — Washington Home Magazine.

For the Toilet.

Instead of soap, try a new potato freshly grated. It is said to possess many toilet virtues.

An astringent remedy for greasiness of the skin may be economically prepared from one ounce of dried rose leaves, one-half pint of pure white vinegar and the same quantity of rosewater. Let the leaves soak in the vinegar for two weeks, then strain, and add the rosewater.

Fresh cream with a squeeze of lemon juice in it will be found a delightfully cooling and beneficial summer lotion for the face and hands.

When returning very heated from a walk or cycling ride, do not attempt to drink any liquor or to bathe the face and hands immediately. Rather pour plenty of cold water over the wrists of both hands, and a pleasant lowering of the bodily temperature will speedily become apparent.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Canning Vegetables.

Any cloth with interstices which may become clogged with matter, says an exchange, is undesirable for use for dish cloths. Therefore those made of net, stockinet or knitted of candlewick are not to be approved. A smooth linen crash, though stiff at first, soon wears soft, and makes a cloth that is both serviceable and sanitary, and one that will outwear half a dozen of the ordinary kind.—Detroit Free Press.

THOROUGHBRED HOGS.

Why They Should Be Given a Place on Every Farm.

At an Iowa farmers' institute in reply to the question: Would you have a thoroughbred herd of hogs on every farm? a prominent hog-raiser said:

If my plan could prevail I would have nothing but pure bred hogs in this country. I do not mean by that that every herd should be registered. That would be an expensive uselessness, but I do mean that all stock should be traceable to recorded ancestry. Then let the registered herds be kept up to the highest standard of excellence to supply a male head for each of these pork herds. The professional breeder would then do a flourishing business and the farmer would not be looking around for the best hog in Christendom for ten dollars. He would demand something better than that, and would be reaping the profit which he justly deserves from feeding his farm produce to a class of hogs that would net a snug profit and command a premium on any market, whether high or low, and at the same time have a bunch of hogs that he could take infinite satisfaction in "hanging on the fence" to look at and to show his neighbor because they always call forth favorable comment and admiration, which would be an incentive for something a little better if possible for the next crop. I say that until the thoroughbred hog shall be given a place on every farm his true mission is not fulfilled, and further that the mission of the professional breeder if he be honest and unselfish and sees the whole thoroughbred scheme in its proper light is not fulfilled until such is the case. If every farmer could see this plan from the proper standpoint and could comprehend the advantages accruing from its consummation three years at most would accomplish the work. But though firm in the faith as I am I have grave doubts if it is ever accomplished. There is too great a diversity in human nature, too wide a range of disposition, too many scrub men, too much difference, to ever expect to see all the farmers stand on a level in any branch of industry. However, the cause is advancing, and one fact is well established, that when a man once gets a taste of thoroughbred blood, like the bulldog, he never lets loose except to get a better hold.

FOR RINGING HOGS.

Clever Contrivance Which Is Not Protected by Patents.

This is the way we catch hogs for ringing. Take an ordinary shipping crate for hogs, take off cleats at both ends, on one end nail at four corners of the crate four cleats two inches by three inches. Over these crosswise at top and bottom of crate nail two two-inch by three-inch strips. Through these bore one-half inch holes, dodging three inches apart. Into this space insert two movable levers with holes in them opposite those in cleats. When finished the end of the crate will look like this:

Levers No. 1 and 2 are held in place by two bolts without burrs. This makes them adjustable to different-sized hogs. No. 2 is thrown back ready for the hog to put his head in. Set the "trap," we call it, at your pen door, with hogs inside, with one man or boy to chase one at a time into it and as the hog runs his head into the open trap catch him just behind the ears by moving lever No. 2 to an upright position quickly. When you have your hog in the trap you can ring him at your leisure. We have used this kind of a device for ten years. There is no patent on it.—E. D. Hale, in National Stockman.

AMONG THE POULTRY.

Buckwheat is a first-class egg producer.

Geese and ducks should be full-feathered before killing.

If eggs are stored in a damp place they will soon taste musty.

A rapid growth of bone, flesh and feathers demands frequent feeding.

Minorcas, Leghorns and black Spanish chickens are especially valuable for laying.

At night before they go to roost is a good time to give the fowls a little extra food.

Late hatched turkeys can be given a free range earlier than the early hatched.

When the hens stop laying a change of food will often start them to laying again.

Dampness and lice are the great demoralizers among all kinds of young poultry.

When there is no check in growth the chickens will get over their feathering easily.

The laying of unusually large eggs is pretty good indication that the hens are too fat.

The best plan is to train the young poultry to roost in the poultry-house from the start.

If there are any hens to be sold this fall a good time to sell them is when they quit laying.

A little flaxseed meal in their food will help the old fowls to pass through their moult quickly.

If young ducks are allowed access to a pond too early they are apt to have cramp in the legs.

The flesh of the guinea is dark, but it has a delicacy of flavor that approaches that of wild game.

Give the hens all possible freedom and there will be less trouble with soft-shell eggs, as they will secure the lime they need.—St. Louis Republic.

"LAGER, ALES UND WINES."

Meaning of "L. A. W. Hotel" as Explained by a German.

Among the many advantages set forth by the L. A. W. to riders to join the organization are the special accommodations extended to members at the official hotels in cities and towns. It is the custom in suburban places for proprietors of official hotels to display a sign like this: "L. A. W. Hotel," in some conspicuous place. Naturally riders patronize the official quarters, and as a consequence the keepers of road houses and of hotels in the country are now hanging out "L. A. W. Hotel" signs. The practice has been called to the attention of the league, and its officers are trying to compel the non-official houses to remove the signboards. Complaint was made to the New Jersey division of the league that a hotelkeeper on the outskirts of Jersey City not entitled to display the official sign of the L. A. W. was an offender. A visit to the place developed the fact that the owner was not disposed to accede to the demands of the league's representative. The latter, finding that mild persuasion was futile, became indignant and threatened legal proceedings. The proprietor, a German, also waxed warm, and in response to the remark that he was using the official sign of the league without authority, retorted:

"Vot I know aboud veelmen's leegs? Dot don't shtand for noddings like dot. Dot sign shtands for lager, ales und wines hotel, alretty yet. Dot my leeg, togedder."

The explanation amused the officials so much that no legal move was taken.—N. Y. Sun.

MORE LUXURY FOR TRAVELERS.

Something About the Omaha Road's Buffet Parlor Cars.

Ever on the alert to provide the most complete comfort and luxury for its patrons, "The North-Western Line"—C., St. P., M. & O. Ry., has just inaugurated a Buffet Parlor Car service between Minneapolis and Chicago, which will not only prove a delightful innovation with all classes of travelers who want the best obtainable, but render daytime travel between here and Chicago a positive luxury.

The service includes two superb cars just from the shops owned and operated by the Railway Co. They are named in honor of the twin cities, "Minneapolis" and "St. Paul," are each sixty-eight feet long, and cost nearly $18,000. They are painted a dark green, with gold trimmings, and are very handsome. Entering the car at the forward end, the beauty and comfort within at once charms and delights. The finish is in polished St. Jago mahogany, inlaid with white laurel wreaths and leaves. The ceiling is of dark olive, with exquisite gold trimmings, and is pierced with six large, ornamental Pintsch gas chandaliers.

The body of the car contains twenty-two luxurious, plush-covered revolving chairs, each opposite a huge window. All the windows are beautifully hung with dark olive silken draperies in keeping with the decorations, besides being supplied with dark green sliding shades. Throughout the floors of each car are laid with heavy velvet carpets, and opposite each revolving chair is an upholstered foot-stool. Twelve large plate-glass mirrors are placed here and there on the sides between the windows, so milady is never at a loss to know if her hat is on straight. At one end is a commodious ladies' toilet-room, and at the other end, screened from the body of the car by a huge plate-glass window, hung with draperies, is the buffet-room. Through the window one catches glimpses of beautiful chinaware, napery, and other things that make buffet service delightful. Still back of the buffet is a capacious smoking-room, supplied with wicker chairs and everything else for a smoker's comfort. At the rear are the gentlemen's toilet apartments.

Besides being the finest parlor cars ever brought to Minneapolis, these cars combine the interesting feature of a Buffet service from which the passenger can select any time of the day any kind of a luncheon to suit his appetite, and at very moderate rates. Tables fit in opposite each chair for luncheon, card playing, or any other uses desired, and inviting menu cards with the time-table of the trains are at the hand for each passenger. Of course a uniformed Ethiopian is at hand, and looks after everybody's happiness.

One of these cars now leaves Minneapolis on Day Train every morning at 7:35; St. Paul 8:15, reaching Chicago 9:55 p. m., and the other will leave Chicago 8:15 a. m., reaching St. Paul, 9:55 and Minneapolis 10:25 p. m.—Minneapolis Journal, Aug. 9, 1897.

Mere Bundles of Nerves.

Some peevish, querulous people seem mere bundles of nerves. The least sound agitates their sensoriums and ruffles their tempers. No doubt they are born so. But may not their nervousness be ameliorated, if not entirely relieved? Unquestionably, and with Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. By cultivating their digestion, and insuring more complete assimilation of the food with this admirable corrective, they will experience a speedy and very perceptible gain in nerve quietude. Dyspepsia, biliousness, constipation and rheumatism yield to the Bitters.

THE HEAT PLAGUE OF AUGUST, 1896.

Mrs. Pinkham's Explanation of the Unusual Number of Deaths and Prostrations Among Women.

The great heat plague of August, 1896, was not without its lesson. One could not fail to notice in the long lists of the dead throughout this country, that so many of the victims were women in their thirties, and women between forty-five and fifty.

The women who succumbed to the protracted heat were women whose energies were exhausted by sufferings peculiar to their sex; women who, taking no thought of themselves, or who, attaching no importance to first symptoms, allowed their female system to become run down.

Constipation, capricious appetite, restlessness, forebodings of evil, vertigo, languor, and weakness, especially in the morning, an itching sensation which suddenly attacks one at night, or whenever the blood becomes overheated, are all warnings. Don't wait too long to build up your strength, that is now a positive necessity! Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has specific curative powers. You cannot do better than to commence a course of this grand medicine. By the neglect of first symptoms you will see by the following letter what terrible suffering came to Mrs. Craig, and how she was cured:

"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and think it is the best medicine for women in the world. I was so weak and nervous that I thought I could not live from one day to the next. I had prolapsus uteri and leucorrhœa and thought I was going into consumption. I would get so faint I thought I would die. I had dragging pains in my back, burning sensation down to my feet, and so many miserable feelings. People said that I looked like a dead woman. Doctors tried to cure me, but failed. I had given up when I heard of the Pinkham medicine. I got a bottle. I did not have much faith in it, but thought I would try it, and it made a new woman of me. I wish I could get every lady in the land to try it, for it did for me what doctors could not do."—Mrs. Sallie Craig, Baker's Landing, Pa.

The Blue and the Gray.

Both men and women are apt to feel a little blue, when the gray hairs begin to show. It's a very natural feeling. In the normal condition of things gray hairs belong to advanced age. They have no business whitening the head of man or woman, who has not begun to go down the slope of life. As a matter of fact, the hair turns gray regardless of age, or of life's seasons; sometimes it is whitened by sickness, but more often from lack of care. When the hair fades or turns gray there's no need to resort to hair dyes. The normal color of the hair is restored and retained by the use of

DELANO, FRIDAY, SEPT. 10, 1897.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE VILLAGE OF DELANO.

DELANO DIARY

—Mrs. Steffes is having her house remodeled and repaired in good shape. Gotlieb Herman is doing the work.

—For fine dental work call on Dr. Niven, at Elk River, Sept. 13 and 14; and Monticello Sept. 18 and 20. 50

--Numerous of our citizens took advantage of "cheap" rates to visit the cities. Some went to the State Fair also.

—Monday was Labor Day, but our citizens didn't seem to mind it much, except the schools defferred for one day their opening.

--Mr. Jones has vacated the barn in the rear of the Meister House. He has his horses in several small barns about town, temporarily.

--The old skating rink, one of the best in the big woods, was torn down this week to give place to some new lumber sheds. Thus pleasure gives way to business.

--Several heavy rains lately have put the ground in fine condition for fall plowing; have helped fill out corn; and perfected vegetables in gardens; and made fall pasture good.

--The John Hancock Insurance company has concluded to establish a local agency here. Hugh Nelson expects to move into the Peters property on Third street about Oct. 1 and take charge of the business.

--Landlord Meister, of the Meister House says the Eagle "Caught a Tartar" when they pounced onto him and, threatens to bring a ten thousand dollar libel suit against the Eagle Printing Company, very soon.

—It is claimed that Delano's saloons are now run on the most wide open policy. Our council does not consist entirely of men who bear the reputation of favoring such a policy They should enforce the laws a little anyway.

—Dr. Walter informs us that he sowed up a severe wound on a horse a few days ago. A cow had hooked the animal, tearing a hole in the abdomen causing a large strangulated hernia and allowing intestines to escape. He thinks the horse will make a good recovery.

—Both the Public and Parochial schools began on Tuesday, September 7. Several of the pupils in the Parochial school having completed the course given there, entered the Publick school; and will probably continue their studies until they become High School graduates at least. With two schools preparing pupils for higher studies, the High School ought to be filled.

--People in the cities must be awfully hungry judging from the speed of most of the many cattle trains through Delano almost daily, and sometimes several times daily. Jim Hill should fix his road so that such a high rate of speed would not have to be maintained in order to get out of town. He has no more business going through town so fast than anybody else has. The village authorities should see to it.

—A visit to the power house last Saturday evening was much enjoyed. Things do run smooth about there. Two big dynamoes, with the machinery running them, covered, were making so many revolutions and so noislessly that we had to enquire if one of them was running. We understand we were not the first to ask, as depot agent Bolton, himself a telegrapher, had preceeded us and wanted to know as bad as we did.

--One of the ladies who accompanied the excursion to Buffalo, N. Y. and was away about two weeks was surprised on arriving home Sunday evening to be met at the train by her family of small children accompanied by a smooth shaved slick looking young man. She soon learned that the head of the family had been to the barbers. But she couldn't convince her youngest child who she was and he refused to come to her or recognize her in any way.

—Martin Conzet, of Greenwood, was in to call on the GAZETTE, Wednesday, and presented us with a peck of red harvest apples. He says he reads that the silver dollar is worth 44 cts, and he gets along in the eighties for his wheat. But he has to take silver certificates in pay for his wheat. He wants to know how he can be getting any more for wheat than he did last year at that rate Mr. C. expects to become a citizen of Delano soon; as he has rented his farm to Henry.

—A couple of weeks ago several young men engaged in threshing, while the machine was stopped got to fooling as young men often do, too roughly. Two nearly grown men picked up Theodore Kittock, aged about 15 years, and stood him head down in the water barrel. Theodore was badly frightened and has been sick since, and now lies ill of typhoid fever, at his fathers house. Should he die there will probably be a coroner's investigation. Such foolishness should not be permitted. Doubtless the young men engaged in this case are now sorry enough; but that don't bring back the blush of health to the fevered boy's cheek. It is poor business for large boys to frighten smaller ones, and often leads to bad results.

—L. M. Meister expects a hotel man from Glencoe to take charge of his hotel soon and a liveryman from Montrose to occupy the barn.

--Mason work and plastering ceased for a time this week for want of lime. Somebody ought to start a lime kiln in this neighborhood, in order to supply the demand.

—The drove of horses from Montana have been sold off until but few remain. Some of them are good looking animals but have to be broke before being of much use.

--The camp meeting at Rockford was attended by quite a number from Delano, on Sunday. Rockford, for years has held a large and understanding camp meetings each fall, under the auspices of the Advent church.

--Lindsley, Green, Murphy & Co. returned home Saturday, from a week's trip to the vicinity of Willmar, on a grand hunt. "Niver a chicken" "but about a hundred ducks" they say. No wonder when it rained nearly all the time.

Personal.

Miss Hattie Gross is teaching the Ziebarth school this winter.

L. M. and Mrs. Meister visited Waverly Tuesday on legal business.

Sheriff Nugent and Deputy Anderson, of Buffalo, took dinner in Delano Tuesday.

Mrs. C. H. Green visited the cities and the Fair the early part of the week.

Mrs. C. A. Connor and two children, of St. Peter, visited Delano friends this week,

Dr. Shrader returned Wednesday evening from a visit with his father at Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. E. E. Shrader and wife, of Watertown, drove over to see the town one day this week,

John Swedeback, who lives in Morsison County, visited his mother and brother here this week.

Miss Irene Cheeley, of Minnetonka Mills, came up Tuesday for a few days visit with old friends.

W. Sidney Belt, of Woodland, lately returned from a two months visit in Indiana, was in town Tuesday.

Misses Gray, Kelly, Gates and Arnold have returned from their respective homes to teach again this winter.

Phil Martin was down to the State Fair and met several of his old comrades of the 2nd Minnesota, Tuesday.

Mrs. Dr. Soper went to Minneapolis Monday evening to spend the week with friends and visit the State Fair.

Clerk of Court Vorse, and family visited his daughter Mrs. Louis Mc Donald and Delano friends this week.

Attorney Merick, of the firm of Merrick and Merrick, Minneapolis, was a guest at the Meister House, Tuesday night.

Bela Babb and wife, of Benson, visited with their son Elmer S, a few days this week while on their way to the State Fair.

Mrs. M. A. Chance returned Tuesday evening from Chicago where she visited her daughter, Mrs. Hopper, and family.

Editor Byrns and C. G. Halgren, of Watertown, made us a brief visit yesterday. Mr. B. seems satisfied with his new quarters.

County Cullings.

The Wright County Board of Commissioners have requested Attorney General Childs to hire Frank Larabee as assistant in the Howard case.

Mr. Tanner, in arguing the Boxell case, says: "Common sense ought to tell him that if a man swears out a warrant for murder, the grand jury would not adjourn without an investigation." But a grand juror says that they were going to investigate the case when this same officious County Attorney interfered, and requested that nothing be done in the matter then. When does he intend taking steps?

Buffalo, Minn.--The body of an unknown man, about 25 years of age, was found on the side track east of the station yesterday. He was probably killed by a freight train. His head shoulder and arm are severed from the body.--Minneapolis Times.

Our Teachers and Their Work.

The schools and colleges of this favored land are again becoming centers of activity, and students, older and younger, are beginning to renew their conquests in the fields of learning. From now until next June the work of application to prescribed tasks goes foreward under the direction of a great army of teachers, who have an important part in shaping the future of this nation. By the vast appropriations and free gifts which the people of this country devote to the cause of popular education is proclamed the faith they have in the power of ideas and intelligence to rule the world.

That teacher may be a power in the community who has a right conception of his or her calling; who has the enthusiasm that reduces problems of discipline and control to a minimum, and inspires students with a love for mental culture and enlargement, and the spirit of achievement in the world of high endeavor.

Our educational system is doubtless far from perfection, while too many of our teachers are quite perfunctory and mechanical in their methods. The work of education becomes a dull routine when the goal of ambition is to recite tasks, to pass examinations, or get promoted, notwithstanding that such progress is essential and fundamental. It is not always the fault of teachers when it is so hard for them to love their their work, but that is the great qualification for successful teaching. You cannot divorce the heart and mind, even in pure scholastic work, and make a success of it.

In all probability during the coming school year that indispensible vehicle, the memory, will be taxed beyond its fair proportion amongst the mental faculties, as it has been too generally in the past, in daily school work. There are some advantages in this. When a playfully inclined student's memory is hard at work corralling the contents of a lesson, his inventive genius cannot be making trouble for the teacher. It still remains that his faculty is overworked, and that the reason and the imagination should be called more into exercise. The text books may not help the teacher in this respect, while the memory must perform some tasks with little or no aid from the other faculties, but happy is the teacher who can breath life into dead things. A passage from Herbert Spencer, though taken from its connection, enforces what we are trying to get at. He says: "I do not mean such altruism as taxes rate-payers that children's minds may be filled with dates, and names, and gossip about kings, and narratives of battles and other useless information, no amount of which will make them capable workers or good citizens; but I mean such altruism as helps to spread a knowledge of the nature of things and to cultivate the power of applying that knowledge."

It is a significant fact that a larger proportion of the teachers in our schools and colleges, whether public or private, under state or denominational auspices, are members of the Christian church, than the members af any other secular calling. There is a reason for this. The highest success in the profession of teaching is more dependent on the development of the spiritual nature than is the greatest success, for instance, in some mercantile pursuit. Faith in the right, reverence for the truth, a spirit of self-denial, and love for others, are qualities, to lack any of which, a teacher must at least be a partial failure. The profession of teaching, rightly viewed, is above the plane of what we call secular. The Christian faith is the only solid basis for enthusiasm and breadth of conception in the work of teaching. If an undevout astronomer is mad, an undevout teacher is profaning his calling. For the true object of teaching is not to make scholars merely, but to make men and women, to inspire them with high ideals and to stir their purest emotions as the most powerful incentives to all fruitful intellectual work.--Methodist Herald.

KEEPING STILL.

(From the Wabasha Democrat.)

Of all the men whom I admire
There's not a one who may aspire
To stand as high, and none who can,
As does the truly "quiet man."

If any being on the earth
Gets credit far beyond his worth,
That one can be none other than
This unobtrusive "quiet man."

No matter what's within his head
His silence is interpreted
To be a sign that wisdom lies
Behind his inexpressive eyes.

If so he drops a word or two,
His friends will search 'em through and through
To meanings deeper in intent
Than e'er the speaker thought or meant.

If so by chance, he takes a stand,
Assumes position of command,
Surprised approval greets him then,
And you shall hear from other men:

"Some weighty reason lay behind
An act so foreign to his kind,"
When things go wrong his moveless state
Is credited to scorn of fate.

So softly to himself he swears;
'Tis thought he murmurs pious prayers.
He's so misjudged his flaws at length
Are twisted into points of strength

Poor humankind awaits command
From all it doesn't understand,
And he may work his own sweet will
Who has the art of keeping still.

DISTINCTION.

There are some folk eccentric in
The way they tell their views,
It's "speculation" if you win
And "gambling" if you lose.
—Washington Star.

GOVERNMENT by injunction must go. It is not compatible with our notions of government; at length when stretched to the extent it has been.

DR. FRIDTJOF NANSEN, Norway's eminent arctic explorer, is expected to be in Minneapolis Nov. 18. Great preparations are being made to give him a grand reception.

WHY don't somebody get out an injunction against armed bodies of men marching over the roads of Pennsylvania? Have they any more right there than unarmed men?

WHY don't some one serve an injunction on people leaving good homes in Minnesota and other states and going to Klondyke for ship loads of gold to flood the country with, and increase the per capita of money in the U. S.? It will be as bad as free silver if they get enough of it.

IF the papers that want our capitol walls to display advertisements of Minnesota stone and can't have them, would chip in and help the quarries they might induce Jim Hill and others to erect a union depot or some other fine edifice of Minnesota stone, for the purpose of aiding people in seeing what we have for stone anyway. It is to bad to have such vast quantities of such fine stone as is said to be buried beneath our sod undug and unused.

Anti-Bryan Argument.

"Mr. Bryan's happy escape may have been due to the fact that there were no free silver platforms to the coach in which he was riding."—Duluth News Tribune.

The above from a leading Republican daily of our district shows to what straits the gold standard people are driven for arguments against Mr. Bryan. It is a wonder the Duluth sheet didn't attribute the escape of Mr. Bryan to the Dingley bill; or to the fact that William McKinley is President and the G. O. P. in power. All accounts of the wreck giue to Mr. Bryan unstinted praise for his heroic efforts in saving injured fellow passengers and alleviating, as far as possible, their sufferings. There is no account as to whether or not his car had silver or gold platforms or even any platforms at all. It is more likely an overruling Providence prevented injury to Mr. Bryan. What do you think of that, News Tribune?

Terrible Slaughter.

From all accounts the slaugter of twenty and wounding of 40 more, several of whom have since died, at Latimer, Pa., by Sheriff Martin and a posse of 102 deputies stands out at the head of the list. The Custer massacre by the Indians was bad, but the soldiers were at least armed, and a state of warfare existed, But in Pennsylvania, the coal miners, it is claimed, were invited to come from Harwood to Latimer, as men at that place were about to strike. The men started; were met by the Sheriff and warned not to go through Hazelton, they took another way; in a bend of the road before reaching Latimer they were met by Sheriff Martin again, this time with over a hundred armed deputies. It is claimed the Sheriff roughly grabbed the foremost man by the collar and with the other hand held a revolver on him, and used abusive language. The man tried to free himself, and the Sheriffs posse was ordered to fire and did so, with deadly effect, strewing the ground with 20 killed and 40 wounded. So far as we have been able to learn the miners were on the public highway; were unarmed, one small pistol found in the pocket of a man that was killed being the only fire arm mentioned as being in possession of the marching men.

It appears to us that some property owners or mine operators had got around Sheriff Martin and made him believe he must enforce the injunction of some Judge who had ordered that men should not march on the public highways, and he overdid the thing by haying his posse fire upon a crowd of unarmed men on the public highway. The Sheriff it is said, claims he did not order his men to fire.

The militia, under Gen. Gobin, is now in the field, and is preventing the arrest of Sheriff Martin and his deputies on warrants sworn out by leaders of the strikers. He says he is under orders of the Sheriff, and that military rule is not in vogue but that the military is subject to orders of civil authorities.

It is a bad state of affairs, that men must be shot down like dogs. We do not favor lynch law nor mob violence; neither do we approve of the destruction of life or property on account of dollars and cents. This country is big enough and has enough for its inhabitants to live on. If they don't wish to dig coal let them go at other work. If the coal owners can't afford to pay for digging coal, let people use other means of heating; but let mob violence and murder cease.

Opposition to Morris.

From the Minneapolis Times we clip: Opposition to Morris' renomination is cropping out every day, and it looks as if he will have a bitter fight on his hands in the nevt congressional convention, in which case it certainly would not be wise to nominate him, as a struggle for the nomination would prove his weakness as a candidate.—Brainerd Tribune (rep.)

Fatal Curiosity.

CITY OF MEXICO, Sept. 12.—Twenty-four persons, mainly spectators of the great blast at Panuelas quarry, were instantly killed yesterday. The blast went off and the people rushed forward to see the effects when gases in the air ignited causing an explosion. Two cavalaymen were on guard and were killed, with the horses. Many people were wounded.—Pioneer Press.

New Hampshire Senator Delighted Over Prospects of Bimetallism.

(In Duluth News Tribune.)

BOSTON, Sept. 12.—Senator William E. Chandler of New Hampshire has given the following letter to the Associated Press: "I appeal to all Republicans to meet with joyous welcome the first step England may take towards bimetallism.

The movement earnestly and zealously begun by President McKinley, in obedience to the St. Louis platform, was quickly joined by the French ministry and the joint proposals are carefully and seriously considered by the British cabinet, with a reasonable prospect that England will reopen her India mints, will use silver as part of her bank reserve and otherwise cordially aid in remonetizing silver. Every such indication should arouse friendly feelings in the United States four-fifths of whose people, as well as nine tenths of the people of India, desire the bimetallic system, which so much depends on English help.

This is no time for discriminating duties or denunciation demonstrations against any European country, nor should bankers alone, assume to voice American sentiment.

I entreat bimetallists everywhere to make themselves heard against the selfish outcries of the engorged money lenders of New York and Chicago and their subservient newspapers.

Chief Justice Start Talks Eorcibly as to Government By Injunction.

New York, Sept. 13.—(Special to The Herald.)—The World has a special dispatch from St. Paul this morning which says: "Charles M. Start, chief justice of the supreme court of Minnesota, expressed himselfas follows to the World correspondent regarding the enlarged scheme of government by injunction as exemplified in the case of the Pennsylvania strikers:

"I have never known of a case where the court has given such a broad interpretation to its powers in this particular as in this instance. If the facts are as stated, it seems to me that it has gone too far. This government by injunction is a comparatively modern institution in this country, although this power vested in the court is older than the constitution, coming down to us from the old English law. To me it seems to be a dangerous tendency and one which should be guarded most carefully. It is taking away from the citizens the right to trial by jury and is at any time liable to lead to tyranny; and judicial tyranny is the worst in the world, because there is no appeal from it.

"I cannot now recollet any case where the courts have gone to such a length in the use of the power of injunction as this. There is no parallel between the circumstances here and those of the Debs rebellion in Chicago. Debs and his followers were simply inciting riot and actually engaged in trespass and other unlawful acts. In this instance the court appears to have intervened to prevent miners assembling and marching in public ways. It looks as though the courts had been to anxious to further the interest of the corporations. In Pennsylvania, corporations exert a strong influence in the community, and it is not at all unlikely that that influence often extends to the bench and makes it possible for them to obtain from the courts what in other states or communities might be denied. This doubtless explains why such an unusual order was granted in this instance."—Duluth Herald.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. Sept. 10, 1897.

Firealarm Foraker and John Sherman conferring together reminds one of the saying about politics making strange bedfellows. Although these two men have not always been close friends, they are now in the same boat—both are compelled by circumstances to seem to desire the election of Boss Hanna to the Senate and to seem to be working towards that result, when neither of them want Hanna in the Senate. Boss Hanna would doubtless have been edified, if not pleased, if he could have heard the conversation of Foraker and Sherman at their long conference, in the Secretary's office at the State Department.

Consul Fitzhugh Lee is in Washington, but State Department officials declare that his visit has no official significance, and that he will return to Cuba about the first of October. That is more however, than Gen. Lee has said.

Senator Gorman was at the Treasury Department this week and called upon Secretary Gage for the first time. The newspaper men who tried to interview Mr. Gorman on politics met with the usual result—he interviewed them and found out what they knew, but didn't tell them what he knew. Whether Sen. Gorman intends to retire from public life at the expiration of his present term is a question that is still being discussed both by his friends and his enemies, but whatever may be his intentions about retiring, there is no doubt about his intention to regain Maryland for the democratic party, nor of his confidence in his ability to accomplish that result. His expansive smile when existing republican dissentions in the state are mentioned shows his satisfaction with the situation.

Rev. Sam. Small left Washington this week for Kentucky and Ohio. He will take an active part in the campaign in both States, making democratic speeches. He has few equals as an effective stump orator. He recently had a conference with Mr. Bryan, and he will probably tell the Kentucky and Ohio voters some of the things they talked about.

Officials of the Marine Hospital Service have taken steps which they believe will prevent the spread of the yellow fever, which is now at Ocean Springs, Miss., and a statement has been issued classing the yellow fever at that place as a mild form of the disease, which is proven by the small mortality so far-less than two percent-and by the fact that many of those attacked have only been slightly inconvenienced thereby for several days. There is no occasion for any yellow fever scare anywhere.

While it is generally known in Washington that Pensin Commissioner Evans has had several wrangles with the Civil Service Commission, because of his violations of the civil service law and rules, and that Secretary Bliss has made him feel his authority in a more or less humiliating way, upon seueral occasions, the rumor that he has become sufficiently disgruntled to contemplate resigning finds few believers. Mr. Evans says he doesn't intend to resign, but they always talk that way. Of the nineteen divisions in the Pension Bureau there is only one that has the same chief it had when Mr. Evans took charge of the office; the other eighteen have either been reduced or removed.

Senator Bacon, of Ga., was in Washington this week. He thus sized up the condition of the people of his state and section: "If you put a man in a wilderness he will ultimately get out of it some of the comforts of life, and so did our people. They are now making a little money; not much, but they are growing stronger and steadily improving. Not a bit of it is due to tariff legislation. Things had to get better, for nothing could get worse with them. They had no credit and were compelled to raise what they consumed. Out of this adversity they are emerging and will in due time become the people they were before they sank almost into the depths of despair. There has been some talk in the North about the increase in the price of cotton. There is no increase that we know of. Cotton still remains at the same low figure. If the increase in the price of our crops would correspond with the increase in the price of wheat, the cotton growers of the South would be delighted, but there is as yet no indication that there will be any great rise in the staple which the Southern country produces."

Among Our Exchanges.

St. Peter Journal: The object of of county and state fairs seem to be entirely lost. A fair was originally for the purpose of exhibiting the products of the county. The farmers have quit bringing in their exhibits, and a fair now means an individual money making affair and there is not one among us who will or can deny it.

Minneapolis Times: If Mr. Bryan has been so effectually demolished by "prosperity" and the rise in wheat, why do the Hanna organs rave and imagine vain things about him seven days in the week? If Mr. Bryan is a political corpse he is entitled to the quiet repose that respectable well behaved cadavers are usually permitted to enjoy.

St. Cloud Times: Down in Virginia schoolma'ams are becoming very particular, indeed, so much so that, unlike our Minnesota "ma'ams," they bid fair to become old maids. At a recent institute the Old Dominion girls "Resolved, that as a body of teachers we condemn the use of alcohol and tobacco by the teachers, and we also condemn the habit of those male teachers who sit in the schoolroom with their hair parted in the middle and their pants in their boot tops."

Little George Ottenstroer, who was bitten by a mad dog about a month ago and subsequently sent to the Pasteur Institute in Chicago for treatment, returned last Saturday entirely cured. The boy showed unmistakable signs of rabies in a few days after being bitten, and thanks to the township board for their prompt action and liberality in bearing the expense of treatment he was sent at once to Chicago, where the physician said the dog was surely rabid, and that the patient was received none too soon.—Maple Lake Messenger.

St. Peter Journal: Following the precedent set by Brown University, whose trustees hold that the president of a University, whose trustees hold that the president of a University should submit his views to the corporation for revision before publication, the state school book commission of Kansas is carefully eliminating errors in finance from the the text books and supplying their places by truth as seen by the Democrats. Hereafter it will be the proper thing for each state to revise its text books immediately after the fall elections.

Ida Grove Era, (Iowa): Several carriages filled with Ida Grove people went to Denison last Saturday to hear Bryan and Towne. Although Mr. Bryan's voice was in bad condition he spoke about two hours mainly on the silver question. He did not make the favorable impression that had been expected. The democrats are jubilant, however, in that they think the crowd was larger than that at the Shaw demonstration. They should not allow themselves to be carried away. They will find Mr. Shaw's friends and supporters legion on election day.

Litchfield Saturday Review: Hon. C. K. Davis is anxious to succeed himself as U. S. senator, and already the senator is organizing his forces for the fight—for fight it will be, as the people of the state don't have the confidence and respect for Mr. Davis that they did at the time of his last election when he did not have a vote to spare. It will require a well organized campaign and hard work on behalf of Mr. Davis and his friends to land the prize, as there is certain to be strong opposition that it will be a losing contest for Mr. Davis.

Superintendents Sustained.

Three of the four appeals from the action of county superintendents in refusing teachers certificates were sustained yesterday by the superintendent of public instruction. They are Catherine B. McCurdy, of St. Louis county, W. A. Fearon, of Benton county and Anna Knopke, of Wright county. In the case of Miss Etta G. McCurdy, of St. Louis county, who was an applicant for a second grade certificate, the action of the county superintendent was overruled and she will receive the certificate.—Pioneer Press.

From the Country.

Good morning, Mr. Editor, Good weather for mosquitoes and hunting up fish bait. The late rains have been hard on grain stacks and threshing. Some of the stacks have taken wet. They tell us wheat has gone up in price, all owing to a republican administration. Did a republican administration stop the growing of wheat in many of the foreign countries, and attempt to pauperise all of Europe in order to bring up the price of wheat in this country? A foreign demand is what has brought up the price of wheat. It is hoped there will be better times for the producer and the common laborer, let it come from a republican administration or any other man. But we hope some of the newspapers will give up the notion of trying to make the poor farmer believe the price of wheat has come up all on account of a republican administration.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill

In a recent lecture the German traveler, Prof. Pechuel-Loeschke, declared that the danger from attacks by wild animals in the African deserts and elsewhere was greatly exaggerated, and that the best weapon against attack was an umbrella, which would ward off any lion or tiger.

A band of 25 men and women in Boston have organized a club to abolish marriage, and point to Shelley, George Sand and others as their apostles. The sooner the club moves beyond the confines of civilization the better. If they see any beauty or special virtue in the lives of their apostles dependent upon their violations of the laws of God and man, others do not.

Of the two stamps first issued Washington's portrait was on the ten-cent and Franklin's on the other. Since that time the various issues of the United States stamps would furnish a unique portrait gallery, showing the faces of 48 noted Americans. Washington appears on 25 issues, while Lincoln's picture is on every issue since 1866, except the Columbian series.

The tune of "Yankee Doodle" was written by an English surgeon in an old Dutch house in Greenbush, N. Y., and intended to ridicule Americans. The old house was built of huge oak timbers and hand-made brick, brought from Holland, in 1630. It is still standing, but it is now proposed to raze it to the ground. There are few enough such relics of the revolutionary war, and it should be preserved.

Hypnotism has come in collision with the courts of California, where a judge refused to allow a hypnotist to testify that he had put an alleged murderer under his influence and that while in that condition the prisoner had denied that he had committed the crime. The court took this stand because it said that the law did not recognize hypnotism. Because of this denial an appeal was taken and the supreme court has upheld the position of the trial judge.

The fruit growers of California have begun to build canneries in order to provide against a great waste of fruit which takes place every year and which is a dead loss except where the surplus goes to feed hogs. This is a wise move and one which the horticulturists of other states might copy. Millions of fruit is wasted every year in many states by this carelessness, where a little capital judiciously invested would pay well for the men who furnished it.

Since the rush to Alaska began much has been said of a railroad in that direction to connect with the great Russian line across Siberia. The links to be filled in are larger than is usually supposed. Russia's great railway terminates on the east at Vladivostock, which is 2,700 miles from Behring strait. From the strait to the state of Washington is over 2,000 miles. Here is a stretch of 4,700 miles unprovided for and it is one of the most difficult regions in the world. The overland railway route to Europe may come in time, but the present generation should not count too confidently on seeing it.

It is gratifying to learn that Mrs. William Gerry Slade, of New York, has organized a society to be known as "The Daughters of 1781-1815." We have been worried for some time because there seemed to be a few years at the beginning of this century that could not boast of being the father of a single daughter, and naturally they were lonesome. On either side of them were years that had more sons and daughters than one would suppose they could support. Happily, thanks to Mrs. Slade, all this is at an end, and we doubt if there is now a childless year in the history of this country from 1492 to 1815.

In Geneva, Switzerland, the body of Capt. Henry Arkwright, buried under an avalanche October 13, 1866, has been recovered. It was found almost two miles below the place where the Englishman lost his life, and was, in the main, well preserved. It had been hurled by the avalanche into a crevasse of the glacier and had moved down the mountain side with that creeping giant of the Alps until it was restored at the melting edge of the ice. The feet and head are lost. They were doubtless ground away by the resistless crushing of the glacier in its movement. But the rest of the body is perfect.

STRIKERS SHOT DOWN.

A Score of Men Killed by a Posse of Deputy Sheriffs.

Disastrous Culmination of Strike in Hazleton (Pa.) District—Bullets Check Advance of a Band of Marchers.

Hazleton, Pa., Sept. 11.—The strike situation reached a terrible crisis on the outskirts of Latimer Friday afternoon, when a band of deputy sheriffs fired into an infuriated mob of miners. The men fell like so many sheep and the excitement since has been so intense that no accurate figures of the dead and wounded can be obtained. Reports run from 15 to 20-odd killed and 40 or more wounded. One man counted 13 corpses. Four other bodies lie in the mountains between Latimer and Harleigh. Those who were not injured carried their dead and wounded friends into the woods and estimate is baffled.

The Sheriff's Story.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Sept. 11. — Sheriff Martin arrived home from the seven o'clock train at Hazleton. He was met at the depot by his legal adviser. The two got into a cab and drove to the courthouse, where they were closeted together for some time. The sheriff was at first reluctant to say whether he had given the command to fire, but afterwards admitted that he had. The sheriff's detailed statement is as follows:

"I heard that the strikers were going to march to the breaker at Latimer and compel the men there to quit work. I resolved to intercept them and if possible prevent them from reaching the breaker. One of my deputies told me that the strikers would probably be heavily armed. I got my deputies, 70 in number, to meet at a certain place. They were all armed. I told them to keep cool under all circumstances. The trouble began at three o'clock. I met the marching column. I halted them and read the proclamation. They refused to pay any attention and started to resume their march. Then I called to the leader to stop. He ignored my order. I then attempted to arrest him. The strikers closed in on me. They acted very viciously, kicking me, knocking me down and trampling upon me. I called upon my deputies to aid me and they did so, but they were unable to accomplish much. I realized that something had to be done at once or I would be killed. I called to the deputies to discharge their firearms into the air over the heads of the strikers, as it might probably frighten them. It was done at once, but it had no effect whatever on the infuriated foreigners, who used me so much the rougher and became fiercer and fiercer, more like wild beasts than human beings. The strikers then made a still bolder move and endeavored to surround my entire force of deputies. I fully realized that the foreigners were a desperate lot and valued life at a very small figure. I also saw that parleying with such a gang of infuriated men was entirely out of the question, as they were too excited to listen to reason, and that myself and deputies would be killed if we were not rescued or if we did not defend ourselves.

Ordered to Shoot.

"I then called upon the deputies to defend themselves and shoot if they must to protect their lives or to protect the property that they had been sent to guard. The next second there were a few scattered shots fired into the foreigners and a moment later the entire force of deputies discharged a solid volley into the crowd. I hated to give the command to shoot and was awful sorry that I was compelled to do so, but I was there to do my duty, and I did it, as best I knew how and as my conscience dictated, as the strikers were violating the law of the commonwealth and flatly refused to obey the proclamation that I read to them. They insisted on doing violence and disobeying the laws.

A Terrible Scene.

"The scene after the shooting was simply terrible, and I would have willingly not had it occur, but as a public official I was there to see that the law was obeyed and lived up to, and I merely did my duty. Some of the foreigners fell over dead and others badly wounded, some rushing hither and thither seeking a place where they would be shielded from any more shots; others were aiding their wounded companions to a place of safety. The entire crowd of foreigners as soon as the volley had been fired by my deputies turned and started to retreat. They rushed off in all directions as fast as they could, taking as many of their dead and wounded with them as they were able to carry in their hurried retreat. The excitement at the time was simply terrible, and I would not go through another ordeal of the kind for a fortune."

Gives Another Version.

In another interview Mr. Martin was asked: "When you met the men were they on company property or on the public road?"

He replied: "No; they were on the public road."

"Were they marching toward Latimer's?"

"Yes."

"Had they up to that time committed any overt act or acted otherwise than peaceably?"

"No."

"Why, then, did you order the deputies to fire?"

"I did not order the deputies to fire: some one else did that. First came a single shot and then a volley. I gave no order."

"How many men were killed?"

"There were 12 dead when I left and about 40 wounded."

"Were any of your men hurt?"

"One of my deputies was shot through the arm."

Militiamen on Duty.

Hazleton, Pa., Sept. 13.—Nearly 4,000 members of the state militia are on duty in Hazleton and Lattimer, and their presence has prevented an outbreak on the part of either the strikers or the citizens, who alike vigorously denounce the killing of 21 miners and the wounding of more than 40 others by Sheriff Martin's posse at Lattimer on Friday.

Warrants Sworn Out.

Warrants have been sworn out against the sheriff and all his deputies who took part in the firing upon the strikers, the charge against them being murder. A citizens' committee has been appointed to raise money for their prosecution. The bitter feeling against the officers has been intensified by the knowledge that all except five of the dead and wounded men were shot in the back while running away from the deputies.

Walked Out of Jail.

Columbus, O., Sept. 14.—Rev. G. F. B. Howard has escaped from the Ohio penitentiary. He was a most famous United States prisoner from Tennessee. He was trusted in the front office and walked away. Howard was convicted at Clarksville, Tenn., and sentenced to nine years and fined $1,200 on 22 counts for using United States mails for fraudulent purposes. His specialty was swindling alleged heirs to fabulous fortunes in England. One of the chief witnesses against him was Robert Lincoln, ex-minister to England. Howard has many aliases, and has imposed upon some of the best-known families of the south, getting into the ministry, law and medicine. He is an Englishman, 45 years of age, and was convicted as Frederic George Burgoyne Howard.

Gen. Lee's Views.

Washington, Sept. 14. — Consul General Lee was at the state department Monday and held a long conference with Secretary Sherman and Assistant Secretary Day. Gen. Lee would not talk for publication concerning the situation in Cub, but he did say to a personal friend that in his opinion the insurgents would eventually win their independence without assistance from any outside sources.

THRIVING TOWNS WIPED OUT.

Tidal Wave Strikes Port Arthur and Sabine Pass, Tex.

Port Arthur, Tex., Sept. 14.—A tidal wave struck Port Arthur and Sabine Pass Tuesday morning and left a trail of dead and injured and destroyed property to mark its path. In this city seven are dead and half a dozen wounded. In Sabine Pass the fatalities are more numerous. Some estimate the list as high as 30, but there is no reliable information as to the actual number. The most definite information is that eight were killed and drowned there.

In Port Arthur many buildings were blown down, including the railroad roundhouse, where May Ainsworth was killed; the natatorium, the bank building, Town Site company's barns, Hotel Hayden, Strong & League's building shifted off foundations, Breman building, Colonade hotel, Spence & Lyons' building, C. J. Miller's grocery store, several barns, Kennedy's saloon, the Herald office, Alfred Wolf's saloon, the Hayes building and M. M. Zollinski's grovery. Several residences suffered severely, that of Dan A. Barraclaugh being carried across the street. Many outbuildings were completely blown away.

Riders and runners who came out to the relief train from the town reported 25 to 30 as being killed and many missing, that the new town of Sabin Pass, four miles below the old town and facing immediately upon the gulf, was totally destroyed and most of the old town, located upon the pass, was also destroyed, and the whole country was under water which was eight feet deep in Sabine Pass.

From early morning the sky was threatening and a stiff gale blew. No rain of consequence fell until four p. m., and then it was accompanied by a heavy wind that increased in intensity until it reached the enormous velocity of 80 miles an hour.

Advices from Winnie, Tex., say that nearly all the houses there have been blown down and torn away.

At Webb all of the barns and one house were demolished and scattered over the country.

All along the line of the Southern Pacific railroad the devastating effects of the terrific storm are visible. At Sour Lake on the Southern Pacific the roof of a passenger coach was blown off and James Singers, who left St. Louis on the Gulf & Interstate, which ran into the cyclone, says they expected every minute to be hurled into the ditch, such was the velocity of the wind.

In Webb station Former Governor of Iowa Wheeler's immense dairy barns were demolished, but no one was injured. These barns were valued at $10,000.

PROSECUTION WILL REST.

A Summing Up of the Testimony Against Luetgert.

Chicago, Sept. 13.—All the expert evidence for the state is now practically submitted in the Luetgert murder trial, on which the proof of the corpus delicti rests.

In summing up, this is what the state has shown:

Mrs. Louise Luetgert has disappeared.

Adolph L. Luetgert was up and around the factory most of the night on which she went away.

Live steam was turned that night into a vat in which 378 pounds of crude potash had been placed previously.

Luetgert did not evince any lively efforts to find his wife.

People in the neighborhood began to talk.

The police became suspicious and Luetgert then acted in a manner suspicious to the police.

Mrs. Luetgert's relatives began hinting at foul things.

The police searched the ashes from the factory furnace and found some corset steels.

Then the vat was searched and a wedding ring was found with the engraved letters "L. L."

Three little pieces of bone were also found in the vat, which have been pronounced human bones.

Three witnesses have sworn they saw Mrs. Luetgert enter the factory that night.

Traces of many kinds of acids and alkalis were found in the vat.

A piece of decayed flesh from some warm-blooded animal was found.

A blood-stained knife was shown, which Luetgert had given to Mrs. Feldt the day he was arrested.

SONS OF VETERANS.

Charles K. Darling, of Boston, Elected Commander-in-Chief.

Indianapolis, Ind., Sept. 13.—At the annual meeting here of the Sons of Veterans Omaha was chosen for the next national encampment and officers were elected as follows:

Commander in Chief—Charles K. Darling, of Boston.

Senior Vice Commander—George E. Cogshall, of Grand Rapids, Mich.

Junior Vice Commander—James W. Noel, of Indiana.

Counsel in Chief—Horace H. Hammer, of Reading, Pa.

Members of Council—C. Boren, of Kansas, and J. E. Haycraft, of Minnesota.

The new commander in chief appointed Fred Bolton, of Boston, adjutant general.

The Ladies' Aid society elected the following officers:

National President—Miss Kate G. Raynor, Toledo, O. (reelected.)

Vice President—Mrs. Ada Wallace, Indiana.

Chaplain—Mrs. Mary Hamsher, Decatur, Ill.

Treasurer—Mrs. Lydia E. Tomer, Rochester, N. Y.

Inspector—Mrs. Amelia Schuler, Louisville.

Mustering and Enlisting officer — Mrs. Sarah Lyon, Minneapolis.

A Fatal Blast.

City of Mexico, Sept. 13. —Twenty-four persons, mainly spectators of the great blast at Panuela's quarry, on the Vera Cruz railway, were instantly killed. The blast went off and the people rushed forward to see the effects when gases in the air ignited, causing a terrible explosion with awful results. Two cavalrymen were on guard and were killed with their horses. Many people were wounded. The quarry supplies rock for Vera Cruz harbor improvements.

Powers Are Agreed.

London, Sept. 14.—The morning papers contain dispatches from Constantinople asserting that all the ambassadors are now in receipt of instructions enabling them to come to a full agreement on the basis of Lord Salisbury's proposal for the constitution of an international commission representing the six powers to assume control of the revenues with which Greece will guarantee the payment of interest to the holders of old bonds, as well as payment of the indemnity loan.

Leaves a Fortune to Charity.

Quincy, Mass., Sept. 10.—The will of the late Charles T. Wilder, of Wellesley, has been admitted to probate here. It contained many public bequests, and over $100,000 is left to charitable and educational institutions.

COMPROMISE ACCEPTED.

Miners in Convention Agree to Operators' Proposition.

Columbus, O., Sept. 13. — The great miners' strike, which was declared on July 4, was brought to an end Saturday evening, so far at least as western Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana and West Virginia are concerned, by the action of the interstate convention of miners, which has been in session here since Wednesday.

After a day of voting and wrangling the convention adopted a resolution accepting the proposition of the Pittsburgh operators. The vote was 495 for and 317 against accepting the terms of settlement, 11 votes not being cast. The delegates from Illinois, who had 250 votes, were unanimous against a settlement. Indiana and West Virginia voted solidly to accept the operators' proposition, but there were scattering votes among the Ohio and Pittsburgh delegates against it. The resolutions adopted are as follows:

"Resolved, That we, the miners of Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Ohio, Indiana and Illinois, in convention assembled, do hereby agree to accept the proposition recommended by our national executive committee, viz., 65 cents in the Pittsburgh district, all places in above-named states where a relative price can be obtained to resume work and contribute liberally to the miners who do not receive the advance, where the fight must be continued to a bitter finish.

"Resolved, That the national officers, executive board and district presidents act as an advisory board for the purpose of providing ways and means for the carrying on of the strike where necessary, provided, however, that no district resume work for ten days, for the purpose of giving miners in other districts time to confer with their operators and get the price if possible."

While ten days is provided for the miners to resume work, it is probable many of the Ohio and Pittsburgh mines will be reopened at once. The convention adopted resolutions indorsing the action of the national executive board in recommending a settlement on the terms proposed.

The Illinois miners will be called in convention at Springfield September 15 to determine what shall be done in that state. Some of the Illinois delegates are very bitter in their denunciation of the action of the convention, since they claim their interests have not been given due consideration.

A resolution was adopted denouncing the action of the deputies in firing into the crowd of striking miners at Hazleton, Pa.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 14.— The miners at nearly all the mines along the Wheeling division of the B. & O. railway met Monday and decided to go to work on Wednesday despite the ten days clause adopted at Columbus. The Darr mine at West Newton and the Jumbo, on the Pan-Handle road, resumed Monday. A general resumption in the district is expected by Thursday.

AWFUL COLLISION.

Thirty Persons Killed and 185 Injured in Colorado.

New Castle, Col., Sept. 11.—The worst wreck in the history of the state of Colorado occurred at 12:25 Friday morning on the track of the Denver & Rio Grande and the Colorado Midland railway, 1½ miles west of here. After 12 hours incessant work by the wrecking crews in clearing away the debris and rescuing the bodies of those who perished, it is yet impossible to secure more than an estimate of the loss of life, and not even those known to be dead have been identified. Fully 30 persons are believed to have perished, while 185 are taken out of the wreck suffering from serious injuries.

The wreck was caused by a head-end collision between a Denver & Rio Grande passenger train running at the rate of 40 miles an hour and a special Colorado Midland stock train running at a speed of probably 30 miles. So terrific was the concussion that both engines, baggage and express cars, smoker and day coaches and two stock cars were totally demolished and the track torn up for rods in both directions. To add to the horror of the scene, the wreck caught fire from an explosion of a gas tank on the passenger train, and burned so rapidly that many passengers pinned beneath the debris were burned to death before help could reach them.

The most generally accepted theory as to the cause of the wreck seems to be that Conductor Burbank, of the Midland special, anticipating the time of the passenger, undertook to "steal a station" and beat the passenger into New Castle. Burbank escaped uninjured, and upon orders from Coroner Clark has been placed under arrest by the sheriff.

New Castle, Col., Sept. 13. — Frank Burbank, conductor, and Engineer Ostrander, deceased, of the Colorado Midland railway, are charged by the coroner's jury with being responsible for the frightful wreck which occurred here last week. At the inquest the jury decided from the evidence that the conductor and engineer attempted to arrive at New Castle siding upon the time allotted by order of the train dispatcher to the Rio Grande passenger train west-bound.

Richest Find Yet.

Seattle, Wash., Sept. 14. — Sulphur creek, a branch of Dominion creek, which is a tributary of the Indian river, is the scene of the latest gold excitement in the Klondike. From accounts of the new district brought down on the schooner Southcoast it seems that the new diggings will rival even the famous Bonanza and Eldorado. Gold was found just below the surface running $34 to the pan. Two men took out $300 in a day by simply prospecting their claims. A stampede followed the reports of the new finds, which reached Dawson City August 15. In a week 500 had crossed the mountains between Eldorado creek and Dominion creek. They traveled day and night, and in two weeks the whole stream was staked out. This information, the first authentic story of Sulphur creek, was given Monday by John E. Light, of Chicago, Ill. He left Dawson on the steamer Bella August 18. He owns a claim on Sulphur creek.

An Insurgent Victory.

Madrid, Sept. 11.—The minister of war has cabled Capt. Gen. Weyler asking for an explanation regarding the capture by the insurgents of Victoria de Las Tunas, province of Santiago de Cuba, which is defended by seven forts, having two Krupp guns among their armament. It is stated here that the intention of the insurgents is to establish their government there and to obtain the recognition of their belligerency by the United States. A Spanish expedition will be organized to recapture Victoria de Las Tunas.

CURING HICCOUGHS.

More Remedies Than One Suggested in the Story.

"Why don't you stop that hiccoughing?" said one business man to another as they met at the corner of Fourth and Vine streets at the noon hour. The man addressed was all but in convulsions.

"Stop nothing!" said he. "I've been trying every old remedy I ever heard of and every new one that every fool friend was kind enough to suggest. I've held my arms over my head for 15 minutes and extended them like a sign board until they ached. I held my breath until I was all but ready to drop from apoplexy. I've drunk nine swallows of water nine times over, I guess, and two or three chumps have tried to scare me, and did it, too, but to no good. Then another enthusiastic amateur physician hit me in the middle of the back when I wasn't looking and escaped before I could land on him. I would not have done a thing to him if I had caught him. But the hiccoughs are here, and to stay, I fear."

"Set 'em up if I cure you?"

"Will I? I'll set 'em up for a month and throw in a big cold 'bot' besides if you cure 'em."

Then they adjourned to a moistening establishment, and the good Samaritan said to Dan: "Dan, give this gentleman a lump of white sugar."

He took it and dissolved it in his mouth, and the hiccoughs went as if by magic, probably because their stay was over anyhow, and not on account of the remedy, but it cost the cold bottle just the same and some drinks besides. Still, he thinks he got out of it cheap enough.—Cincinnati Tribune.

TO MY WATCH.

Little watch, fast ticking out
All the hours of pain and doubt,
All the tumult, toil and strife
Making up our span of life;
All the heart-wrung sighs, and tears
Falling faster with the years,
As the petals drop and fade
From the bloom life's summer made.
Ah! what thoughts each other chase
As I look upon your face!

Every tick your motions give
One tick less have I to live.
Did I realize this thought,
With such solemn meaning fraught,
When some new-born joy drew nigh
In the happy days gone by?
And your slight hands all too slow
Round about your face did go?
Ah! those tardy hours have passed.
Would they were not now so fast!

Never stopping in your flight,
Never pausing day or night;
Not a moment's rest you crave
From the cradle to the grave.
With a never-ceasing motion,
Steadfast as the tides of ocean;
Seeming evermore to hurry,
Yet without a moment's flurry;
Till our worn hearts almost pray
That you would a moment stay.
All things rest—the clouds at noon,
And the leaves in nights of June;
And the grief-bewildered brain
When sleep falls like softest rain;
And the stars when day awakes,
And the day when Hesper shakes
Gleams of gold from out the skies
Into wandering lovers' eyes.
You alone speed on your way,
Never resting night or day.

Yet what joys those hands have brought!
Golden days with rapture fraught;
Golden days by sunlit fountain;
Golden days on breezy mountain;
Days made more divine by love
Than by radiance from above.
Ah! those hands that to the sense
Bring such joys and bear them hence;
Could we know what Time conceals
'Neath those little ticking wheels!

Yet when those slight hands shall mark
That last hour when all grows dark;
And shall still keep ticking on
When earth's light from me is gone,
Little watch, your face shall be
Still a memory sweet to me,
Though diviner light may shine
On these opened eyes of mine.
For your hands that never cease
Bring at last the perfect peace.

AN INTELLIGENT DOG.

[Copyright, 1897.]

"THEODORE" is his name and he is one of the most highly-honored inmates of a certain farmhouse in one of the central counties of New York state. Though he is only 16 he is accounted very old; he is almost blind, more than half deaf, his teeth are falling out, and his once glossy black hair is now plentifully sprinkled with gray. "Theodore" is a dog, the companion of his master's boyhood days and his most cherished pet in the present period of canine senility. All through his relatively long life "Theodore" has shown intelligence and fidelity far exceeding the average among dogs, and once he did his master a service of exceptional importance—a service that will insure the poor old brute the tenderest care to the day of his death, if he should live to be 100. Here is the story:

"It was when I was a very little boy and Theodore was little more than a pup. He was given to me as soon almost as he got his eyes open; we were friends from the very first, and as soon as the dog was old enough to keep up with me we were together constantly from sunrise till sunset.

"Before Theodore was six months old he showed unusual intelligence. I thought then, and I think now, that Theodore understood the English language much better than some of the two-legged creatures who speak it. So firmly was this borne in on my childish mind that I used to devote a good deal of time trying to teach the poor creature to speak. You may laugh if you want to, but I believe that dog knew I was trying to teach him to speak. He used to look up into my eyes with the most wistful expression imaginable on his poor old black face, and his futile whinings and barkings sometimes went to my very heart. But after awhile I became satisfied that my efforts were vain and for this reason, quite as much as because of the jeers and gibes to which they subjected me, I left off trying.

"It was when Theodore was six or seven years old—quite an old dog in fact—and I was about ten, that, being very busy with his farm work, my father sent me to the village one day with $100 in a pocketbook with which to pay off a note that was in the hands of the local banker. My father made the mistake of not telling me what was in the pocketbook, saying only that when I got to the village I was to go straight to the bank and give up the pocketbook, taking great care to bring back the paper which the banker would give to me in return. Of course I should have understood, young as I was, that the pocketbook was valuable, and I should also have obeyed my father's instructions to go as directly as possible and to hurry back.

"I did neither of these things. Of course I took Theodore along with me, and being a very small boy, of course I loitered along at my leisure, and when Theodore and I got about half way to the village we turned aside from the road into the thick growth of the swampy woods. For hours we played in the shade of the water ashes and the willows, jumping from bog to bog in the more swampy parts and chasing butterflies in occasional glades. Finally, when the sun was half way down the western sky, I remembered my errand and we continued on our way to the village.

"I reached the little bank just before the hour for closing, and marching up to the little window put my hand into my pocket to take out the wallet. But it wasn't there, and I had to explain to the banker that I had lost it in the swamp. I have passed through many greater crises since then, but I am sure I never felt more completely cast down than I did when I heard from the lips of the banker that the lost book had contained the incomprehensible sum of $100. I was literally overwhelmed with grief, and I readily agreed to the banker's impassioned declarations regarding my utter personal worthlessness.

"Of course I retraced my steps through the swampy woods as carefully as I could in search of the missing book. Of course I couldn't find it. I was so excited and sorrowful, in fact, that I could hardly see, and when night came on I had to give it up. I will pass over the details of the interview that took place between my father and me. A stout leathern strap and its application were among the chief features thereof, and I was so absorbed in my own grief and pain that I failed to notice that Theodore had not returned with me.

"It was some time after I awoke the next morning, that I remenmbered the frightful thing that had befallen me. Indeed, it did not present itself to my mind until I had dressed and started to go downstairs. Then I found the door of my room locked, and it came back to me. I remembered then that my father had declared I must remain a prisoner for a week to pay for my carelessness. When my mother came to bring her boy a breakfast I asked for Theodore. I told her I knew I wasn't fit to go out among folks who went about what they had to do with care and promptness, and so had no fault to find with my punishment, though it was hard to bear. If I could only have my dog with me I thought I could get along.

"But Theodore was nowhere to be found, and he did not appear till near sundown. When he did come to light he looked as if he had been through all the swamps in the world. He was disheveled and covered with mud, his eyes were bloodshot, and he looked gaunt and worn and hungry. He refused all efforts to stop him on the ground floor, insisting on rushing upstairs to my room at once; and, tightly clutched between his teeth, was the missing pocketbook with the $100 intact within its cover."

VENETIAN PROVERBS.

Old Sayings Concerning Features and Character.

Dr. Balladoro, of Verona, has published about 100 Venetian proverbs, containing suggestions as to the character, inclinations, and passions of the people. These proverbs show that tall persons are considered to have little intelligence; short persons are malicious, tall women are vicious, and short women contemptuous. Men ought to choose small wives, because little women are more graceful, and keep young for a longer time; fat men are considered to be peaceful and good humored. Sicilian traditions held a large head to be a sign of wisdom, but the Venetian proverb considers it a sign of ignorance. A crooked neck is a sign of bad temper. A pallid complexion is abhorred. Beardless men are stupid, bearded women are very clever and wicked. A red beard is a sign of maliciousness, as is also red hair in a woman. Long hair in a woman is a sign of silliness. Bald people are intelligent, but inclined to evil ways. People with small eyes, and especially people who squint, must be avoided. A large nose is a sign of a resolute, imperative character; a turned-up nose is a sign of criminal tendencies, and equally so a very pointed nose. Thin lips indicate irascibility, thick lips sensuality. A child teething late is likely to have a long life. Intelligent people have small hands. Large hands are a sign of coldness of heart. People who have a voice not suited to their sex must be regarded with diffidence. Ugly, bad parents generally have good and handsome children, and vice versa. A final proverb asserts that all people are somewhat mad, and another that inherited lunacy is incurable. Such is the wisdom to be found in Venetian proverbs.—London News.

He Wasn't Sure.

While a Scottish regiment was on the march in India from one station to another the doctor, as is usual at certain camps on the line of march, paraded the men for inspection, and, on going his rounds, made one man a prisoner for having dirt-begrimed knees. The next morning the officer ordered him to headquarters, and asked him the reason why he didn't wash his knees. "Weel, sir," replied Scottie, "there was a dizzen or mair o' us in a'e bine, an' I ken this much that I washed a pair o' knees, but whether they were mine or no I canna swear."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

An Awful Death.

Mattie Dunn, of Minneapolis, aged 6 years, died from the effects of eating the whole of a raw pumpkin. Mattie and a playmate had secured a couple of pumpkins which they proposed to fashion into jack o'lanterns. When they commenced to hollow out the gourds the playmate was seized with a peculiarly child-like idea.

"I'll bet you five cents, Mattie," said he, "that you can't eat your pumpkin all up."

Mattie was not to be stumped, and immediately began to masticate the pumpkin, swallowing all of the pulpy substance, while the other boy sat by and watched him.

He was taken dangerously ill soon afterward and died within 24 hours. He was a bright little boy and full of health.

Hunting in His Sleep.

Seth, the 16-year-old son of A. M. Marshall, of Duluth, was the victim of a very peculiar shooting accident near Barker. With Charles McClure, of Saginaw, and Harry Larmer, of Philadelphia, he had been hunting in Carlton county. Early one morning, Larmer, either in his sleep or while just awakening, discharged a revolver. He procured it in his sleep, and was not conscious of what he had done until the shot aroused him. The bullet struck Marshall, entering his face on the under side of the left jaw and coming out of the cheek.

Grain Business.

For the crop year ending Aug. 31, Minneapolis made an excellent record, receiving 64,805,740 bushels of wheat and grinding in her mills 13,500,000 barrels of flour, the equivalent of nearly 60,000,000 bushels of wheat actually ground in the Minneapolis mills. The business in coarse grains reached 23,000,000 bushels, as against 9,500,000 the previous year, the increase being due in large part to a partial adjustment of rates in lieu of previous discrimination against that market. Duluth ground less flour than for several years.

Several Are Paroled.

The meeting of the board of prison managers was confined largely to listening to applications for parole. Seven male and one female prisoner were paroled and will be liberated from prison as soon as employment can be found for them. The report of Clerk Bixby shows that the miscellaneous cash receipts of the prison for last month amounted to $6,741.02. Of this amount $3,284.96 was received from the Union Shoe and Leather company for convict labor.

Worked the Ladies.

A woman who gave her name as Alta Putt has worked a smooth confidence game in Winona. She was agent for Thompson & Hood, Chicago publishers, for various books. She told a number of young ladies that if they desired she could procure them positions at $12 a week, expenses paid, to travel and appoint sub-agents in the various portions of the state. They accepted, and paid her a fee, averaging from $5 to $10. Upon securing the money, the woman disappeared.

Wants a Vacation.

John L. Meagher, postmaster of Marysburg, Le Sueur county, is afraid that President McKinley will not remove him from office and thinks that he has earned a rest. Mr. Meagher is one of the oldest postmasters in the country, as well in age as in continuous service. He was appointed during President Buchanan's administration, in October, 1858, and next month he will have been postmaster for thirty-nine years.

Postponed.

The signing of the contract for the building of the superstructure of the state capitol has been held up pending an opinion of the legality of the contract, in view of the law passed two years ago providing that Minnesota stone shall be used in all cases where it can be done without material increase in the cost of the structure.

The national convention of the Polish union of America was held at St. Paul, with delegates from all parts of the country.

Peter Ideland, a farmer living four miles west of Cottonwood, while attempting to get on a threshing engine, missed his step and was run over and instantly killed. He leaves a wife and two children in poor circumstances.

THE BICYCLE WAS SULKY.

That Was the Excuse of a Beginner for Her Slow Progress in Riding.

The lady disentangled herself from the wheel and looked at it mournfully, reprachfully, despairingly. The patient instructor stood meekly by, holding the machine, awaiting her pleasure.

"What can be the matter?" the lady asked.

"It's certainly mighty curious," the instructor replied, shaking his head.

"I'm sure I don't ride half so well as I did at the last lesson," proceeded the lady.

"That's so," admitted the candid instructor.

"Nor quarter so well as at the one before that."

"No, m'm."

"At my second lesson I rode half way across the room without your holding the wheel."

"You surely did."

"And at the fourth lesson I almost made a mount by myself."

"I seen you do it," and the instructor tapped his fingers on the saddle by way of emphasis.

"And now," pursued the lady, in an indignant tone, "I can't ride two feet without falling off."

The instructor lifted the bicycle up so that it rested on the front wheel and kicked the pedal around, but said nothing.

"What can be the reason?" persisted the lady.

The instructor felt the tire of the rear wheel, but remained silent.

"Do you suppose it could be the fault of the wheel?" asked the lady.

"Hay?" exclaimed the instructor, his surprise overcoming his politeness.

"I don't mean it that way," the lady said, hastily, with a blush. "Of course, it's really my fault, in a way, because I, and not the wheel, am learning to ride. But don't you think that the wheel may be misbehaving and that that may have something to do with it?"

"Do you mean that it's out of order?" asked the instructor, beginning to poke around among the joints and sprockets.

"No," said the lady; "only just sulking."

"I never heard of a bicycle sulking," replied the instructor, unsympathetically.

"Didn't you?" returned the lady, with growing enthusiasm. "Well, then, perhaps I've discovered something new. You know that a sewing machine gets sulky sometimes? No? Oh, of course not, if you've never used one. Well, it does. Sometimes it simply won't work right. Perhaps the weather affects it. Then it will take a jump and run along beautifully for days and days. It is simply mischief. Now the first day I rode this bicycle I got along beautifully on it, and wasn't a bit afraid, and the second lesson was the same. Then it began to be sulky, and I began to be afraid of it, and I've been getting more afraid of it ever since. Now, how do you account for that, if it isn't the fault of the bicycle in getting sulky and frightening me?"

"You got frightened because you tumbled off," said the instructor, in a matter-of-fact way.

"Yes," said the lady, "and why did I tumble off? Because the bicycle was sulky and began playing tricks on me. Otherwise I ought to be making progress instead of falling back, as I am doing. So, don't you see, that it really is the bicycle's fault and not mine that I am doing so badly?"

"Well, perhaps so," said the instructor, resignedly.

"The wheel has had a rest," said the lady. "Perhaps it will be feeling better now. I will try it again. But keep a good hold of it."

And then she made another attempt to master the art of riding alone.—N. Y. Sun.

THE HAUGHTY DAME.

How a Young Man Got Even with Her for Rudeness.

She was a tall woman and somewhat angular. Her clothes were in the extreme of fashion and her big summer hat was alive with nodding flowers. There were traces about her of former beauty, but most of them were only dimly reminiscent. She walked the streets as if she held the deeds of them in her white-gloved hand, and people looked after her in profound wonder. When she reached Pittsburgh station at Euclid avenue she failed to notice the ting-ting-ting of the bell which warningly heralds the closing of the safety gates, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer. She stalked steadily forward and the bar which falls across the sidewalk was descending directly above her devoted head. A half dozen people called to her. A policeman shouted. She never turned her nodding headgear. Then, just as the descending timber touched her hat a man sprang forward, caught her by the arm and pulled her aside, the heavy bar grazing her as it descended.

"Sir," she cried, "what do you mean by this rudeness?"

"I beg your pardon, ma'am," said the stranger, "I simply endeavored to save you from a cracked skull."

"You should be punished for your roughness," said the haughty dame. "I ought to hand you over to this officer."

The policeman bowed deferentially.

"You will excuse me, too, ma'am," he said, "but the young man used no more roughness than was necessary to save you from a bad thump on the head."

"I will report you for impudence," said the tall dame, with a withering look at the policeman. Then she turned again to the young man. "Let this be a lesson to you," she said, "and never repeat the offense."

The young man lifted his hat.

"Madam," he said, "I trust that nothing will make me forgetful of the duty I owe to the aged."

Then the haughty lady turned away hastily and swept along.—St. Louis Republic.

Baked Tomatoes.

Choose six large smooth tomatoes. Cut a slice off the stem end, and carefully scoop out the seeds. Mix half a cupful of finely-chopped, cold boiled ham, two tablespoonfuls of stale bread crumbs, a tablespoonful of chopped parsley, half a teaspoonful of salt, and a dash of cayenne, with a tablespoonful of melted butter. Fill the tomatoes with the mixture, heaping it in the center; sprinkle over the tops with bread crumbs; put the tomatoes in a granite baking pan, baste with melted butter, and bake in a hot oven over 30 minutes. When done take up and serve hot.—Housekeeper.

A MOTHER'S EFFORT.

A Mother Sees Her Daughter in a Pitiful Condition, But Manages to Rescue Her.

From the New Era, Greensburg, Ind.

The St. Paul correspondent for the New Era recently had an item regarding the case of Mabel Stevens, who had just recovered from a serious illness of rheumatism and nervous trouble, and was able to be out for the first time in three months. The letter stated that it was a very bad case and her recovery was such a surprise to the neighbors that it created considerable gossip.

Being anxious to learn the absolute facts in the case, a special reporter was sent to have a talk with the girl and her parents. They were not at home, however, being some distance away. A message was sent to Mr. Stevens, asking him to write up a full history of the case, and a few days ago the following letter was received from Mrs. Stevens:

" ST. PAUL, IND., Jan. 20, 1897.

"Editors New Era, Greensburg, Ind.

"DEAR SIRS: Your kind letter received and I am glad to have the opportunity to tell you about the sickness and recovery of Mabel. We don't want any newspaper notoriety, but in a case like this where a few words of what I have to say may mean recovery for some child, I feel it my duty to tell you of her case.

"Two years ago this winter Mabel began complaining of pains in her limbs, principally in her lower limbs. She was going to school, and had to walk about three quarters of a mile each day, going through all kinds of weather. She was thirteen years old and doing so well in her studies that I disliked to take her from school, but we had to do it.

"For several months she was confined to the house, and she grew pale and dwindled down to almost nothing. Her legs and arms were drawn up and her appearance was pitiful. Several doctors had attended her, but it seemed that none of them did her any good. They advised us to take her to the springs, but times were so hard we could not afford it, although we finally managed to get her to the Martinsville baths. Here she grew suddenly weaker, and it seemed that she could not stand it, but she became better, and it seemed that she was being benefited, but she suddenly grew worse, and we had to bring her home.

"She lingered along, and last winter became worse again, and was afflicted with a nervous trouble almost like the St. Vitus' dance. For some time we thought she would die, and the physicians gave her up. When she was at her worst a neighbor came in with a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and wanted us to try them as they were advertised to be good for such cases, and her daughter had used them for nervousness with such good results that she thought they might help Mabel.

"We tried them. The first box helped her some, and after she had taken three boxes she was able to sit up in bed. When she had finished a half dozen boxes she was able to be out and about. She has taken about nine boxes altogether now, and she is as well as ever, and going to school every day, having started in again three weeks ago. Her cure was undoubtedly due to these pills."

(Signed) MRS. AMANDA STEVENS."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are an unfailing specific for such diseases as locomotor ataxia, partial paralysis, St. Vitus' dance, sciatica, neuralgia, rheumatism, nervous headache, the after effect of la grippe, palpitation of the heart, pale and sallow complexions, all forms of weakness in either male or female. The pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50—(they are never sold in bulk or by the 100) by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

HAD NO NEED TO WORRY.

Chloride of Iron Had No Terror to Old Auntie Johnson.

He is a young physician, who has been in practice but two years. He lives in a town in central Illinois, where practice is fairly good, and has his share of patients. One of these happens to be an elderly colored woman whose name is Johnson. She is long past the time when she should work, for white wool has taken the place of the southdown covering nature originally endowed her with. Her husband and herself were slaves before the war. Now it happened that "Auntie" Johnson acquired an acute case of tonsilitis. So she sent old man Johnson out to get a doctor.

Johnson performed his mission by bringing the young doctor back with him. The doctor has had experience with colored people and was prepared for almost anything that might happen. He made the proper examination and finding the glands badly swollen, decided to use the tincture of chloride of iron with potassium as a gargle. He made the mixture on the spot and then handed the bottle to the old woman remarking:

"Now, auntie, you must be careful with this."

"Huh—speck yo' all done give me pizen," interjected the negress, as she eyed the liquid suspiciously.

"Never you mind about that," said the doctor. "You mind what I tell you and it will be all right. Now, I want you to wash your throat with this and be careful after using it to rinse your mouth out well. If you don't it will spoil your teeth."

The old woman tossed her head back and broke out into the most uproarious laughter. Her huge frame shook and twisted with her mirth. She was convulsed with mirth. Her husband stood on one foot and the other, watching his spouse with increasing anxiety. Then he took a birdlike squint at the doctor and finally blurted out:

"Foh Gawd, doctah, she ain't laffin' at yo' all. She only got one toof left."

The instructions were not insisted upon. —Chicago Chronicle.

A Partner in Crime.

"Parson," said the dying man, "do you believe in a deathbed confession?"

"Under certain circumstances," said the reverend gentleman.

"Well, it is this way. Years ago I was a passenger on the Great Consolidated Street railway."

"Yes, go on."

"Oh, I hate to tell it."

"Go on."

"And one day in a moment of vicious insanity, I beat them out of a nickel fare!"

He sank back exhausted.

"Listen," said the reverend man, "it may comfort you. Can you hear me?"

"Yes, yes."

"You needn't feel so worried about beating that gang of robbers out of a paltry nickel—I beat 'em every chance I get!"

And the dying man passed away with a peaceful smile.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Real Rest and Comfort.

There is a powder to be shaken into the shoes called Allen's Foot-Ease, invented by Allen S. Olmsted, LeRoy, N. Y., which druggists and shoe dealers say is the best thing they have ever sold to cure swollen, burning and tender or aching feet. Some dealers claim that it makes tight or new shoes feel easy. It certainly will cure corns and bunions and relieve instantly sweating, hot or smarting feet. It costs only a quarter, and the inventor will send a sample free to any address.

ENGLISH AS SHE IS SPOKEN.

One Way to Spell Tomatoes, Five to Pronounce It.

One word in its time has many pronunciations. For instance: Mrs. Housekeep the other day was doing her morning's marketing. With her had come the stranger who was spending a week or two within her gates. Standing by while she snapped the beans between her fingers to see that they were tender, parted the husks to make sure that the corn was ripe, pulled the pears out of their paper wrappings and conducted herself generally after the manner of a careful housewife, was the clerk, order book in hand, and obsequiousness on his brow. The visitor began it with:

"These tomaytoes look nice. Get some—there's a dear!"

To which Mrs. Housekeep replied: "Why, certainly, if you like them!" Then to the clerk: "How much are tomahtoes this morning?"

"I'm not sure; I'll ask. Jim," calling to a fellow clerk, "how much is them termaiters?"

"I'll ask the boss. Say," passing the word further back, "watcher gettin for tomattoes to-day?"

"T'mats? O, two baskets for a quarter, I guess."

Therefore, to please her guest who loved "tomaytoes," Mrs. Housekeep invested in some "tomahtoes" and Jim, who was investigating the price of "tomattoes" for the benefit of a fellow clerk who wanted to know how to sell "termaiters," was enlightened as to what he should charge for "t'mats." And the bystander was left marveling at the infinite variety of "English as she is spoke."—Chicago Chronicle.

"Swift Water Bill's" Bride.

Miss Gussie Lamore, formerly of Juneau, has made the most desirable marriage, from a pecuniary point of view. It is a fact that "Swift Water Bill" was so smitten with her charms that he called on Miss Lamore the day of her arrival. He wooed her with $50,000 of gold dust in a coal-oil can, and the next day she became "Mrs. Swift Water Bill." The man, whose real name is not known to any of the McKay party, came up the Klondike early in the rush. He did not have a dollar or enough grub for a square meal when he arrived. He located one of the richest claims, and is now a millionaire and a bridegroom. His claim is 13 Eldorado. —Alaska Cor. Chicago Chronicle.

Gross Outrages

Upon the stomach and bowels are perpetrated by multitudes of injudicious people who, upon experiencing the annoyance of constipation in a slight degree, infiltrate their bowels with drenching evacuants, which enfeeble the intestinal membrane to a serious extent, sometimes, even, superinducing dysentery or piles. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the true succedaneum for these nostrums, since it is at once invigorating, gentle and effectual. It also banishes dyspepsia, malarial complaints, rheumatism and kidney troubles.

MRS. KRINER'S LETTER

About Change of Life.

"I suffered for eight years and could find no permanent relief until one year ago. My trouble was Change of Life. I tried Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and relief came almost immediately. I have taken two bottles of the Vegetable Compound, three boxes of Pills and have also used the Sanative Wash, and must say, I have never had anything help so much, I have better health than I ever had in my life. I feel like a new person, perfectly strong. I give the Compound all the credit. I have recommended it to several of my friends who are using it with like results. It has cured me of several female diseases. I would not do without Mrs. Pinkham's remedies for anything. There is no need of so much female suffering. Her remedies are a sure cure."—MRS. —The second crop of mosquitoes is here. It is quite a large one, and its bite is as severe as was that of the first crop.

—Street Commissioner Martin put in some crossings near Schaffers store, and a bridge and crossing over to Marr's store this week.

—M. J. Stone, the blacksmith, is carpentering and preparing to move his family into the Brothers house near Lyle's Ford, this week.

—The time for evening services at the M. E. Church has been changed. Epworth League will begin at 6:45; preaching at 7:30. Everybody invited.

—Some of the telephone poles unloaded here were hauled out of town yesterday, prepatory to setting them in the ground for the new line from the cities West.

--Finishing touches are being put on to Schaffers rooms above his store. J. M. Borril and crew are doing the decorating. The rooms are fine and will be ready for occupancy soon.

—Andrew Hanseman has again got back to his old business, and his smiling countenance beams over George P. Schaffers new counters while Frankie is away posting up on book-keeping, etc.

—Bicycles are growing less fashionable with each rain we get. If wet weather keeps on, wheels can be had cheap. Horses, especially saddle horses, are growing in favor, and with greater demand prices are raising.

—The September Fair Day was a big one for Delano. Merchants claim to have had a larger trade than for several weeks. People come from a long distance to Delano Fairs, and bring along their wives who patronize our merchants.

—Mrs. S. Gunn received a letter from Mrs. E. C. Austin (nee Dugan) of Amedee, Cal. She writes that her husband is doing business there and in Lakeview, Oregon. But she likes Amedee best, and thinks it a fine place so they are living there.

—A few young men, but old drunkards, are to be seen toting their pail of beer into some vacant building or barn, and filling up until they are foolish, nearly every day. People who are in business must want dimes awfully bad to sell beer to boys of this character and help them on their journey downward.

—Fourth street crossing should be put in. Delano is big enough to have another street across the R. R. track. Frequently both 2nd and 3rd street crossings are blocked with cars, and people have to wait when they could use 4th street if it was open. And teams coming in or going out with loads would find 4th street a more level road when it is properly graded.

--Charley Brandes has been faithfully sticking to a job of putting in a drive well for Alex Hayes, north of Montrose, for some weeks.

LATER,—Charley reported yesterday that he had finally succeeded, after working about 25 days, and making three different efforts, in getting the finest well in the country, 225 feet deep with water within 6 feet of the top. He says Alexander is awfully proud of his new well.

—Profanity and rude and boisterous language on the streets was complained of this week. Some men, having small children of their own, are so habitually profane that they don't realize it until their own little boy or girl says some vulgar word or utters some shocking oath in their presence, when their attention is called to the fact that it sounds terribly bad in the child; perhaps they gave the little one a thrashing for it, never stopping to think where he learned such language.

—There is a great tendency to go to the city for everything needed, by some people. This is wrong generally. Delano has, perhaps, as eloquent preachers, as able attorneys, as skillful physicians, as honest merchants, as reliable workmen in most trades and businesses as has any town of its size. These men live here; what they have is here; their interests are with Delano and they deserve the patronage of the people in and about this place. One trouble is with the fellow craftsmen and professional brethren themselves; in their overzealousness to get more than their share of the work or business they denounce those who are working at the same business they are; one tells how poor a workman, or how unskillful his professional brother is, and his fellow in business tells similar stories on him, until people, hearing nothing but denunciation, are led to believe that Delano has nothing but shysters, quacks, and humbugs in all kinds of business. This is wrong; and is not the truth. If those engaged in gaining a livelihood in this town would only tell the truth about others in the same line of work, instead of denouncing them it would have a tendency to make people know the truth, that they can get as good at home as in the cities, in most lines, and would benefit all. Try it for a season. It will do much towards bringing to our citizens prosperous times.

—New England supper at the Hall in Montrose next Tuesday night.

--Sam Murphy has sold his dray outfit to McRoberts, of Winstead.

--4th quarterly conference Thursday at the Delano M. E. church at 2 P. M.

—Corn is being cut and sorghum hauled to mill. Both are good crops.

—The 10ct show given Saturday and Monday evenings in the City Hall, were very slimly attended. Delano keeps up its reputation of not a good show town.

--The Delano Furniture Co. got a consignment of new goods yesterday. They are bound to keep up with the times. And Joy reigns supreme in their establishment.

—Louis Brandser is the boss squirrel hunter. He shot two on one tree a few days ago, and tore an old rotten log to pieces to get one of them that fell and hid in the log.

—Brenner and Strauch have seven acres of fine broom corn which they are gathering, for use in their factory and yet they expect to have to buy some to fill their orders.

—Dr. J. E. Soper traded his broncho for a fine set of double harnesses, and contemplates purchasing a span of Hamiltonians for driving. He will then be independent of the livery business.

—The Carver County News, of Watertown, comes out in good shape this week. Watertown ought to encourage Mr. Burns with subscriptions and advertising if they want a good paper.

--Rev. Nugent, of Watertown, received a visit from his brother Right Rev. Mansignor James Nugent, of Liverpool, Eng. last week. The eminent divine addressed the Temperance meeting held in our neighboring village Sunday evening.

--Some man came along a few days ago and induced some of our merchants to take a few barrels of kerosene, enough ta make a car load. He claims his oil is better than what the Standard Oil Co. is supplying to merchants in this neighborhood. The experiment may prove beneficial to consumers and it may not. It is an experiment as yet.

--A few of our business men have had statements printed and fill them out for each of their debtors once a month. This is a good plan and should be adopted by all. If everybody was reminded regularly, once a month, how much he owed, he would not be so liable to allow his debts to grow so large. If those who could just as well pay one time as another would do so, others could meet bills more promptly and business would move on much smoother.

--Wheat seems to be kind of a drug in the market. The buyers rather prefer to have the farmers hold it; and tell them to keep it till it dries, and their grade will be better; and when obliged to buy, it is claimed the grade and dockage do not always suit the seller. If the purchasers think wheat will be worth more and they have so much money to buy with, or can borrow money so cheaply, in New York, as is claimed, why don't they buy the farmers wheat, freely; giving satisfactory grade and weight, and keep it themselves for the rise? Wouldn't that be business? We advise those owing us to sell for the most they can get now, enough to pay us, we need the money.

The Herald sorter strains a point when it says "The Buffalo Gazette is mistaken in regard to the Grand Jury desiring to take up the Boxell case and being prevented by County Attorney Pidgeon." It, even, admits that "a member spoke about investigating." The Herald now denies that there is or ever was a warrant out for Joe Boxell. McVeety ought to say about that.

Personal.

Roy Wilder is home from Minneapolis for the winter.

John Lohmiller took a trip to St Paul, on business, yesterday.

Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Lindsley and Laura visited Minneapolis Wednesday.

Wesley Cooper, of Buffalo, was an attendant at the Delano Fair, last Saturday.

G. Bradley, Commission Merchant of Minneapolis, visited his friend Dr. Soper, Tuesday.

J. C. Holbrook, of Howard Lake, visited Delano Tuesday, in the interest of the County Fair.

George W. Florida, of Rockford, drove over with some of his "Pride of the Pantry" Tuesday.

W. J. Walsh, of Waverly, transacted business in Delano, Tuesday. We acknowledge a pleasant call.

Alex Crulkshank, of Minneapolis, was here looking after cattle Tuesday. He says they are scarce.

Mrs. John Czock and son, of and her sister, Mrs. Porlek, of Minneapolis, visited Delano relatives and friends this week.

C. S. Dickey, of Minneapolis, visited Delano and got up soon enough to take passage home on the morning train Thursday.

Alva George Catlin passed through town Sunday evening on his way to Benson where he is working on the court house.

Mr. McCaffery, of Minneapolis, shook hands with us Tuesday. He is advance agent for W. I. Nolan, the impersonator.

Charles Hiltsman who has been in Minneapolis for some time is home this week. He travels lame; the result of a bicycle injury.

Mrs. C. A. Connor and children, of St. Peter, who are visiting in and about Delano, expects to return home Saturday with Mr. Conner.

Mrs. S. S. Ball who had about concluded arrangements for a trip to Tennessee for her health, and a visit with her sister, has postponed the journey until the yellow fever scare is over.

John Cunningham and family, of Minneapolis, former Delanoites, are receiving a visit from their daughter and grand-daughter, Mrs. Dr. A. C. Lewis and daughter Winifred, of Mt. Vernon, Washington.

Mrs. R. P. Russell, of Minneapolis, and Mrs. Judge Noble, of McGregor, visited with the Floridas, of Rockford, returning home Monday. Mrs. Russel is claimed to be the first white woman married at St. Anthony Falls.

County Cullings.

In the list of post masters appointed this week appears the name of F. B. Lamson, Buffalo.

Dr. H. E. Cassel, formerly of Cokato, more recently of Litchfeld, has been sent to the Fergus Falls Insane Hospital for treatment.

Sheriff John C. Nugent and wife were surprised by a large party of friends on Sunday evening at their home on the occasion of their silver wedding. They were presented with a fine silver set.

Wright county hog raisers should carefully guard their hogs now, and not allow buyers and others who have been where hog cholera is to visit their pens. Cholera is prevailing at Willmar and other places in the state and it is best to be on the lookout and prevent its appearance here

The Eagle says: "Madam Grundy whispered to us That Dave Flannigan still advertises in the Buffalo Gazette." Does the Eagle, or Madam Grundy, know any reason why he shouldn't if he desires to?.

We would like to know what business the chairman of the County Commissioner has feeding Editor A. Y. Eaton on "an excellent little Swiss cheese." Is he trying to make a Switzer out of him?

The officers of the Wright County Agricultural Society are working hard to have as good a fair at Howard as our neighbors have at Hutchinson. Arrangements are being made to have the Annandale band present on Wednesday and the Delano band on Thursday. The Fair is to be held Sept. 28, 29, and 30. We acknowledge receipt of a complimentary ticket.

Several Justice of the Peace bills were cut down by the County Commissioners at its last meeting. Squire Walter lost 10cts, the County is supposed to have saved it. That's right, provided the squire had charged too much by 10cts; if he hadn't then the Commissioners were not strictly "honest" in cutting the bill; or they didn't read their new statutes closely. Every justice is supposed to have a fee bill in his office and if he don't he ought to know enough to use it; and use it as correctly and honestly as the Board of County Commissioners.

What can be the matter with the old republican papers of Wright county that the party needs send Saterlee to Annandale, and appoint him grain inspector, to run a paper; and appoint Lamson post master at Buffalo, to run another at that place? And turn Andrew Bertram out to grass, entirely, to run one at Monticello? Somehow, just about now, it looks as if the Wright county elephant had lost his co ordinating powers, and as if it would be a very hard matter for him to move at all, at all. Nearly every organ wants to move in its own way, or not at all.

Wright county politics are already beginning to boil. Although it is yet more than a year till voting time the Republicans, elated with their last victory are arranging tickets. There is not much harmony left among them; it seems to have moved away. Their greates difficulty don't seem to be to get candidates to accept the places but the question is "How are we to keep him off? Everybody knows he is not fit to occupy such a position at our hands." The anti-gold men are not making much fuss; but a little later on are preparing a surprise for their followers by way of the cleanest ticket ever put up in the county and a sure winner.

Among bills cut down by the Board of County Commissioners we find:

T. J. Catlin, publishing notice of teachers training school; claim $4.13	$3.00
F. T. Hamilton, publishing notice summer school; claim $4.75	$3.00
S. L. Rank, printing etc., for county, claim $14.56	$13.43

At the same meeting A. Y. Eaton was allowed $50.12 for printing etc, no cut.

Brown, Tracy & Co. allowed no cut,	$58.33
Pioneer Press co., no cut,	$87.08

This don't look well. The local printers are entitled to their bills and should be allowed proper pay for their work. If the Commissioners must cut in order to have Eaton praise them for being honest why don't they cut Eaton's bill? or the Pioneer Press, or Brown Tracy & Co? Or if they are so dreadfully honest why don't they cut down a few of their own bills? Some of them draw pretty good pay including mileage for a few days work? As for our bill, we consider the county able to pay for what it gets and we want it to do so. Cutting down bills a few cents don't always denote honesty in County Commissioners.

The would-be leading Republicans in Wright County seem inclined to each have a paper of his own; or is in the way of getting one. There are now seven of that faith in the county and one doubtful, and another in embryo. The way they appear to be splitting hairs, and wrangling, and calling each other names, and telling the people how mean each other is does just beat all. They are overdoing the matter. People are beginning to suspect it is but a trick of the trade to secure all the subscribers to all their papers they can, and by overstocking the market crowd out other papers, weekly and daily, from the county; thereby compelling Wright county citizens to read their articles sent out from head quarters and furnished free, already to print and to be found in each of them along about election times, and in some of them at any time. This view may be a little hard on the would be leaders of the G. O. P. in Wright county but it is but an exceedingly gentle let down compared with the other horn of the dilemma, that what they are telling about each other is true.

SAM JONES.

"THUNDERBOLTS,"

the latest and grandest book by this world-wide celebrity now out and for sale exclusively by subscription. The only book given to the public by Sam Jones in ten years. Edited by Rev. B. F. Haynes. Introduction by Bishop Joseph S. Key, of the M. E. Church, South. 600 pages. 122 splendid illustrations. A bonanza for agents. Most rapidly, easily selling book of the age.

AGENTS WANTED.

Send 85 Cents for Agent's Outfit, and 10 Cents for Our 70-page, Illustrated Catalogue of Bibles, Albums, Etc.

WONDERFUL SALES.

$10 Every Day Can Be Made by Agents.

To prove it, we give a few items from actual sales made within the last few weeks: One agent sold 27 copies in two and a half days. Another sold 15 copies in two days, and another 30 in three days. One agent in Indiana sold 15 copies in two days. An agent in South Carolina sold 43 copies in three days. One agent in Georgia sold 25 in two days. An agent in Central Georgia sold 82 copies in ten days. When you consider the commission we allow agents, and the immense popularity of this wonderful book, and the case with which it sells, there is nothing in which a live, pushing man can engage which will yield such profits. For instance: one agent made $108.25 in ten days selling "Thunderbolts." Another made $39.60 in three days; another $9.25 in one day; another $33 in two days; another $56.75 in three days.

GUARDING THE TONGUE.

If each of us, as we pass through life,
Would bridle and curb the tongue,
And speak only of the pleasant things
To be said of everyone,
What a wonderful difference there would be Between this world of ours
And the paradise it might become
With all pathways strewn with flowers!

How surely a little reflection
Will show us as plain as the day,
The mistakes we make when we hastily
Allow out tongue full sway.
When the day is done and we think it o'er—
Ah me! that it should be true—
There are few of us who can honestly say
There is nothing we would undo.

Too often the faults we clearly see
In others are faults of our own—
And those who dwell in houses of glass
Should be wary in casting a stone.
So, have charity, much charity,
The loveliest virtue of all,
And look well to the member unruly,
For it's prone to slip and fall.
—Northwestern Christian Advocate.

A NUMBER of papers are advocating the organizing of a central Minnesota Editorial association. Let's have it. Delano would be a good place to organize.

TELEGRAPHIC reports announce that Sheriff Martin and about 20 of his deputies were arrested for murder of 24 striking miners at Lattimer, Pa. They were held in $4,000 bonds, each, for trial. Bail was furnished and they returned to Hazleton.

THE jury in the Hunter bribery case in Kentucky returned a verdict of not guilty. Persons starting such charges without foundation for doing so should be made to suffer about as severe a penalty as would the accused were he guilty. A man's reputation should be sacredly guarded.

THE Wright County Times and other gold bug organs are trying to make out that John Lind has refused to allow his name to come before the people as a candidate for governor again. The Times and other gold bug organs should remember that one of their leaders, the St. Paul Dispatch, had the privilege of paying for lying about John Lind in the last campaign.

WE called upon some of our readers to send in interpretations of sec. 22, which we printed for their convenience. No one responded; not even Editor Wharton. As Attorney General Mc Kenney has declared it of no use to any body, we had as well drop the subject, satisfied to learn that Republicans can make tariff laws to be knocked out as easily as was the Democrats tariff law.

THE Attorney General, Mr. McKenna, has blasted the fond hopes of some of the wire pullers by ruling that Section 22 is unconstitutional, as interpreted by them. His decision is claimed to not be very plain. It is about as plain as section 22, and no one seems to doubt that it means that section 22 will not make people in some parts of the country or on some lines of R. R. pay more tariff than those in other parts of the country, for some goods.

IT is said that Judge Jackson, of Penn., of injunction fame, is a cousin of the noted Stonewall Jackson, and that he was, during the war, a northern man, and that his appointment to his present high position was in recognition of services rendered. If he should ever have an appointment again it would doubtless be due to services rendered. For any man who could so far stretch the constitution of our country as to issue an injunction prohibiting men from travelling peacably and unarmed, or even armed and peacably, along public highways, or to peacably assemble, or to abridge the freedom of speech, seems to us to be rather rendering service than obeying the laws of our land.

The first amendment of our constitution made and adopted more than a century ago, says:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peacably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

Unless reports from the Latimer vicinity are unusually incorrect, and instead of peacable assemblies, riotous and viscious crowds, bent on mischief, have been dealt with, it looks as if more prominence had been given property rights than had been allowed the people who labor for daily wages.

FROM an article in the St. Cloud Times it appears that Superintendent of the Reformatory, at St. Cloud, took it upon himself to purchase a printing outfit at a cost of $485 25 and ask the State to pay for it. State Auditor Dunn couldn't see it that way, and claimed that it would not be a paying investment, as the reformatory printing would not amount to over $50 per year, and there are now too many idle printers, without adding to the number by teaching reformatory prisoners the trade. Superintendent Holton tried to convince Bob Dunn, who is a printer himself, that the reformatory needed one as much as the state training school, or the state prison. But Bobb refused to audit any such bill, and superintendent Holton has applied to Attorney General Childs, to decide whether or not he shall be re imbursed in the amount of his claim or not.

Of course the same excuse as given by the State Auditor for not allowing the bill for a printing outfit might apply to any other of the overful trades. Since machinery has superseded manual labor to such an extent most trades are full of workmen. But the reformatory is for the prpose of reforming boys, who have become wild and unmanageable; some of them lawless and ungovernable. There is no better way to reform such than by giving them a steady job. Printing is such an occupation. The work in the printing business can with a proper director be made elevating. The press is the greatest of modern powers. It has much to do with the forming of thought; with the choosing of officers to administrate laws, and even to make them. As several other state institutions, among them the state prison have already gone into the printing business perhaps Bobb Dunn's long head forsees that the reformed urchins from the St. Cloud Reformatory, graduates of Superintendent Holton, added to the Prison members of the craft might be more of a power than he could overcome if they all got after him when he comes up for office again. Anyway a diversity of occupations should be sought for the reformatory boys. But the influence for years to come of a lot of graduates of Minnesota's penal institutions, upon the populace of the state when graduated and set up as a part of the power of the press might be worth considering. The press is a power. It may be for good or for bad. The papers of the state so far as can, should teach morality, and encourage people to be law abiding citizens; and ordinarily speaking, graduates of reformatories, unless they were reformed, would hardly fill the bill.

St. Paul vs. Minneapolis Police.

It seems a hard matter for the police authorities of the twin cities to suit anybody, and especially the press gang of the country. The saintly guard is accused of pounding promiscuously over the head guilty and innocent alike; of giving harmless and inoffensive citizens free rides in the patrol wagon and free lodging at the police station; of charging prominent people with picking pockets, etc., etc. While the patrolers of the Sawdust village allow tony, wealthy, young men, right around the University, to make horrible assaults on young women whose screams might be heard within the walls of Minnesota's greatest institution of learning, and where hundreds of young ladies from all over the state are as likely to meet the ruffian on any evening they chance to step out doors, and when the assaulter is caught in the very act by two honest, reliable, respectable young student of the University, and handed over to a police he is allowed to go his way unmolested and escape the ignominy of arrest, his name at least should be printed in scarlet letters and hanged about the University grounds, and scarlet letters affixed to the breasts of the guardians of the state's young ladies who would allow such an escape, that they may know better than to waste time appealing to them for aid. We do not favor lynch law, but if the two young men who caught the man above mentioned should find him under like circumstances again and perforate his unworthy hide with pistol balls until it wouldn't do for a coal sieve, it would be hard to find a jury composed of parents whose children are sent from the country to Minneapolis to learn something, that would not turn them free and say well done. Such occurrences should never be allowed about the University at all events, and the case alluded to should be looked up and the party brought to justice. Once is enough for such crimes.

LATER—We have heard that the above creature has been captured and allowed under small bonds to go his way, until court is ready for him.

Sees Some Good in Bryan.

"Mr. Bryan has just announced a comparatively new doctrine at Sedalia, Mo. He declares that "Arbitration secured by law, the elimination by law of government by injunctions, will secure the only just and satisfactory remedy for the growing troubles between capital and labor." Mr. Bryan in his speech was particularly careful to state his vigorous opposition to the burning of property and the destruction of life as remedies for difficulties. The cure, he says, can come only through legislation. Mr. Bryan has taken a less radical view than usual and a less dangerous position than the platform in which he was nominated at Chicago. He is still opposed to government by injunction, but he counsels against disorder and actually urges peaceful means. By insisting on legislation to do away with the misuse of injunctions, Mr. Bryan is acting wisely for him, and with considerrble conservatism."—Duluth News Tribune.

Has the News Tribune finally become awakened to the enormous possibilities of government by injunction? Mr. Bryan never advocated any other means of ridding the country of such an evil. We are glad the News Tribune can see that "By insisting on legislation to do away with the misuse of injunctions, Mr. Bryan is acting wisely for him, and with considerable conservatism." Why, it is wisdom and conservatism in the News Tribune to even admit as much as the above indicates. Surely daylight is breaking when intelligence of all parties have the good sense to join hands, and heads, and hearts, and with their votes obviate forever such an evil as government by injunction has shown itself capable of becoming. Let the good work go on.

"Free Trade and Free Silver."

One of our subscribers recently remarked, "There are two things that I firmly believe in, free trade and free silver." He evidently thought there was a logical connection between the two ideas. But they are in realty as antogonistic as the two poles. They are as far apart as the east is from the west. Free trade means a free market, regardless of political or geographical divisions. Free silver means the right of everyone to have silver minted at a ratio of 16 to 1 regardless of the commercial value of the metals. It is a scheme to raise the price of silver above its market price and to give it a ficticious worth. The free trader would naturally maintain that the legal and commercial value should correspond, and when it does not, it is the commercial value that rules in spite of laws or national or international conventions.—Howard Lake Herald.

Mr. Tanner says: "It is the commercial value that rules in spite of laws or national or international conventions." Why then does a silver dollar, made on a ratio of 66 to 1 buy as much, today, in this country, as does a gold dolar, made on the same ratio? If silver has a commercial value so different from its money value why does Mr. Tanner continue taking silver dollars for subscription? It seems it is not the commercial value of silver that rules the silver stamped "United States of America, one dollar."

But Mr. Tanner treads on the verge of what we have predicted for some time. When the gold standard advocates have obtained all the bonds, mortgages, and notes, payable in gold, that they can; and have got their editors to "educate" the people to believe that" it is the commercial value that rules in spite of laws or national or international conventions". so far as silver is concerned, of course they will demand payment according to contract, in gold; and Editor Tanner will demand gold dollars instead of silver for his paper and the country will go onto a gold basis and the price of silver owing to the lack of demand, will drop still further in price, while gold, owing to the great demand, will appreciate in price.

The right to the free coinage of silver has, since the founding of the government, been the privilege in this country, up to 1873, and now Mr. Tanner has the audacity to tell his readers to tell his readers that when they want it now, that it is a "scheme to raise the price of silver above its market price and give it a ficticious worth." Was not it a scheme to raise the price of gold by demonotizing silver, when the crime of '73 was committed? When people were deprived of their privileges ought it to be called a "scheme" to give them back? Have a few millionairs in the Legislative body of our country a right to deprive silver, one of the leading products of our country, of its value, throwing hundreds of people out of employment and making a stringency such as has not been known for years, of the money of the country, and like depreciation of other products of the land?

Mr. Tanner says of free trade and free silver: "They are as far apart as the east is from the west." How does he make that out? We don't see that he does. A man who is willing that other people shall live, as well as himself, that other countries shall exist, as well as his own, is willing to buy of his neighbor and sell to him what he does not want. He is willing to exchange the products of his farm for the goods manufactured by those in that business. He is glad his country can ship its hogs to Germany, its wheat to Liverpool, and get in return the products of the millions who are toiling for a living for themselves and families. He is glad to do this with free trade. And a man who is broad enough to see that other people need a living, and liberal enough to benefit them while he benefits himself, in this way is willing that people shall pay their debts in the money of the land when they made the debts, or in the money on which they have done business all their lives. They don't wish to pile their granaries to bursting while their forefathers at home across the water are suffering for bread, at the the same time wearing cottons and cold clothes instead of warm woollens, that would be gladly given for their grain. They don't wish to keep a yard full of hogs to die with hog cholera, while their friends across the water can hardly get grease enough to fry their victuals in: at the same time depriving them of the sale of many articles much needed here; and keeping hundreds of seamen idle who might be engaged in transporting the products from one country to another. People who see things like that are broad enough to see the foolishness of legislating against silver, a product of our own land, the digging and preparing for use engaging many men. They are liberal enough to wish them to have a demand for their silver, by using it as money equal with gold as heretofore, especially when that use would benefit not only the miners, but everybody in this country, unless it be the money loaner who puts in the gold clause in his mortgages, and possibly bankers who now can get a few cents exchange when they handle paper.

She Misunderstood.

Many singers fail to realize the importance of distinct enunciation, and the charm of a beautiful voice is often lost by the listener who is vainly struggling to catch the meaning of the song. A young woman who considers herself an admirable ballad singer one day received a severe shock from the criticism of an old lady who had formed one of her audience. Among other ballads the singer had rendered "Rory O'More" in her best style and had received much applause.

The old lady, who sat in the front seat of the little hall where the entertainment was given, looked at first nuzzled and then distressed as the familiar song proceeded, and and at the close of the concert she waited to speak to the young woman.

"My dear," she said in a quivering voice, "I remember when 'Rory O' More' first came out. I have never been a singer myself, but have always been interested in music, and I am sure I have never heard the words as you sang them tonight. I am not deaf. My hearing is unusually good, but will you tell me where you get your authority for singing:

He poulticed the hock,
And she salted it down?

For though I cannot remember the original words, I am sure they were not like that."

The young woman's face was crimson as she showed the old lady her copy of the song and pointed to the words:

He bold as the hawk
And she soft as the dawn.

An Expert's Selection of Calves.

T. B. Terry, in the Practical Farmer, gives the method adopted by an expert in judging dairy cows in selecting calves that he thinks good enough to raise, as follows: When a calf is dropped we first turn it on its back and examine the teats. If there are four well placed, and two rudimentary or extra ones, all right. Next we look into the calf's mouth. If there are six or eight milk teeth, well through, we call the calf well born and worth raising. If it has but two teeth through it is not worth raising. We will not fuss with it. It shows that the mother has not vitality enough to properly start the calf. We want to breed from the best. We do not raise calves with two or four teeth just sticking through. They will be weakly, puny, subject to disease all their lives. The well born calf is half raised. Its mother has given it a start from her own strong vitality.—Oregon Agriculturist.

Profit of Tree Raising.

—By J. O. BARRETT—
SECRETARY OF THE MINNESOTA STATE FORESTRY ASSOCIATION.

Two-thirds, if not three-quarters, of the prairie farms are destitute of the necessary amount of trees. The most of them have but a few rows around the buildings, simply for shade and protection against pelting winds; others have groves, very seldom reaching ten acres, except on timber claims, and these, from sheer neglect, "living at a poor dying rate". Evidently but a small minority of farmers appreciate the fact that forestry is indispensible to successful agriculture. The farmer who has studied their importance no more thinks of farming without trees to shelter his crops than to raise stock without barns to protect it. Well he knows that the natural fertility of soil originally came from the forest. His main fertilizer, outside of the barn offal, is the green manure of luguminus plants, whose nitrogenous properties they largely extract from the air. This use of an agricultural product is but an imitation of nature's art of making and replenishing the soil with green and ripened leaves that form a perfect mulch, conserving moisture and feeding the roots of all plants. The properly watered roots absorb and reconstruct the primates of the mineral kingdom, transforming them into living tissue, whose leave breathing organs appropriate the carbon and turn the oxygen over to the animal kingdom, and whose final decomposition, as described, prepares a soil for man to till and live upon. To the forest, then, is due the fundamental wealth of our agriculture.

There is another profit derived from tree raising which alone invites the venture. Though we may have plentiful rains, they soon run to waste where are no leaf coverings of the soil to intercept the flow and evaporation. By sufficient forrestry and water roservoirs our surplus waters could be conserved to carry us safely through any draught that might afflict us. Is not here a profit-saving of immeasurable value?

Evaporation is proportional to the velocity and dryness of the wind. Scientific experimentation demonstrates that when the temperature of the air is at 80 degrees, Far., with a relative humidity of 50 per cent, the evaporation with the wind blowing five miles an hour, is 2.2 times greater than at calm; at 10 miles, 3.8; at 15 miles, 4.9; at 20 miles, 5.7; at 25 miles, 6.1; at 30 miles, 6.3 times as much as a calm atmosphere at the same temperature and humidity. There is also a deadening weight to the wind. It often uncovers grains in the early spring, beats down tender plants and hardens the surface ground to the great injury of all our vegetation. Scientists inform us that hail storms and cyclones are speedily broken up by extensively forested lands. If then, we would be masters of the climate, of the wind and storm, and save crops from utter ruin, we must build up living walls of trees.

The inquest of the Hazleton murder of strikers is being held.

The Minneapolis Trust Company it is claimed, has succeeded in getting three indictments against the Minneapolis Times.

Robbers at Smith Lake.

From the St. Paul Dispatch we learn that three men with pistols robbed several stock men and others of what change they had with them, at Smith Lake, on a stock train a few mornings ago, Two of the robbers escaped and the other was captured by Conductor Connor and Brakeman Wilkins, and taken to Minneapolis and handed over to the authorities. Wright county's court calandar will doubtless be lengthened by this case, and especially the expense account.

Bryan in Iowa.

DES MOINES Iowa, Sept. 20.—Wm. J. Bryan and F. E. White, democratic candidate for governor, were the principal figures in a free silver rally here today. Three meetings were held, Mr. Bryan speaking this afternoon to 8000 people. He devoted his time to the silver issue and said that the eyes of the country are on Iowa and Ohio this year. He said free silver was more alive this year than last.

Mr. White in the evening also devoted nearly all his time to silver.

Mr. Bryan spoke in the evening at Newton. He will spend the whole week in the state.

Two French lovers resolved to die together, and the man shot the woman and then himself. They have both recovered and are now married. To commit suicide first and matrimony afterward probably comes as near to a novel sensation as the jaded youth of this age can get.

The czar's promise to abolish the horrors of the Siberian exile system is giving him a better advertisement even than the French alliance. The alliance is caused by ambitious considerations, and the fact that France is a republic had, of course, nothing to do with the matter. The Siberian reforms, on the other hand, are dictated by humanity.

An insurance publication in the east has issued "Fire Tables for 1897." From this series of figures it is seen that in 1896 the losses were $118,000,000, a decrease of $24,000,000 from the losses of 1895, $22,000,000 under those of 1894, $50,000,000 less than 1893 and $34,000,000 lower than 1892. Unfortunately there is no text with the figures showing the cause of the encouraging decrease.

Mexico claims to have discovered rich gold mines in the Yaqui country. This river, which flows into the Gulf of California, until recently has been unknown to the prospectors, because of the hostility of the savages. But peace is now assured, and the gold region is open, and a great exodus from the cities and towns is expected. A trip to rich gold fields in Mexico would be more pleasing than one to the Klondike.

A bean vine on a New York farm has been rambling all over the houses in its vicinity with leaves as large as a man's hand and pods six inches long. It is quite a phenomenon, and the neighbors think it will eclipse the famous beanstalk of the fairy story. It is still growing, and will continue to expand until the October frosts end its career. Horticulturists are at a loss to explain the great luxuriance of the vine, but, of course, they will be careful to save the seed.

England, as well as the United States, complains of an oversupply of doctors. More are annually graduated than there is room for, and the same is true in other countries. What to do with the surplus is a problem of which no solution has yet been found. If the young sawbones could be set to doctoring each other for a term before trying their hands on the public their ranks would thin out with great rapidity, but such a course would probably be against the ethics of the profession.

A tariff of 50 cents a head has been placed by a new law in New Jersey upon every couple from outside that comes into the state to be married. This was a consequent inquisitorial feature created as a preliminary to marriage which brought on a perfect stampede of young persons to marry before the act went into effect. It is estimated that 1,100 marriages were solemnized in the state as a result of this, and it is hinted that many of these had been a long time in contemplation.

It is in order to ask what has become of the Russian thistle which a few years ago was said to threaten the annihilation of American agriculture. Its rapid decline in interest dates from its failure to serve as a basis for appropriations. On the other hand the gypsy moth, which was successfully used to raid the state treasury in Massachusetts, is in a highly flourishing condition, and was good this year for a $100,000 pull at he public funds. A brave start was made with the Russian thistle, but legislatures declined to go into the business of killing weeds and the country has survived in good shape.

If the people who are trying to stop the insane rush to the Klondike would recall the history of the race they might spare themselves much labor and worry. Humanity has ever been seeking madly the source of wealth since Adam began to wear clothes, and will doubtless continue to do so until the last of the coming race of toothless and hairless men vanish from the earth. And the further away the reputed treasure is and the more danger, the more eager are people to try for the goal. The gambling instinct is planted deeply in human nature, and it crops out strongly in the quest of treasure.

Advices from Ireland are of an alarming character as regards the condition of this year's crops, and the island seems to be threatened with a famine scarcely less disastrous than that of 1847. Protracted rains have rendered it impossible to harvest the grain crop, and as a consequence it is rotting. Every county has the same gloomy report and every species of crop seems to be affected—the potato crop, upon which so much depends for the Irish people, not excepted. A parish priest at a meeting in the County of Ulster, called to ask a reduction of rents, said that not since 1847 had the prospect been so black.

MINERS RESUME WORK.

Song of the Pick Heard Again in the Pittsburgh District.

Idleness of Two Months Ended—Perplexing Situation at Hazleton, Pa.—Women, Armed with Sticks and Stones, Make Trouble.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Sept. 17.—After over two months of idleness between 15,000 and 18,000 coal miners in the Pittsburgh district returned to work in accordance with the action taken at Wednesday's convention authorizing the men to resume work in all the mines complying with the provisions of the scale of 65 cents adopted at Columbus. The remainder of the 33,000 miners of the district will be at work before the close of the week. It is estimated that the strike, which lasted 65 working days, cost the people of the Pittsburgh district from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000. Of this amount the miners lost about $2,250,000 in wages.

Ohio Mines Started.

Cincinnati, Sept. 20.—A Bellaire (O.) special to the Times-Star says: All the large coal mines located on the Baltimore & Ohio, Cleveland, Loraine & Wheeling Peddling banks in Belmont county were started Monday morning, operators paying the 56-cent rate. Two thousand miners returned to work.

Situation at Hazleton.

Hazleton, Pa., Sept. 21.—Unless unforeseen developments occur the anthracite coal strike in this region is ended. Monday 1,200 men, half of the full complement, returned to work at the Honeybrook collieries of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre company, as did 300 of the 1,300 at Pardee's Lattimer mines, while the Cranberry, Crystal Ridge and Harwood collieries of the same company and Coxe's collieries in the Drifton district, remained at work. The latter were to have settled the question of strike Monday, but at the request of the operators held off until next Thursday. Nearly 5,000 strikers have returned. The break of the strike is practically a victory for the operators, as in only one or two instances have the demands of the men been granted, although several companies have promised to consider the grievances.

Raided by Women.

At Lattimer a band of women attempted to drive out 300 Italians who returned to work. They were armed with clubs and stones and moved on the engine house and the company stores. The raid looked forbidding for a time and was not ended until three companies of the Thirteenth regiment with fixed bayonets had pressed back and dispersed the crowds. A number of Butler valley miners who wanted to return to work at Lattimer were driven back by a body of armed strikers who met them as they came over the mountain, a mile or more from camp. The disturbance at Eckley was an attempt by strikers to intimidate the men who wanted to work, and it, too, was quieted down by the troops without violence.

THE FEVER SITUATION.

Plague Grows in Fury—Many New Cases in New Orleans.

New Orleans, Sept. 20. — The condition relative to the yellow fever scare throughout the south is gradually becoming more complicated, chiefly owing to the fact that there had been no fatalities save the one which marked the introduction of the fever two weeks ago. Since then, however, there occurred a death Friday, two Saturday and one Sunday—five in all—with the total number of 40 actual cases up to six p. m. Sunday. All over the city the work of cleaning and disinfecting is going on. Meetings are being held daily by all classes of the population and the business men are putting in the time collectively and individually pushing this branch of the fight against the fever. Hundreds of barrels of lime are being used in the drains and gutters and each infected locality is being fumigated and sanitated thoroughly under the organized direction of the board of health.

The board has a report from Biloxi, showing 36 cases to date, besides six suspects and 27 cases of yellow fever now on hand. No deaths reported.

Vicksburg is thoroughly guarded and entirely healthy. It is estimated that perhaps ten per cent. of the population has left town.

New Orleans, Sept. 21.—The largest number of cases reported on any day since yellow fever first made its appearance in New Orleans two weeks ago was recorded on the books of the board of health Monday evening at six o'clock, although at that hour not a single case had proven fatal during the day. There were 18 cases in all.

The most sensational incident of the day was the announcement from Dr. Joseph Holt, expressed to the board of health, that he had discovered nine cases among his practice, the first of which had come under his observation on Friday.

Edwards, Miss., Sept. 20.—New cases that have come to notice since the last report are as follows: Dr. Wallace Champion, John Cuy, Frank Angelo, Mrs. Dr. Ratcliff, Earnest Birdsong, Mrs. R. M. Perry, Mrs. Frank White, Jesse Sharp (colored), Mary Leonard (colored), Cynda Garrett (colored), Louis Thompson (colored). Total number of yellow fever cases registered, 54. Col. Robb is reported very sick. Nathan and Hudskin are also quite sick. They recently came here from Louisville. All the other cases reported are doing well.

Jackson, Miss., Sept. 20. — The Alabama & Vicksburg railway being unable to run trains Monday laid off all their employes at this point, with the exception of the agent and telegraph operator.

Advocates Statehood.

Washington, Sept. 20.—The secretary of the interior has received the annual report of Gov. Ottero, of New Mexico. The governor says the population of the territory has increased by 100,000 since the census of 1890, and adds that it is capable of supporting 5,000,000 people. The governor takes strong grounds in favor of statehood, claiming the people to be entirely capable of self-government.

Ruled by Women.

Columbus, O., Sept. 18. — In a letter from Mayor Silas S. Drake, of Lincoln, N. J., he announces that the members of the council of that municipality, all women, will attend the national convention of mayors and common councilmen which meets here on September 28. It is the only municipal organization in the United States whose legislation is wholly controlled by women.

TELLS OF TRIALS.

Government Official Writes of the Hardships in the Gold Country.

Washington, Sept. 20. — Oren W. Weaver, acting commissioner of labor, has given out a copy of a most graphic letter on the terrors of the trip across Alaska to the Klondike gold fields. The letter has just been received from Samuel G. Dunham, statistical expert of the government's department of labor, who had been assigned by Commissioner Wright to make an investigation of the opportunities which the gold regions in the Yukon valley and adjoining territory afford for the remunerative employment of American labor and capital. The letter is in part as follows:

"Lake Lindemann, Alaska, Aug. 26, 1897. —Commissioner of Labor, Washington—Sir: I left Dyea Monday morning at 11 o'clock and arrived here Tuesday evening at seven. My four Indians started ahead of me, but I have not seen anything of them since the start, and am waiting for them here. When I reached the foot of the summit a terrible storm was raging on the pass. I had an awful experience coming across the summit. I started out with my hand bag strapped on my back, thinking that as it weighed only 40 pounds I could carry it. I managed to struggle along to the head of navigation for canoes, six miles from Dyea, and was there forced to employ an Indian packer, paying him ten dollars to carry my grip to Sheep Camp, 12 miles from Dyea. I spent the night at Sheep Camp, which is merely a collection of tents, and started for the summit at eight o'clock Tuesday morning in a drizzling cold rain. I employed a packer to carry my grip from there to Lake Lindemann, paying him $16. At the foot of the summit we met perhaps 100 Indian and white packers, who had cached their packs on the trail above and were returning to Sheep Camp to await an abatement of the storm.

"At present the condition of affairs on both trails is terrible, and hundreds of men are bound to starve and freeze to death if they continue to come this way. I passed at least 1,000 men between Dyea and here and not more than 100 have their outfits this side of the summit. Every 50 yards along the trail are piles of goods, and I suppose there are provisions to the value of $200,000 scattered along the trail. Prices for packing and for all kinds of service are practically prohibitory, for most of those who are attempting to get in, so many are carrying over their own outfits. Some of the Indians carry as much as 200 pounds at one load, and make the trip from Dyea to Lake Lindemann in two days, returning to Dyea on the third day, thus making two trips a week. White men carry from 75 to 125 pounds, and it takes a man with an adequate outfit a month to get to the lake. There are many here who have been five or six weeks packing their outfits over and are not ready to start down the river yet. All who have come to Skaguay or Dyea within the last week or so, who have to come in without sufficient outfit, pay 40 cents or more a pound or not get in at all.

"Lumber is $500 a thousand, and rising. A great many whipsaw their lumber, two men turning out about 100 feet a day. A boat carrying three men sells for $250 to $400, according to the purse of the purchaser. Wages of carpenters are $12.50 a day and board. Everything is high in price when you can get it at all. Whisky is 50 cents a drink and five dollars a bottle, and poor stuff at that. Alcohol is worth $40 a gallon. It makes ten gallons of Lake Lindemann whisky. Meals cannot be had for money, as everyone is holding on to his provisions. I never saw such selfishness anywhere as is displayed on this trail. You pass 100 people without receiving a response to your respectful 'good morning,' and soon learn to keep your mouth shut. There are so many on the trail that it is like walking the streets of a city—the individual is lost in the passing throng and you are recognized only by acquaintances. If you ask for food in nine cases out of ten it will be refused."

BLOW AT DEBS.

Federal Judge Jackson Makes Injunction Perpetual.

Wheeling, W. Va., Sept. 21. — The feature of interest in the opening session of the September term of the United States court for the district of West Virginia was the application of ex-Gov. A. B. Fleming, of Fairmont, to make the injunction against Eugene V. Debs and others perpetual. The governor was acting for his client, the Monongah Coal company, and as there was no appearance for any of the defendants, the injunction was made perpetual. In the course of his remarks in making this decision, Judge Jackson said that if a like case were presented to him now he would make the same kind of order he had made at Parkersburg, where the temporary injunction was issued recently. Continuing he said:

"There have been some public strictures that I know are due to the fact that the order made in these cases was not understood. This decision is founded on good law, good morals and justice. Nearly 200 years ago courts of equity in England issued restraining orders to protect the citizen in his right of property. There is no reason why the rights of property owners should not be protected by the courts. These owners invested large sums of money in their plants at Monongah, and the bill for injunction alleged the defendants were about to do things that would lessen the value of the property and possibly destroy it. The law is that where an injury is threatened to which the law affords no adequate remedy, then the court of equity terfere to prevent the injury, and this is such a case. The injunction abridged no rights of the miners, did not interfere with the rights of free speech and was a carefully prepared and well-considered order. I instructed my officers in taking that injunction to serve it, to stand behind it like the soldiers behind the fortress, but to keep within the lines of the injunction and not to extend or step beyond it, and do nothing excepting exactly that which was required. This order was not an innovation. It is an application of what I consider good law, and was done in a proper case to protect property of the plaintiffs, which the court conceives to be its duty, just as it would protect the rights of the defendants in the proper exercise of all their privileges under the constitution."

Iron Prices Advance.

Cleveland, O., Sept. 20.—There is more liveliness in iron and steel trade now than since 1895, and prices keep increasing. Bessemer pig iron went up to ten dollars during the middle of last week and it is rumored that $10.25 was obtained in one quarter Saturday. Mill iron went up to nine dollars recently and is now $9.25, with southern iron at $9.90. Old material has gone up with a jump, old iron rails now being held at $15 and hard to obtain. There is a rumor that $25 will at once be asked for wire rods.

Another Bad Wreck.

Chippewa Falls, Wis., Sept. 18. — A disastrous wreck occurred on the Wisconsin Central railroad six miles west of this city at four o'clock Friday morning, resulting in the death of five people and the serious injury of four others. Two freight trains, through a mistake in orders, while going 40 miles an hour, met on a curve, and not even giving the engineers and firemen time to jump, came together with terrible force.

British in Hot Battle.

Camp Anayat, via Pankajora, Sept. 18. —British troops suffered severe losses Thursday in a battle with the rebellious Mohmands. One hundred and forty in the second brigade of Gen. Sir Bindon Blood's division have been either killed or wounded. The Mohmand loss was also heavy.

PRESIDENT DIAZ' PERIL.

Attempted Assassination of Mexico's Ruler—Assailant Lynched.

City of Mexico, Sept. 17.—President Diaz was assaulted with deadly intent during the ceremonies attending the celebration of the declaration of independence. Ignacio Arnulfo, a violent anarchist, broke through the line of soldiers that marked the line of the procession to the Alameda and attempted to brain the president with a heavy cane as he was walking to the national palace. The blow which he aimed at the president's head fell short and the would-be murderer was immediately seized and handed over to the police.

Intense excitement prevailed when it became known that an attempt had been made upon the life of President Diaz. In a thousand ways the deep hold he has upon the affections of the Mexican people was manifested when the fact became known that he had escaped without injury. The city is ringing with cheers for the president, and prayers of thanksgiving are being offerd in many of the churches.

City of Mexico, Sept. 18.—A most sensational ending of the attempt on the life of President Diaz occurred Friday morning. Arnulfo Arroyo was lynched by a band of the common people who were determined to revenge this dastardly attempt on the life of the president. It was an act unprecedented in the history of this country. The sensational attempt on the life of the president of the republic had a more sensational ending than the quiet people of Mexico ever dreamed could be. At one o'clock in the morning a number of men belonging to the common people forced their way into the municipal palace, ascended the stairway, overcame the guards, made their way to the office of the inspector general of police and killed Arnulfo Arroyo, whom they found there. The killing was a wild and savage scene and wild and noisy was the retreat.

The assistant chief of police, who was sleeping in the adjoining room, was awakened by the noise. He arose and ran to the balcony and fired his pistol as a signal for help. At the same time he called to the policeman who was in sight that he make an attempt to detain the lynchers, who were making their escape. The firing of the pistol and the whistles of the policemen brought other policemen, who succeeded in capturing a score of persons. It was not long before the inspector general and Inspector Villavicencie arrived on horseback. When the police entered the room they found the body of the dead man lying in the middle of the floor. It was literally riddled and hacked with knife satbs. At his side were found a door bar and several knives and other steel instruments. An examination showed that the panes of the window were broken. The men who were captured would not say anything.

City of Mexico, Sept. 20.—Orders have been given to investigate the lynching of Arroyo. President Diaz has decided that the inquiry shall be most rigorous and that the guilty parties be severely punished, as he feels that the act was a reproach to the nation, which has taken pride in the fact that lynch law has been unknown there. Twenty-odd men arrested are still in custody and formal papers are being drawn up in their cases.

City of Mexico, Sept. 20.—Eduardo Valasquez, chief of police; Lieut. Cabrera, assistant chief of detectives, and Commandant Mauro Sanchez were arrested Saturday night and taken to prison and placed in solitary confinement by order of the Fifth criminal judge, to whom had also been turned over 21 prisoners arrested for entering the municipal building on the night of the recent lynching. Public opinion is behind the government and the investigation will be pushed rapidly.

Death in a Mine.

Nashville, Tenn., Sept. 20.—A special to the Banner from Birmingham, Ala., says: Fire broke out Monday morning in Belle Ellen No. 2 mine, near Blocton, in Bibb county. Many miners were rescued at first, but a number have been cut off from escape and will certainly perish. The mines were recently opened and more than 50 miners were working in the place. How the fire originated cannot be learned, but before discovered it was burning briskly. Five men are known to have been cut off in one room and they cannot possibly escape the fire and smoke.

Michael's Great Bicycling Feat.

Boston, Sept. 20.—Jimmy Michael on Saturday won the greatest cycling event ever run on any New England track. It was the international 25-mile race on Charles River park, and was run in the fastest cycling time the world ever saw. Michael's competitors were Lucien Lesna, of France, and Eddie McDuffee, of Cambridge. It was a superb day and 14,000 people witnessed the race. Michael finished in 45:58 4-5. Every American and world's record from three to twenty-five miles inclusive is now credited to Michael.

Serious Wreck in Austria.

Vienna, Sept. 20.—A dispatch from Fiume says there was a collision Sunday evening near Kofosvars between an express train and a freight train carrying troops. Four train hands and six soldiers were killed and 30 soldiers will probably die from injuries received in the accident. A considerable amount of rolling stock was wrecked.

Peace for Turkey and Greece.

Constantinople, Sept. 20. — It was officially announced Monday that peace between Greece and Turkey has been signed and the ministers of war and marine have so notified all the Turkish military and naval commanders. Most of the European sovereigns have congratulated the sultan upon the conclusion of peace.

AROUSED HIS CURIOSITY.

She Had Never Heard of the Cathay But It Must Be Good.

"No," remarked the young man who is very much given to interspersing his conversation with quotations, "I shall not go away for the summer."

"That is too bad," exclaimed the young woman in the bicycle suit, sympathetically.

"Not at all. This thing of sitting around on piazzas and doing nothing except wishing that there was some other way of killing time faster is not at all to my taste. As a matter of fact, it isn't any warmer in the city than it is elsewhere, and there is always something going on. I like the bustle and the hurry and the hum."

"But you must have rest, you know. You will wear yourself out if you don't."

"Oh, well," he went on, with that comewhat-may manner which can usually be relied on to impress a very young woman, "it is better to wear out than rust out."

"But there is no need of doing either, is there?" she inquired, apprehensively.

"Perhaps not. But it is my disposition. My motto is: 'Better 20 years of Europe than a cycle of Cathay.'"

"Why, Arthur. How suddenly you change the subject!"

"I wasn't aware that I had changed the subject."

"Why, yes. You said: 'Better 20 years of Europe than a cycle of Cathay.'"

"Aren't you familiar with that?"

"No," she reluctantly confessed; "I believe you made it up."

"Oh, no; that isn't mine."

"Well, anyhow, I'd like to see one."

"One what?"

"A Cathay. I never heard of it, but it must be a very fine make of cycle to cost as much as a trip to Europe."—Washington Star.

OPPOSED TO IT.

He Was Down on Poker But Touched Up Wheat.

"My son," said the old gentleman, "I hear you lost a large sum of money at a game of chance called poker the other evening."

"Yes, dad, that's so. I'm afraid it was a large sum, but it didn't scare me. Besides, I generally win, and I'm still ahead of the game."

The old gentleman frowned.

"Do you mean to say, then," he asked, "that you make a continuous practice of gambling?"

"Why—er— I play the game a pretty good deal right along, yes. What of it?"

"This much of it, sir. I forbid it in the future! I utterly discountenance any kind or sort of immoral ways of making money like those of staking on unknown or doubtful results. It's wrong, my boy; it's wrong. Look at the ethics of it. Suppose you do win. You obtain money for which you have done no work—you have made no return for it, and rightfully it is not yours. If you lose your stake it is still worse, and you might as well have thrown your money away. No, sir, there must be no more of your gambling, or I shall cut you off altogether. Understand me, sir, I am opposed to it on every ground."

And the old gentleman hurried away to his office down town to instruct his broker to buy heavily in wheat, as he had a suspicion that there would be a rise within 24 hours.—N. Y. Journal.

YIELDED TO TEMPTATION.

With a Soul Above Selling Lace He Thought Only of Love.

He was a clerk in a dry goods store, and her beauty and grace simply turned his head. It was in a Chicago dry goods store, which is in its way unique, and the Chicago dry goods clerk is a creation indigenous to the plant he serves. The "booful" lady was young, albeit she is a matron, and as she stood entranced before remnants of lace and tried their different effects by spreading the mesh over her lily-white hand, he, poor fellow, was entranced too.

"Isn't it beautiful?" she asked, enthusiastically, as she laid another specimen over the back of her small, plump fist.

"Exquisite! Divine!" ejaculated the bewildered clerk, with an energy that ought to have sold all the lace in the establishment, but which was lost on the object of it.

"Is it pure white or cream?" she further demanded.

"Pure white, with dimples," responded the lost knight of the yardstick.

There was one more question for the shopper to ask and she asked it.

"Is it hand-made?"

"No," answered the poor fellow, rushing on to his doom, "it is heaven-made."

It took the manager of the department some little time to square the matter up and sell the lace, and now the too susceptible clerk is transferred to a department where he wil be out of the way of temptation.—Chicago Times-Herald.

The Canopied Ceiling.

The canopied ceiling has been marred by vandal hands and its stars are eclipsed by whitewash. The time was when the ceiling seemed like a summer night, a blending of starlight and the light of other days. A merchant prince in the days which old New Yorkers know so well had built the house. His bedroom was finished with this wonderful ceiling, which arched up and drooped at the corners like the great sheet which the apostle saw. An Italian artist came over the sea especially to paint this wondrous ceiling. He mixed his colors while his mind's eye saw a night upon the Vesuvian bay. The color was of the blue of a summer's day washed with darkness. The stars shone from out the field of blue like glittering clasps of the trailing garments of the night. Beneath such a sky a man might find repose. Then the evil day came to the house of the canopied ceiling. The neighborhood became no longer fashionable and the house became the home of tenement dwellers. The new tenants splashed the canopied ceiling with whitewash and blotted out the stars forever.—N. Y. Telegram.

On a Tropic Strand.

"She is just simply too sweet for anything!" King Mwptka looked annoyed at his dusky consort's interruption. "I wish you wouldn't bother me with the details of the kitchen, my dear," he said, fretfully. "Set the jars out in the sun awhile till they begin to work and you'll find acid enough. Somehow, you do not seem as capable in culinary accomplishments as mother used to be." And Mrs. Mwptka wept softly as she stirred the fire.—N. Y. Press.

Artful Audacity.

"So Boracks is going to marry that aged Munn girl, is he?"

"Yes, and the funny part of it is that he told her he wanted to marry her on account of her fortune."

"Eh?"

"He told her that she was too young and foolish to have the care of so much money."—Indianapolis Journal.

Rubbed It In.

"I told her there were plenty of other fish in the sea when she refused to marry me."

"What did she say?"

"That they won't all bite at clam bait."—Philadelphia North American.

Using a Word.

"My child, what made your face so dirty?"

"That Billy Bludkins an' I had a fight, an' he throwed more dirt in my face than I could digest, mamma."—Judge.

TEARS AND SMILES.

The skies cannot always be clear,
My dear;
The merriest eye must still have its tear.
My dear;
The clouds that are frowning above us to-day
Will presently break and go floating away,
And the skies will be blue that are sullen and gray,
My dear!

We can't have just happiness here,
My dear;
You would never be glad if you ne'er shed a tear,
My dear;
The sorrow that lurks in your bosom to-day,
Like the clouds, when you've wept, will go floating away,
And the skies will be blue that are sullen and gray,
My dear.

If it's going to rain, it will rain,
My dear,
No matter how bitterly we may complain,
My dear;
There are sorrows that every good woman must bear;
There are griefs in which every good man has a share,
It is only the fool who has never a care,
My dear.

The skies cannot always be clear,
My dear,
Sweets wouldn't be sweet were no bitterness here,
My dear;
There could never be joy if there never was sorrow,
The sobs of to-day may be laughter to-morrow,
And there's gladness as well as vain trouble to borrow,
My dear!

UNLICENSED ... PREMISES.

BY CLARENCE ROOK.

I HAD watched her for some moments as my 'bus rolled slowly down Piccadilly, and was greatly taken by her appearance. The pavements and the carriages were full of well-dressed and beautiful women; but somehow I seemed to have eyes for no one but that girl. She wore the sweetest costume—something in blue picked out with white at the collar and cuffs, and, I inferred, white upon the front of the bodice. She was steering her bicycle with skill and boldness through the five o'clock traffic of Piccadilly, and I longed to see her face, which, I felt convinced, would please my eye. But this, of course, I could not do, as she was riding steadily about ten yards in front of us. You cannot shout at a girl on a bicycle from the top of a 'bus, even if you know her name, and I could scarcely expect her to look back at a whistle.

I leaned forward to the driver, handing him my open tobacco pouch.

"Do you think," I said, "you could hurry up a bit and pass that lady ahead? I want to see her face."

He turned, and, jerking his head in the direction of Hyde Park corner, said:

"Lidy on the bike—blue dress—cut saucy?"

"You've guessed it," I replied.

He winked. Then he brushed his horses with the whip, and passed the Victoria 'bus ahead, which seemed in no particular hurry to arrive anywhere. The girl ahead, seeing a clear space before her, quickened up and held her own.

"I don't think we can do it," I said, resigning myself to disappointment.

He held his pipe between two fingers, and filled it with the remaining two, feeling, meanwhile, with his thumb for a match. I gave him my match-box.

"It's all right," he said, as he nursed the flaming match in his fist and puffed his pipe into action. "There's a block at the corner."

The girl slowed down, and stepped easily and surely from her bicycle. She stood upon the curb at the corner of St. James' street, leaning on her machine. I admired the pose of her head, the set of her shoulders, the pointing of her foot, as she stood silent and expectant.

As the 'bus drew up by her side, I leaned over and saw her face. I was not disappointed. It was as I thought. She was, to me, amazingly beautiful.

"You will excuse me, sir," said a voice at my side, "but you have gained your object."

I looked round at my neighbor, and saw a lady, by no means ill looking, of about my own age, which is on the wrong side of 30. There was something a little stern, perhaps a trifle contemptuous, in the cast of her features, and she was regarding me with much apparent aversion.

"You have seen the young lady's face, and now, perhaps—that's right, coachman, drive on."

The 'bus moved slowly forward. I reflected a moment, for I had not noticed my neighbor before, and was a little startled at her implied reproof.

"Excuse me," I said, "I haven't quite gained my object. I want to make her look at me, and she won't. Now, what is the etiquette in such cases?"

I turned and waved my arm at her as the 'bus went on. But she was mounting her machine, and, being occupied with the arrangement of her skirts, took no notice of me.

"May I ask," said my neighbor, "if that young lady is your sister, or your cousin, or—"

"Certainly not," I replied. "Why do you ask?"

"Then, sir, I feel it my duty to tell you that you are no gentleman."

I sighed.

"I know that," I replied. "But I always pretend to be, and the public is so gullible. How did you find me out?"

"No gentleman," she said, "would seek to annoy a lady in the street, especially a lady who, clearly, does not wish to notice him. And I can see that girl is persistently avoiding you."

"O, is she?" I said. "Just wait a moment. She'll be as pleased as anything when she sees that I have noticed her. Nothing annoys a woman like indifference."

"A girl—alone and unprotected—" she began.

"She should be all the more pleased to see me," I said. She was abreast of the 'bus again, and I leaned over the side, waving my hat. She looked up with a glance of surprise. I nodded pleasantly. She lifted her eyebrows and smiled. But a crawling hansom took her attention and she fell behind again.

"There!" I said. "If ever a girl looked pleased, there she is. Who am I that I should refuse a momentary satisfaction to a lonely girl?"

I turned with a smile to my neighbor. Her face was flushed with anger, for I had clearly proved her to be in the wrong.

"It is men like yourself who are the—the blots on our vaunted civilization," she said. "Such a sweet, innocent face, too."

"Yes, isn't it?" I said. "I am so glad you agree with me. It's the sort of face I've always admired; and as soon as I caught a back view of her I felt certain she would have that sort of face. That's why I wanted to get a look at it."

"Such men as you—" began my neighbor.

"Now, if I were not a married man," I continued, reflectively, "that is the very girl I would marry at once. As it is, of course, I can't. But that's not my fault, is it?"

"You are married?" said the lady.

"I am," I replied.

"That makes it much worse," she said.

"On the contrary, it is my excuse," I said. "It is all owing to my wife. If it were not for her I should be—well—very different."

"She must be a miserable woman," said the lady, "if she knows of your conduct. My heart bleeds for her."

"Not at all," I said. "She is quite happy; as happy as that girl. Now did you ever see a more charming girl?"

I turned and sent a nod in the direction of the girl who was pedaling along quietly just behind the 'bus. She lifted one hand from the handle-bar and waved it to me in friendly response.

"Under the circumstances," I said, "I think I shall speak to her; otherwise I might miss her when I get off at Sloane street. Do you think she would mind?"

"Let me implore you," said my neighbor; "if you do I shall speak to the conductor."

"It would be grossly improper," I said, "unless he happens to be your brother—or your cousin—or—"

The lady sniffed and looked round. But the conductor was not in view.

I leaned down, and the girl looked up inquiringly, riding to the side of the 'bus.

"I am going to get off at Sloane street," I called to her; "will you stop there?"

She nodded, and bending slightly over her handles quickly outstripped the 'bus and rode on past St. George's hospital and down the slope. I leaned back in my seat and watched her appreciatively as she floated away.

"Never in my life," I murmured, "have I seen anyone whom I admire more. A most delightful girl!"

"A most disgraceful incident!" said my neighbor.

"You see," I said, affably, "two people meet—'twas in a crowd—and their hearts rush together like magnets, or poles, or whatever the things are. It is quite clear to me that we were made for one another. Don't you believe in affinities? They are fun."

"It is not a matter for jesting; it is a very serious matter to tamper in this way with the innocence of—"

"I think it is rather a joke," I said.

"It may be a joke for the man—or, rather, he may think so, mistakenly; but you never by any chance think of the girl. And I feel it my duty as a woman to protest against—"

"Bless my soul!" I exclaimed, "I think of the girl always. She is never out of my thoughts."

"The girl!"

"Yes, the girl—that girl. Didn't I explain? O! here we are!"

"Sloane street!" said the conductor.

I jumped up.

"Well, we've had a most interesting conversation," I said. "You see, she's waiting for me at the corner. I knew it. I never underrate my attractions."

As I descended to the pavement, Celia greeted me with a smile of welcome, while the eyes of my late neighbor bored two holes in my back.

"How lucky to meet like this," said Celia. "Where did you see me first?"

"O, in Piccadilly," I replied. "But I couldn't be sure it was you until I saw your face. I want to get some tobacco here, and then we can walk along home together."

"Had an amusing day?" said Celia.

"Excellent," I said, "more particularly the ride down."

"You seemed very much interested in the lady on the 'bus," said Celia, as we stopped outside the tobacconist's. "Did you know her?"

"Never saw her before," I said.

"Right under my very eyes, too," said Celia.

"I couldn't help it," I said. "She seemed to have some objection to me, or to you, or to something or other—seemed to see something wrong in our behavior."

"Didn't she know I was your wife?" asked Celia.

"She didn't know me," I replied.

"But didn't you tell her?" asked Celia.

"Well," I said, "now I come to think of it, I don't believe I did."—Black and White.

Hanged by His Friends.

At Ballarat a ruined gold miner once committed suicide in a dramatic manner. During the time of the gold rush a certain deserted claim was for years held sacred, and the tools strewn about the windlass were left to rust away untouched. A party of 'varsity men, old schoolfellows and of gentle birth, had sunk their shaft there and worked without success until their money was spent. One evening one of them at work at the bottom of the shaft shouted: "Haul up, boys, the time is come at last." They hauled up, and when it came to the top they found their comrade's lifeless body hanging from the chain. He had detached the bucket, tied a noose about his neck, fastened the noose to the chain, and was hanged by his dearest friends. The party had been much liked and respected by the other miners, who would readily have subscribed 1,000 ounces of gold dust to give them a fresh start, but ere the dawn of the next day the whole party had disappeared, leaving their claim in the same state as it lay at the time of the tragedy.—London Telegraph.

Rider Outlasts the Horse.

Bismarck, who had worn himself out in the service of Germany and of his emperor, rarely referred to his labors for the fatherland. One morning he and Emperor William were riding together in the park. They had not gone far when Bismarck complained of fatigue. The emperor, who was quite fresh, said somewhat testily:

"How is that, though I am an older man than yourself, prince, I can always outride you?"

Bismarck's reply was as reproachful as it was epigrammatic.

"Ah, sire," he said, "the rider always outlasts the horse." — Pittsburgh Dispatch.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

The First Crematory.

The first crematory in the northwest will be completed soon at Forest cemetery, in St. Paul. It is being erected by the Crematory association, at a cost of about $8,000, in response to a growing demand for means to care for the bodies of the dead by incineration.

As soon as the building is completed and all the appliances put in place, there will be a cremation, a body having been placed in the vault of the cemetery some time ago with this express understanding, and several others which now lie buried beneath the green sward will probably be disinterred and reduced to ashes by this modern method. Robert Robinson, of Chicago, who is the contractor in charge, and also the inventor of this particular apparatus, will be on hand for the purpose of conducting the first few cremations.

Georgia Stone It Is.

The attorney general has handed down his opinion in the capitol stone question, and it is to the effect that while the commission may have acted unwisely in awarding the contract for Georgia marble, such award does not violate the law of 1895, providing for the use of home stone wherever practicable in public buildings.

This opinion, in the face of the attorney general's letter to the governor, is something of a surprise, but it settles the question unless some citizen who is dissatisfied with the matter sees fit to apply for an injunction and take the case into court.

The day following the decision, Channing Seabury, vice president of the capitol commission, signed the contract for the construction of the new building.

Ordered Off.

The men employed by Halverson, Richardson & Co., of Minneapolis, in constructing the new logging road at Red Lake, had a little experience with the Indians which will not soon be forgotten. They were camping at the mouth of Mud river on the reservation, when a band of Indians swooped down upon them and took all their tools, tents, etc., away from them, and left orders for them to at once leave the reservation. This they did, and all their belongings were restored to them on the condition that they will not go back upon the reservation. The men are now at work constructing the road off of the reservation.

A Variety.

The variety of religious instruction that can be obtained on the streets of Minneapolis of an evening is enough to suit the most varied taste. For instance, one Saturday evening four Mormon elders were holding forth on Fourth street, just off Nicollet avenue; on another corner, across Nicollet, was the Booth-Tucker Salvation army; a block away, on Third street, was the Ballington Booth corps, and on another street was another gospel meeting.

Not Guilty.

Land Office Inspector A. P. Swineford, after thoroughly investigating the charges filed against the land office at Marshall, says they were without foundation. The parties making the charges were attorneys who had lost several important cases which were tried before the register and receiver, and the charges were to the effect that there was collusion between resident attorneys and the officials. The charges have since been retracted.

JOPKINS' MISTAKE.

Cost Him a New Dress and a Pretty Bonnet.

Jopkins had read somewhere that if a woman got hold of a newspaper with a clipping cut out of it, she would never rest until she had procured a complete paper and read the missing item. This struck Jopkins as a very shrewd and Machiavelian plan of exposing this well-known weakness of lovely woman, and he resolved to put it into practice.

So that night, when he went home from the office, there ostentatiously protruded from his coat pocket the day's paper, from which he had neatly cut a paragraph referring to the rings of Jupiter or some such matter.

He threw the paper to one side in a careless way, and after supper he noted with an unholy glee that Mrs. Jopkins had secured it, and was running her eye over the bargain ads, and working her way, after the manner of her sex, through the personals, marriage notices, and back to the telegraphic dispatches.

Presently Jopkins observed a sudden and suspicious frown overcast her face. She had come upon the hiatus made by the waggish penknife. Jopkins reveled with internal hilarity, but preserved an outward appearance of innocent unconsciousness.

"My dear," said Mrs. Jopkins, laying the paper gently aside, "I'm going to run over to Mrs. Hopkins' a minute. I won't be gone long."

She went over to the opposite neighbor's, and while she was gone Jopkins had lots of fun. She came back presently, and Jopkins noticed she carried another paper under her shawl. She went upstairs and Jopkins leaned back in his chair and shook all over with joy.

"Best joke I ever got off," he said to himself. "Won't she be sold when I tell her?"

Mrs. Jopkins remained upstairs about 20 minutes, and when she came down she had on her hat and street dress, and Jopkins felt his knees shake when he looked into her eye.

"Wh—where are you going?" he asked.

"Where am I going?" said his wife. "You want to know where I am going, you deceitful, disreputable, underhanded, depraved, villainous, brutal, wicked, unprincipled, scandalous, abandoned monster? I'm going home to my mother!"

"Wha—what's the matter?" said Jopkins.

"Look at that!" said Mrs. Jopkins, thrusting the paper in his face. "Cut it out to hide it from me, did you? To think that I should ever have married such a ruffian!"

Jopkins looked where her finger pointed and read:

"After the performance of 'The Devil's Auction' last night quite a recherche little supper was given to the leading lady actresses by a few of their admirers. A prominent merchant whose name we withhold is said to have cut up some rather high jinks on the occasion. We wonder if his estimable and charming wife knew of his whereabouts."

A cold shiver ran over Jopkins. He was innocent, but he had neglected to read the other side of the clipping when he cut it out. He began to explain, and the milkman says he was still at it when he called with his regular morning supply of chemicals.

As Mrs. Jopkins was seen a week later wearing an elegant new silk dress, to say nothing of "a dream of a bonnet," it is presumed that the matter was satisfactorily arranged.—Tit-Bits.

COOKING TONGUES.

Something That Every Housekeeper Does Not Know.

Every good housekeeper knows how to soak and boil a smoked beef tongue, but a great many cooks treat a fresh tongue in such a manner that it becomes as flavorless as gelatine.

Properly roasted or braised in stock, a fresh beef or calf's tongue is a delicious meat. It is not remarkable for its nutritious qualities, but, like the tenderloin of beef, the meat is of good flavor if it is carefully cooked and seasoned, and it is always of melting tenderness.

Select a fresh beef tongue for roasting. Wash and trim it thoroughly, and season it with salt and pepper. Wrap a paste around it made of a pint of flour and a cupful of water. Roll out this paste thin and wrap it around the tongue. Lay it on a meat rack in a dripping pan, with a pint of boiling water. Roast it for about two hours. Keep the surface of the paste from drying too hard or from burning by basting it with the boiling water in the bottom of the dripping pan. At the end of this time remove the paste. It is of no further value. Loosen the skin of the tongue and peel it off. It should come off easily. Lay it back in the pan, rub it freely with butter, dredge it lightly with flour, and pour a little rich brown stock in the pan under it to baste it with. Roast it, basting it often, until it is well browned. Take it up. Add mushrooms to the brown gravy in the dripping pan, thicken it and serve with the tongue. The mushrooms, of course, may be omitted, but they add a great deal to the flavor of the tongue. Spinach is a delicious vegetable to serve with roast tongue. Pickles and piquant sauces are always appropriate.—N. Y. Tribune.

The Blouse Fad.

The loose waists take all kinds of tucks and ruffles and dressmakers are putting them on the latest silk waists just as they did two months ago. Ruches of chiffon trim a pompadour striped silk and a satin sash, the ruches edging a bolero and collar; loose vest of chiffon as well. One of the stylish blue China silks having white polka dots has a ten-inch ruffle curved across the front and higher at the back with a quill ruching of No. 12 white ribbon laid in quadruple box plaits. The sleeves have lace insertion in wavy rows up to the silk epaulettes edged with lace like the wrist and collar. Belt of white ribbon and sash ends of silk; tiny jacket scrolled with lace inserting and bordered with ribbon quilling; loose vest of white silk covered with applique, cluny or valenciennes piece lace completes the garment.—Dry Goods Economist.

For the Kitchen Sink.

SHE WANTED SNAKES.

The Regulation Kind That Are Seen in Delirium Tremens.

"Do you keep snakes?" she asked, as she peered through her glasses at the parrots and Guinea pigs in the bird store.

"I have a Gila monster and some chameleons," said the bird man.

"I don't think they would answer. You see what I want is a regular snake, one of the long field kind that are not poisonous. I may as well tell you that my husband has taken to drinking and I want the snake to put in his boots."

"If I were you," said the man, "I'd wait and if he keeps on drinking he'll see snakes anyhow."

"No, he won't, and he wouldn't care if he did if they weren't real. But if he sees a live snake he'll quit, and I'm going to try it on. Couldn't you get me some?"

"Yes'm, I can fill an order. If you call around to-morrow you can get the snakes," and the man took down the address of his customer.

"It's a test case," he said, as the woman went out, "and I feel sort of curious to know how it will turn out. My idea is that the husband will be so mad when he finds the snakes in his boots that he'll go out and get drunk as a biled owl, but maybe it will work the other way—we'll hope it will."

Then he sent his boy out to hunt for snakes in the hedges and ditches of the prairie.—Chicago Times-Herald.

A Ruined Reputation.

"And you say," said the Sympathetic Person, looking down from the elevation of the doorstep upon the latest applicant for suburban charity, "that you have honestly done your best to find employment?"

"I have, madam."

"You have a regular vocation?"

"I was formerly an expressman."

"In what city?"

"In Boston."

"But, surely, at this season of the year you ought to find work enough as an expressman in a large city like Boston."

"Madam, you do not know Boston. You have heard of the Bacchante? Yes? Then it is only necessary to tell you that I am one of the expressmen who carried her to the station."

"But I do not see—"

"The fact became generally known, madam. From that moment I have ceased to be respectable. There is no one in Boston who will now employ me."—Boston Budget.

The Ruling Spirit.

The story is told of a Yankee housewife, who was extremely neat, that she woke one night at the sound of her husband creeping softly out of bed and toward the light-stand.

"What's the matter, William?" she whispered.

"Sh!" he whispered; "there's a burglar coming up the front stairs, and I'm getting my revolver!"

All was silence again, in the midst of which William crept noiselessly to the head of the stairs. Presently there was a loud report, followed by a mad scurrying of feet; then the husband came back, lighted a lamp and returned to the stairway.

"O William, William, did he—"

"Yes, he got away," said the husband.

"Oh, I don't care so much about that," the woman said, "but William, did he—"

"Did he what?"

"Did he wipe his feet before he started up the stairs?"—Youth's Companion.

Where He Agreed with Him.

"What! What!"

The irate old man choked with indignation—

"You want to steal my child from me, to rob me of my daughter? Why sir!—"

His rage got the upper hand of him, and he gasped some more—

"Rascal is no name for you!"

The young man was perfectly calm. "You bet it isn't," he said, slowly; "and if anybody says otherwise there's liable to be trouble."

"This here speculatin' in wheat on the stock exchange is gamblin' pure and simple," said the farmer, who was a deacon and a strict disciplinarian, "an' the Lord won't prosper them that wins by it."

"Well, father," replied his son, "I'm sorry to hear that, for I placed that money you gave me and made $900 by the deal."

The old man coughed, wiped his glasses, and then said:

"Well, well! Providence does work in mysterious ways! The parson wuz sayin' last week that the church needed paintin', an' besides—thar's a mortgage on the farm that orter be lifted, an' one o' two other little accounts that's got ter be squared. Well, well!"—Atlanta Constitution.

That Terrible Scourge.

Malarial disease is invariably supplemented by disturbance of the liver, the bowels, the stomach and the nerves. To the removal of both the cause and the effects Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is fully adequate. It "fills the bill" as no other remedy does, performing its work thoroughly. Its ingredients are pure and wholesome, and it admirably serves to build up a system broken by ill health and shorn of strength. Constipation, liver and kidney complaint and nervousness are conquered by it.

Webster's Last Words.

Webster's last words were: "I still live." A teacher in one of the East side schools had been reading anecdotes of the great lexicographer to her pupils, and the next day, catechising them on what she had read, she asked:

"What were Webster's last words?"

There was deep silence, and she repeated the question. Finally a little fellow with a squint in his left eye held up his hand.

"Well, Mulvaney," said the teacher, kindly, "do you know?"

"Yessum," said Mulvaney, confidently. "He said 'I ain't dead yet.'"—N. Y. World.

TO MOTHERS OF LARGE FAMILIES.

Mrs. Pinkham's Advice Free.

In this workaday world few women are so placed that physical exertion is not constantly demanded of them in their daily life.

Mrs. Pinkham makes a special appeal to mothers of large families whose work is never done, and many of whom suffer and suffer for lack of intelligent aid.

To women, young or old, rich or poor, Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., extends her invitation of free advice. Oh, women! do not let your lives be sacrificed when a word from Mrs. Pinkham, at the first approach of weakness, may fill your future years with healthy joy.

Mrs. A. C. Buhler, 1123 North Albany avenue, near Humboldt Park, Chicago, Ill., says: "I am fifty-one years old and have had twelve children, and my youngest is eight years old. I have been suffering for some time with a terrible weakness; that bearing-down feeling was dreadful, and I could not walk any distance. I began the use of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and Sanative Wash and they have cured me. I cannot praise your medicine enough."

BUFFALO GAZETTE

DELANO, FRIDAY, SEPT. 24, 1897.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE VILLAGE OF DELANO.

DELANO DIARY

—Mr. Billings, who has had Montana horses for sale here, left this morning.

—Fred Knoll has been struck by prosperity and is rejuvinating his old residence.

—Mrs. Billings has opened her restaurant on River Street and is ready for business.

—Nick Frank has a crew at work on his new office building adjoining his agricultural depot.

—For sale, a span of mares; good for a farm team, or good on the road. Apply at this office.

—Gunn and Kerr have nearly completed the transformation of the noted Delano skating rink into a fine lumber shed.

—Several severe frosts this week have cured corn fodder and hurried up cane cutting, and spoiled some gardens.

—Read C. R. Carleton's notice "Lost! Reward!" He lost his pocket book yesterday, and would like to find it, very much.

—Presiding Elder Chaffee held Quarterly Conference at the M. E. parsonage yesterday. Officers for the ensuing year were elected.

—Delano day at the County Fair is Thursday Sept. 30. The Cornet band is to be there and Delano and vicinity are counted on to make Delano Day the day of the fair.

—Come to my agricultural depot, the New Idea, for a Dandy Wind Mill. I've sold four this week and expect to sell six more. For good wagons give me a call. NICK FRANK.

—Farmers who have their crops out of the way are now engaged in plowing; in sowing rye, hauling manure onto corn ground, and in other useful and profitable occupations about their business.

—One of Jim Hills big mountain engines passed through town this morning on its way west. It was a monster in size, said to weigh over 130 tons. The top of the boiler would reach two or three feet above one of the big hog engines.

—Carl Hildebrand met with quite a serious accident Monday. He caught his finger while working with the engine at the Eagle office, in such a manner as to tear it open for seeveral inches. He had it sewed up and is recovering from the shock quite nicely.

—John Cunningham has concluded to live another year in Minneapolis, and offers for sale at auction on Wednesday, Oct. 20, at noon, at his farm, on the Watertown road, a team of horses and his farming implements and some household utensils. Read his notice in another column.

—Several cases of typhoid fever have made their appearance in the Township of Franklin. Peter Kittock's boy, Theodore has it; Mat Schaust's Anthony is also sick with it, and we hear that Pete Mahollo has it. It is well to be careful to have pure drinking water. If the water is doubtful it should be boiled.

—A fine piana arrived Thursday for Michael Frank's children to drum on. Mr. F. proposes to furnish the means for developing latent musical talents in his family It is not likely that in buying the instrument he dealt with one of these sharks we read about who sell $500 pianos worth about $150; getting their cash for actual value and a note for the balance. He reads the papers, and farms, and his children deserve to become musicians if their tastes run that way.

—We don't claim prophetic powers, But it looks to us as if farmers who have a few bushels of grain to sell and can get about twice as much for it as they could last fall they ought to sell and to pay debts made last fall, and which they have postponed paying because grain was cheap.

If prices should go down It would be as hard to pay the old debts as it would have been when they were made and new ones would have to be made with prices higher. Better square up as far as possible; then if necessity compels more credit to be obtained it can more easily be had. But if wheat is held for months, then sold at low figures, merchants will be shy of trusting out goods. "Sufficient to the day is the evil thereof." As soon as grain speculators have held the farmers off until they have satisfied themselves that crops in other lands are going to be good then they will begin to beat down prices. In case foreign crops should turn out poor, of course there might be a rise. It is risky waiting when prices are fair.

Sold Cigarets to Minors.

Frequent complaints regarding the sale of cigarets to children at the Clay and Peabody schools culminated in the arrest yesterday of a young man who is proprietor of a cigar store at 1900 Washington avenue south. His name in the warrant is given as John Doe. He furnished bail to appear in court today. It is alleged that he sold the deadly cigaret to James Burns and Thomas Tobin, school boys not over 15 years of age.

The present law in regard to the matter prohibits the sale of tobacco to any person under 18 years of age, and provides a fine not to exceed $50 for its violation.—Minneapolis Times.

Personal.

Uncle Ben Parmeter, of Buffalo, made us a pleasant call Thursday.

Mrs. Cassel and children, of Lyndale, visited town Tuesday on business.

Rev. Fletcher, of Buffalo, was a caller, while on his first trip to Delano, yesterday.

We hear that Editor Rank passed through town this week. He should have called.

Earl Hoisington and wife, of Independence, was a Delano visitor, on business, Wednesday.

Mrs. Tom Rader and her sister Allie Murphy returned home this week from their trio to Buffalo N. Y.

Mrs. A. G. Jones, who has been visiting at Steward for about a week, returned home, Wednesday evening.

Mesdames William Stacy and William Douglas, of Montrose, attended quarterly conference here yesterday.

Elijah Gross, of Minneapolis, drove up and spent about a week with his brother, Wm. Gross and family of this week.

Mr. and Mrs. John Cunningham, of Minneapolis, visited friends in Delano Tuesday, returning home Wednesday morning.

Elmer Erickson has arrived home with a fractured collar bone. A bicycle injury. The wonder here is that he hadn't broke his neck or somebody elses long ago.

Rev. B. F. Kephart and wife, of Hamline, visited Delano friends Monday. Mr. K. used to preach for the Methodists here more than twenty years ago. He has traveled much since. He has a lecture on Africa he would give us sometime if asked.

—E. J. Swedeback, who was very ill, is reported as rapidly recovering.

County Cullings.

Conductor Billy Barrett, of Wayerly, lost a foot at Granite Falls, yesterday.

The GAZETTE'S for the east and the single wrappers, for some reason made the trip west, on the evening train, and were returned here Saturday morning. They were sent west again Saturday at 10:36 a. m. If they failed to give subscribers all the news when they did arrive it was not for the lack of having traveled.

The Aanandale Post, published Thursday did not find its way to Delano subscribers until Monday. That's too long. It would be more convenient for country places to have the old stage routes than to wait for their weekly paper till the next week while it is carried to the cities and returned, unless it can be done a little more promptly.

Farm Stock and Home: The dollar the wheat seller now gets is a "cheap and nasty" one, compared with last year, for it takes but little more than half the wheat to buy it; but he pays as much debt with it as he did before, which ought to make him ashamed of himself, to so "wrong the creditor."

Some one has been telling the Minneapolis Journal that two of Jim Hill's men were interested in Robbing the cattle train at Smith Lake one morning earley, this week. This is a serious charge. Jim should see that his employes don't get any such name as that. People would be afraid to ride with his cars if he has such men to work for him. It seems that the robbers got on to the train at Smith Lake but the hold up occurred about a mile and a half east of Delano.

Among Our Exchanges.

O. L. Dudley has commenced suit against the village of Buffalo for $1,200 damages for overflowing his park.

The Prison Mirror: Frank T. Hamilton, editor of the Messenger, Maple Lake, Minn., and his wife were callers at our office on Saturday while making a tour of the prison.

Annandale Post: The Buffalo Standard is a newspaper just started by F. B. Lamson. While we much doubt the wisdom of adding another in the present overcrowded field, we wish Bro. Lamson the success he deserves.

Howard Lake Herald: Archie Gilmer Sr., was committed to St. Peter's Hospital. Wednesday as the result of an examination in this village on that day conducted by Judge J. J. Woolley, county attorney Pidgeon being also present. He was taken to St. Peter by constable Johnson.

Minneapolis Times: Donnelly says in his last Representative that many voters are prejudiced against the democratic party on account of its record during the war. Did he find that out when he was democratic candidate for congress, or when he has had democratic support for the legislature?

Minneapolis Tribune: The Atlanta Constitution says the conservative people of the South unanimously condemn the shooting of the negro post master at Hogansville, but at the same time declare that McKinley's policy of appointing negroes to office in the South means negro domination as far as the adminigtration can bring it about. This seems to be making a mountain out of a mole hill. How much can a negro postmaster in a little one-horse village "dominate?"

Litchfield Independent: Frank B. Lamson has been appointed postmaster at Buffalo, the county seat of Wright County. It is only a few years since Frank was a young school master residing at the old townsite of Collinwood. He married a Scandinavian lady, drifted over the line into Wright county and got into politics. He held the office of auditor for two terms or three, going out of office last January. Now he blossoms out as postmaster at Buffalo. We are sorry for Frank, as he is a good fellow all round, but we are afraid he has contracted the office holding disease.

Carver County News: The statement is made that Canadian fed hogs bring nearly $2 per hundred more in foreign markets than the American fed hog. This is a subject for our hog raisers to consider and endeavor to remedy. The reason for this is that the American hog is too fat to suit the taste of foreign pork eaters, caused by the heavier feeding practiced in this country. In Canada the hog fattened for market is fed largely on peas, roots, grass, etc., producing a leaner and more desirable meat for the table. In our country, especially in the great corn belt, the hog is fed on that grain, and the product gives a rich yield in lard, but even in our home markets the meat is not so popular as in the past.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. Sept. 17, 1897.

The Hanna-McKinley combine do not wish Secretary Sherman to take the stump in Ohio; they are afraid that he will say something that ought not to be said, either about the alleged Cuban policy or about the various indignities which have been put upon him since he was forced out of the Senate and into the Cabinet. Knowing the old man to possess the stubbornness characteristic of the Sherman family they have not attempted to bulldoze him into not making speeches in the Ohio campaign, but have attacked him upon his weakest side. For many years Mr. Sherman has been one of the greatest sticklers for a maintenance of the proprieties of official life, and that is what the Hanna-Mckinley combine has been working on. How much they have impressed the old man may be judged from his reply when asked how soon he was going to Ohio and what part he expected to take in the campaign. He said he did not expect to be in the state before the first of October, and that it was not certain that he would take any part in the campaign, and that it was not customary for the Secretary of State to make political speeches. If somebody doesn't open his eyes Mr. Sherman will make no speeches.

Boss Platt came over from New York this week to urge upon McKinley the speedy appointment of the Platt candidates for the Federal offices in New York which have not yet been filled with republicans. He told Mr. Mc Kinley that he wanted the prestige of naming these officers now, for the assistance it would give him in the greater New York municipal campaign; and if he was not to be allowed to name them, he wanted to know at the earliest possible moment. It is understood that Mr. Platt talked to Mr. McKinley more like a man who had the right to demand things than one who asked them as a favor, and that his men are going to be appointed. Platt wants to get Secretary Bliss to resign and become his candidate for Mayor of greater New York

Notwithstanding the protests of the subcommittee of the Senate committee on Pacific railroads, the syndicate that is after the Union Pacific Railroad will get it under the decree of the U. S. Circuit court of the Eighth District, ordering the road to be sold. The Senators who conferred with the Attorney General asked that the matter be held up until congress met, and pointed out that it could easily be done by the government taking an appeal from the circuit to the Supreme Court, but the members of the purchasing syndicate are men of influence in republican circles and when the question was brought before Mr. Mc Kinley and his Cabinet it was speedily decided that no appeal should be taken and that the policy of the government should be hands off. This may seem strange to some people, in view of the very positive statements made on the floor of the Senate by Mr. Morgan, of Ala., and others who have made careful study of this mater, that this sale would mean the loss of million of dollars to the U. S. and to other creditors of the road, but it really isn't strange; it is merely cause and effect.

The decision of Judge Cox, in the case of Woods against the Postmaster General, that the recent civil service rules promulgated by Mr. McKinley have no authority in law, and that the legal right of the head of a government department to remove his subordinates without giving any reason therefore, was hardly in print before the Civil Service Commission, which is credited with responsibility for the authorship of the rule that no dismissal should be made from the classified service except upon written charges-the rule upon which Woods based his suit-made public a statement trying to break the force of the decision by saying that it did not affect the binding power of the President's order upon all officials. Intelligent persons may decide for themselves how "binding an order will be which has been declared by a court to be illegal.

The experiments of shipping American butter to London made by the Agricultural Department have not been a financial success. Complete reports for the last shipment have been received and they show that the Massachusetts butter, which is sold where it is made for 20 cents a pound, only brought 13½ cents a pound in London, and the Minnesota butter was sold to London wholesalers for 18 1-5 cents a pound. The greed of the London retailer is given as an excuse for the small prices, but, inasmuch as there is no practical way for the American dairymen to compel London retailers to accept a smaller profit and give them the benefit by paying larger wholesale prices, it is not a valid one.

Courts Disagree.

The supreme court of Wisconsin has turned down Judge Bailey of Eau Claire for arbitrary and despotic methods. Judge Bailey undertook to imprison an editor and a correspondent of the same paper for having commented unfavorably upon his action after the action was completed. He thought to imprison them for contempt, but the supreme court overules him. The supreme court holds that if there can be any more effectual way to gag the press and subvert freedom of speech than that which Judge Bailey tried to enforce, it would like to know it. Judge Bailey furnishes and illustration of the fact that men often get on to the bench, who lose no time in proving themselves too small to properly understand and maintain the dignity of their position. To them is due the credit for much of the prevalent disrespect for and lack of confidence in the courts.—Minneapolis Journal.

RT. REV. JAMES TROBEC was installed third Bishop of St. Cloud last Tuesday.

WE are in receipt of a copy of The Times, The Mining Number, of Los Angeles. Cal. It has 16 pages and is quite a readable paper. It contains a good deal of information about mines.

WONDER if the National Democrats won't try to get petitions enough to allow Ex-Indian Commissioner Baldwin a place at the head of the ticket for state officers next fall. He appears to be kicking considerable.

THERE seems to be considerable opposition to the nominating of Page Morris for a second term in Congress from this dittrict. The Minneapolis Journal, out of the district, is defending Page Morris in great style, and at the same time announcing to those not already in to the mysteries of politics that the dissatisfaction must be overcome, etc. etc. It says Page saved the district last time and the party owes him some more.

NOW that the Republican League has succeeded in getting John Goodnow sent to China, Billy Culkin to Duluth, and a few more office seekers to distant lands, Mike Dowling threatens to adjourn, sine die, because his pay has stopped coming. He seems, however to have made some kind of a bargain with Mark Hanna to contract his usefulness to the Buckeye state until after the Ohio election, when if he finds his Mark has been missed he will probably find some little country printing office and go to work again.

LATER.—Reports say Mike has become president of a Renville bank.

FROM reports a man in the Klondike region gave $60 for a fish and other articles of food are reported as being sold at about the same rate as compared with prices here. They seem to have more gold than food, and gold's "intrinsic value" we hear so much about won't keep people there from freezing, or starving, until they exchange it for something that has the qualities necessary for comfort.

Why is gold so cheap there that you can get $60 worth for a small fish? Or why is food so high there that a fellow must give such big prices for something to eat? Does anybody believe it is on account of the tariff? Or do they attribute this state of affairs to the law of supply and demand?

County Fair.

Being unable to attend the fair on Thursday, Delano day, we went on Wednesday, Annandale day. The weather was fine; but if the authorities had sprinkled a few pails of water about the grounds they would have laid the dust and made it much more agreeable. There was quite a turnout of people; but the stock mostly remained at home, except just enough to carry off first and second prizes. Morgan & Co., merchants of Howard Lake had a splendid exhibition, as did several other branches of trade. Frank Hertan had over twenty kinds of fine apples and some other exhibits. Others whose names we did not learn had some fruit.

The wheel of fortune, and a few other fakes raked in dimes and amused some.

The races were good. Some fast horses were on the ground, and the track in excellent condition, and good time was made.

The Watertown and Wayerly base ball clubs were arranging for a game; but as the train leaves at 3:30 P. M. we could not wait for them to even get started.

The poultry display was good but very small.

There seems to be a lack of interest on the part of farmers to exhibit their products. Some say it is because all the money is spent on horse racing, while the premiums offered for stock and other things are insufficient even if obtained to pay for the expense and trouble of exhibiting.

We would like to see a genuine old fashioned fair, where everybody brings the best of their products and competes for a good big prize. Why, all the boys in the country would be vieing with each other as to who would have the finest melons, corn, calves, colts chickens and other farm products; while all the young ladies would come with their baskets of bread, butter, cake, pie, with specimens of sewing, knitting and other handiwork and somebody would get a prize worth having, for something worth doing, and there would be an object in life for agriculturists additional to what they now have, and they would have enough more money to allow them, if they chose to spend it that way to attend horse races, wheels of fortune, etc., etc., on other occasions.

Among editors present were H. Tanner, C. A. French, W. N. Frank, I. Gutzwiller, and T. J. Catlin.

Poor Rule That Won't Work Both Ways.

"Kansas is still incredulous concerning her own good fortune. No wonder. It is seldom that a state bids so high for adversity and gets prosperity in spite of herself."—Pioneer Press.

If Kansas is booming as the Pioneer Press would have us believe who knows but it is on account of their wisdom at home? And that they are booming in spite of National legislation contrary to their beliefs? Any way, if she is booming, let her. Don't stop her.

Doctoring Cholera Hogs.

I want to warn my brother farmers not to spend any money on "sure cures" of hog cholera. There are, in my opinion, no such things. I have tried everything that offered, bought and gave them with faith enough to move a common hill if not a mountain, but I never realized a cent's worth of benefit, nor have any of my neighbors. Clean, healthful conditious around yard and pens, careful feeding of a varied diet, and keeping out infection are the only remedies for hog cholera so far discovered, according to my knowledge and belief.—W. K. Thrumb, Iowa, In Farm Stock and Home.

Farmer Thoughts.

Mr. Editor. To whom this may come, greeting to the Jew first and also to the Gentile.

We read in the book of prophesy that perilous times shall come; there shall be wars and rumors of wars; nations shall be angry, etc. Where are we now? Is not prophesy being fulfilled? If not, "What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears and the lowing of the oxen which I hear?"

Farmers are looking for a rise in wheat, and also for a rise in prosperity; but looking for a rise in prosperity will be like looking for a needle in a hay stack. It is not coming this way just now. It has gone around by the Klondike, and will not be here until 1900.

Certain people and many of the newspapers are trying to make the farmers believe that the Dingley bill and the rise in wheat has brought lasting prosperity. Pray tell me what there is in sight to build up prosperity save a few million bushels of wheat, and how much will that amount to when scattered among seventy million people. No doubt it will help out a little, but it will be as a mushroom by the wayside; will last quick.

How can a duty of 25cents on a bushel of wheat help the farmer. We produce wheat for export. We are a wheat growing country. We do not import wheat unless we should have a wheat famine, then the farmer as well as well as others would have to pay a high price for their bread stuff.

Who is benefited by a two dollar duty on lumber? Nobody save the lumber dealer. Even the government gets no revenue out of it.

The Dingley bill was intended to play good Lord or good devil and it will finally die of its own weakness.

The tariff has been a hobby horse ever since the formation of this government, yes a hobby horse to ride into office on.

The time has come when this country needs brains and business. Everybody seems to be after the fleece and they care not what becomes of the flock.

This fall the political battle ground will be in the state of Ohio. Mark Hanna is now training his troops for the great conflict. Money and manipulation is at the head of the army. Can Mark Hanna, from an honest heart repeat the words of St. Paul: "I have coveted no man's silver or gold or apparel." If you have not, Mr. Hanna, please hold up your hand.

The wheat crop of Minnesota is not as good as reported by many of the newspapers in quantity and quality. The wheat is not as good as last year.

So there will be but few mortgage debts paid out of the present crop of wheat. The family must first be provided for as to food and clothing, and many small debts must be paid in order to keep off a judgement, but by prudence and economy the farmer will get along, and he will have something to spare but will hardly be able to set himself up in the banking business.

Hard times will look many a poor fellow in the face the coming winter. It is not high protection the country is so much in need of as it is wise and just legislation for the masses. Some people will be satisfied if they have only a good living. But there are others that want the earth, and are not willing that the poor devil should even have the sky for a covering.

A FARMER.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. Sept. 24, 1897.

Mr. McKinley and his Attorney General are in New England just in time to receive the thanks of the numerous persons in that section who will be largely benefitted financially by the construction the Attorney General, under direct orders from Mr. McKinley, has placed upon Section 22 of the new tariff law. It has long been a saying around Washington that "New England never gets left in tariff legislation." For a time it looked as though that saying would prove false, because it seemed certain that the discriminating duties prescribed by section 22 would be levied upon importations from other countries that come into the United States through any portion of Canada. It was stated that Attorney General Mc Kenna favored that construction, which Senator Elkins declares was what those who framed the section intended, but New England influences were brought to bear upon Mr. Mc Kinley and he promptly responded—he will need New England support in the next republican convention. The result is the opinion of the Attorney General, which will be accepted as law by the Treasury officials who administer the tariff, declaring that the section does not impose a discriminating duty on importations from other countries shipped through canada; nor upon importations from countries other than British possessions shipped in British vessels. Senator Elkins announces his intention to make a fight in Congress for legislation that will compel the collection of discriminating duties upon the class of importations exempted by the Attorney General's opinion, but with the administration against him he is not likely to make much headway. It is probable that he is only making a bluff, anyway.

It was an absolute waste of breath for Secretary Sherman to deny the truth of the story cabled from Europe, that this government had sent an ultimatum to Spain saying that the war in Cuba must be ended before the last of October, or this government would take steps to secure the independence of Cuba. It was very well known to every person who had watched the antics of this administration upon Cuban matters that no such prompt and businesslike policy had been put into effect, although the administration may have some such story sprung upon the public a day or two before the Ohio election and allow it to go undenied until after the votes are counted.

Speaking of the Ohio campaign, it looks now as though Boss Hanna had succeeded with his little scheme to put a muzzle on John Sherman until after the election in that State. All along Mr. Sherman has stated it to be his intention to make speeches in Ohio, and he reiterated that intention, even after Mr. McKinley had hinted to him that he had doubts of the propriety of the Secretary of State making stump speeches, but the old man has been silenced some way, and this week he said that he had about decided that the state of his health would not permit him to take any part in the Ohio campaign. Some day the whole story of the manner in which John Sherman has been treated by Boss Hanna and Mr. Mc Kinley will get out, and you may be sure it will make interesting reading.

Eleven more or less eminent advocates of the single gold standard and enemies of bimetallism, international or independent, met in Washington this week, and with all the egotism of the tailors of Tooley Street, who it will be remembered, styled themselves "we, the people," and organized themselves into a monetary conferance, under authority of a resolution adopted by the gold bankers convention that met at Indianapolis last January. This job is also being bossed by Hanna, but not big Boss Hanna. Mr. H. H. Hanna of Indianapolis, who hagged Mr. McKinley into sending that special message to Congress, just before adjournment, asking for authority to appoint a monetary commission, is the boss of this outfit. Congress ignored that recommendation, but a little thing like that didn't worry this Mr. Hanna, who proceeded to appoint a monetary commission of his own, and he is actually foolish enough to believe that Congress will pay serious attention to the recommendations it will make, which are certain to be antagonistic to silver.

Waseca Herald: As a matter of fact and law, and as stated by the late secretary of the treasury, the silver dollar is not redeemable in gold or in any other kind of money, and yet it is just as good as the gold dollar, although we are told every day that the silver in a silver dollar is only worth 42 cents in gold. Queer, isn't it. Will some of the gold-bugs explain how these facts can exist and why they exist?

Sherbourn County Star News: This section of country is being pretty thoroughly denuded of stock of all kinds from a veal calf to a fat steer. The good prices and scarcity of hay are inducements to sell that the farmer cannot resist.

Duluth Herald: By reason of a law passed by the last legislature of Ohio lynching is likely to become unpopular in that state. Heirs of lynched persons are entitled to sue for $5,000. When taxpaysrs go down into their pockets for the ducats, it is not probable they will be anxious to contract the bill. A test of the law is about to be made at Urbana.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—
No. 9, No. 9.

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

The Carlisle (Pa.) school is helping to solve the Indian problem. There are this year 600 Indian pupils enrolled.

In New Jersey the feeling against gamblers and their various methods has lead to a constitutional amendment to prohibit gambling, which will be voted on this fall.

Nevada is the most sparsely settled state in America. There are nearly 2½ square miles to each inhabitant; next comes Idaho, with one inhabitant to each square mile.

An eastern scientist has discovered that "kissing is a cure for dyspepsia." The chances are that dyspepsia will be the most popular disease in sight, and drugs of the apothecary will mold and go to ruin.

On the eve of returning home, Lord Kelvin remarks that this country leads the world in the development of electricity as a motive power. It is a great achievement in the opinion of the famous British scientist.

A Florida paper says the tobacco crop in the state this year will bring $10,000,000, in addition to which there will be 300,000 crates of pineapples, to say nothing of vegetables, melons, turpentine, lumber and a "pretty good smattering of oranges."

Electric railway equipments have been ordered from this country in Dublin, Bristol, Coventry and several Australian cities, as well as London. Our inventors and skilled workers in this field are apparently without any rivalry in the world.

According to an old tradition the British frigate Hussar, which sank in East river in 1780, carried an immense treasure in gold, and divers have been interested accordingly. A recent thorough search of the records proves that there was no gold on the ship when she went down. After 117 years investigation began at the right end of the story.

C. M. Bailey, the Winthrop (Me.) oilcloth manufacturer, deserves a vacation. He recently told a reporter that in the 48 years he had been in business he never had taken a holiday himself or closed his shops. And he now has men working for him who have been in his employ the whole 48 years, though most of them have had both holidays and vacations.

A new French machine called a menometer registers a man's will power and shows the intensity of his thought. When a person near it goes against a hard mental proposition the registering needle jumps around like a nervous man in the presence of an annoyed hornet; but in the presence of an idiot the needle clings to zero like a thumb tack to a bicycle tire.

The electric light is comparatively a new star in the sky, but there was $100,000,000 of invested capital represented by the Edison illuminating companies recently convened at Niagara Falls. The Niagara cataract itself is an illustration of the extent of the use of electricity as a motive power, which not many years ago was confined to Jersey lightning in a bottle.

For some years Uncle Sam has been breeding reindeer in Alaska. The government farm is on the lower Yukon, and now contains over 1,000 reindeer, and none of the animals ever are put to work. It would seem as if this was the time to harness up the bucks and let them help develop the country. They could doubtless be used with great profit upon the frozen rivers during the coming winter.

The oldest postmaster, who is found at Hammondsville Station, O., has been giving some recollections of his service of 68 years under 34 postmasters-general. He remembers the time when mail robbing was a capital offense, and he saw two men hanged for the crime at Balitimore. Sixty-six years ago he was a passenger over the first 13 miles of railroad built in the United States by the Baltimore & Ohio. The speed was ten miles an hour. This venerable official of 86 formerly charged 25 cents postage on a letter carried 400 miles. Stop and think what two cents will do now.

Recent remarks on the powerful effect of extreme hot weather on the brain have called forth from a man his personal experience. One day after applying himself intensely to the study of geometry, he ate his dinner like one in a dream, and finally rushed upon his brother with a pocket knife, and the brother only saved himself by flight, this, happily, breaking the spell. Here is a new opportunity for criminal lawyers. A sudden solar seizure ought to be more serviceable to them than hypnotism. Perhaps with a little expert assistance it can also be made to cover a polar wave.

Within the memory of man by no means old "2:40 on the plank road" was an expression significant of the highest speed to be attained by a pacer or a trotter. Mr. Bonner's faith in the invincibility of Dexter and his 2:16½ or 2:17 is also of comparatively recent date. Yet here we have Star Pointer pacing a mile in 1:59¾, with the probability that faster time would have been attained but for a momentary faltar at the head of the stretch. It would be idle to say that this record is to stand for any length of time. Performances on the turf have been so marvelous that prophets are chary of predictions.

INTERESTING NEWS COMPILATION.

FROM WASHINGTON.

In the forthcoming reports of bureau chiefs of the navy department the necessity of increasing the personnel of the navy will be presented to congress.

The first meeting of the monetary commission appointed under the authority of the convention of business men held last January in Indianapolis was held in Washington. Ex-Senator George F. Edmunds, of Vermont, was chosen chairman.

The navy department sent orders to San Francisco to have the gunboat Wheeling sent to Honolulu.

Advices to the state department show that there are more than 10,000 Europeans and Americans resident in China.

The bureau of statistics of the treasury department says the total imports of dutiable sugar during the last fiscal year were 4,381,403,687 pounds, valued at $85,901,902.

THE EAST.

In a fire in a grocery store at Chester, Pa., six persons were seriously injured by the explosion of a barrel of gasoline.

At the leading clearing houses in the United States the exchanges during the week ended on the 24th aggregated $1,368,804,677, against $1,386,354,242 the previous week. The increase compared with the corresponding week of 1896 was 60.6.

In the United States there were 209 business failures in the seven days ended on the 24th, against 204 the week previous and 315 in the corresponding period of 1896.

In an interview in Boston Lieut. Peary, the explorer, said that he should start on his next polar expedition in the latter part of July, 1898, and that he would reach the north pole or lose his life in the attempt.

In the National league the percentages of the baseball clubs for the week ended on the 24th were: Baltimore, .704; Boston, .703; New York, .638; Cincinnati, .571; Cleveland, .531; Brooklyn, .465; Washington, .460; Pittsburgh, .448; Chicago, .441; Philadelphia, .419; Louisville, .402; St. Louis, 218.

The new steamer of the North German line, Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, made the trip from Bremen to New York in 5 days, 22 hours and 45 minutes, making a new record.

Arthur W. May, aged 24, killed Cora Kaseman, aged 18, and then took his own life at Shamokin, Pa. Refusal of the parents of the girl to allow them to marry was the cause.

In Maine severe earthquake shocks were felt at Belfast, Ellsworth, Bangor and several other towns.

A BLOODY RIOT.

Polanders at Girardville, Pa., Fight All Night.

Three Men Are Reported Dead—Thirty-Six Were Wounded, of Whom It Is Thought Nine Will Die.

Girardville, Pa., Sept. 28.—At least nine men received fatal injuries and possibly two score others were more or less seriously wounded in a bloody riot here late Sunday night and early Monday morning. The battle was the outcome of a quarrel over the Hazleton troubles. Thirty-six men are known to have been wounded and about 50 more are being secreted by their friends who fear that they will be sent to jail. Twelve of the ring leaders were brought before Justice Elias Kissinger, and ten before Justice H. B. Johnson. All were charged with assault with intent to kill, house breaking and rioting and were held in heavy bail for court. Many more warrants have been issued, but have not been served as yet.

Three Reported Dead.

Dr. Charles Schlesman attended to 22 of the wounded, nine of whom, he says, will die. Drs. William Monaghan and James Donaghue attended to 14 others, and how many the other physicians cared for is not known. Three other men have been reported dead, but this cannot be verified yet on account of the uncommunicative nature of the participants. The story of the riot is as follows:

Story of the Riot.

Several hundred Polanders board at William Culacabbage's hotel on Second street. Joseph Cavendish is proprietor of a hotel at the east end of town, where several hundred more Polanders make their headquarters. Bad blood has existed between them for a long time, and the recent strike troubles at Hazleton embittered them still more. Sunday night matters came to a crisis. Culacabbage, it is charged, and his followers to the number of several hundred, arming themselves with guns, revolvers, knives, axes and clubs, marched to Cavendish's hotel, where several hundred of their enemies were celebrating pay day. The Cavendish men ascertained that their foes were marching on them and, arming themselves hurriedly, awaited their arrival. After a demonstrative march the Culacabbage contingent arrived and immediately stormed the saloon.

Then a bloody battle ensued. The men fought like demons; the shooting was fast and furious—axes, knives, clubs and other weapons were used with deadly effect. The battle lasted almost an hour, when the Culacabbage gang was routed, leaving their wounded behind. Everything in the house was smashed and the floors were strewn with wounded men. The walls were bespattered with blood and shreds of human flesh.

After the routed rioters had returned to their headquarters, the Cavendish gang armed themselves to the teeth and marched to their enemies' rendezvous, where a battle still bloodier than the first ensued. The police force and the constables of the surrounding region were called to the scene, but were unable to cope with the rioting horde, who continued hostilities until morning. The town people did not sleep a wink all night, and while they watched the progress of the fight during the night they made no attempt to interfere.

No Ultimatum Issued.

Madrid, Sept. 28.—Several of the newspapers of this city allege that Gen. Woodford has said in interviews with their representatives that the negotiations between the United States and Spain on the subject of Cuba have not begun and that he has only had a preliminary chat with the Spanish minister of foreign affairs. The general is quoted as having added that he found the duke of Tetuan to be a most amiable and able man and that no ultimatum to Spain was delivered, as that country would not put up with it and because the intention of the United States was only to offer its good offices in the most friendly terms. Finally, it is alleged that Gen. Woodford has said that in the event of complete accord being established between Spain and the United States the latter will take measures to suppress filibustering.

Church Debt Wiped Out.

Chicago, Sept. 27.—A remarkable record was made Sunday by the congregation of St. James' Methodist church at Forty-sixth street and Ellis avenue. Dedicatory exercises were held for the handsome new edifice just completed, and when these exercises were concluded the debt of the church was raised by subscriptions from the members of the church. The services, both morning and evening, concluded with prayers and appeals for funds, and checks and cash poured into the church coffers. At the morning service $41,000 was raised and at night the remainder of the debt on the church, $19,000, was cleared.

Union Veteran Legion.

Columbus, O., Sept. 24.—The national encampment of the Union Veteran Legion has elected the following officers for the ensuing year: National commander, Archibald Blakely, Pittsburgh; senior vice commander, E. D. Spooner, Chicago; junior vice commander, William Baird, Lewiston, Me.; surgeon general, Dr. C. M. Savage, Columbus, O.; quartermaster general, Thomas J. Hubbard, Baltimore; chaplain-in-chief, Rev. Charles L. Shergar, Wellsboro, Pa.; executive committee, Edward Donnelly, Jersey City; John W. Baker, Pennsylvania; Joseph B. Knox, Massachusetts; John D. Shephard, Kentucky; A. S. Oliver, Ohio.

Tragedy in Pennsylvania.

Shamokin, Pa., Sept. 27.—The bodies of Arthur W. May, aged 24 years, and Miss Cora Kaseman, aged 18 years, both of Shamokin, were found lying side by side in the blacksmith shop of Joseph Smink Saturday morning. May had shot his sweetheart and then blown out his own brains. The parents of the young woman objected to her marriage with May and this caused the tragedy.

Ex-Secretary Robeson Dead.

Trenton, N. J., Sept. 29. — Ex-Secretary of the Navy George M. Robeson died Monday at his home in this city. Mr. Robeson was 69 years old and had been in failing health for several months. In June, 1869, he was made secretary of the navy. He served in this office until the end of President Grant's second term, March, 1877.

FIEND INCARNATE.

Murders His Wife and Five Children and Shoots Himself.

Carroll, Ia., Sept. 28.—The home of John Boecker, a farmer living eight miles west of Carroll, is the scene of a terrible tragedy which took place Sunday night.

It is undoubtedly a case of murder and suicide. The indications are that Boecker first dispatched his wife with the shotgun, shooting her in the neck, then used the revolver on the baby, first shooting then knocking out its brains with the butt. He then went upstairs where the five children were sleeping and attacked them. He must have used a light, for his aim was effective, each victim being shot in the forehead. All but two children met with instant death, for the blood clots were under their heads and two lay as calmly reposing as if in sleep. All except Henry, who is not yet dead, were attired in night robes. He had reloaded the weapon while upstairs and evidently sent the second bullet into the oldest girl's brain just before leaving the room. Going downstairs he stretched himself beside the corpse of his wife and shot himself. His right hand was burnt by the powder, showing much use of the revolver. The revolver he borrowed from his brother Henry last Thursday, remarking that he wanted it to kill rats in the cellar.

Boecker was 34 years old and for over 20 years lived in the same neighborhood, in fact, on the same farm. He was married 11 years ago, and after living a year with his parents, moved to the scene of the tragedy which is almost within hailing distance of the old home. He has been regarded as a prosperous farmer and only recently bought a 200-acre farm a few miles from the old homestead.

It is surmised that he and his brother Henry had trouble about the home place which John was urged to vacate for Henry. This is assigned by some as the cause of his troubles which culminated in murder and suicide. The family are Germans and highly respected citizens.

ONLY SENSATIONAL RUMORS.

Exodus from Mobile on Account of Yellow Fever Exaggerated.

Louisville, Ky., Sept. 28.—Rumors having gained wide currency to the effect that 800 yellow fever cases existed at Mobile, Ala., and that the city was being deserted by thousands, a correspondent there was wired for a true statement of the facts. In reply he says that the facts regarding the reported exodus are that about 4,000 people out of a population of 40,000 have left town during the past two weeks. Very few are now leaving. Very many people who could go have not been stampeded and are there now arranging their business. All stores and industrial establishments in town are open. The reports of the depopulation are sensational in the extreme. As to there being 800 sick, that is untrue.

New Orleans, Sept. 28.—The board of health of the state of Louisiana officially announces the state of affairs in New Orleans as regards yellow fever as follows: For the 24 hours ending Monday, September 27, at nine p. m., there were: Cases of yellow fever, 22; deaths, 2; total cases of yellow fever to date, 160; total deaths to date, 19.

Inning for Luetgert Defense.

Chicago, Sept. 27.—The strongest witness for the defense who has appeared in the Luetgert trial was on the stand Saturday. The witness was Mary Siemering, the domestic in the Luetgert household, for love of whom it is charged by the state that the prisoner murdered his wife. She denied in a most positive manner that she had been the disturbing element between Luetgert and his wife, and said that neither by night or by day, alone or in company, had she ever visited Luetgert in his factory or elsewhere in an improper manner. She insisted that the prisoner had always been good to his wife, and that in her opinion the latter was out of her mind, and had been so for some time prior to her disappearance.

Mail Train Held Up.

Fargo, N. D., Sept. 27. — About one o'clock Sunday morning the westbound coast train on the Northern Pacific was held up three miles east of Moorhead, Minn. Three masked men, who had been riding on the blind baggage, crawled over the tender and compelled the engineer to stop the train, while two others brought the conductor and brakeman out at the same time. The engine and mail car were cut off and run up the track a short distance, where the registered packages in the latter were looted and the train crew robbed of their ready cash. The robbers evidently made a mistake and did not take the express car as intended, and their haul was probably not large.

Negro Ravisher Lynched.

Hawesville, Ky., Sept. 27.—At five a. m. Sunday, in the presence of 800 infuriated people, Raymond Bushrod, a negro, was lynched as a penalty for a hellish assault upon the person of 14-year-old Maggie Roberts on Saturday. He was hanged from a limb of a tree in the courthouse yard. Bushrod was from Rockport, Ind., and had just served a term in the county jail for theft. Saturday afternoon near Petri, three miles from this place, he met the little Roberts girl, and after outraging her beat and bruised her with an iron coupling pin and left her on the railroad grade to die.

Noted Aeronaut Dead.

Providence, R. I., Sept. 27.—James Allen, a noted aeronaut, is dead at his home in this city, aged 75 years. Mr. Allen was employed by the union army to make observations of the enemy's position in the war, and is said to have made over 1,500 ascensions in the service. In 1867 he went to Brazil, where he entered the service of Dom Pedro in the same capacity in the war against Paraguay.

Made a Quick Passage.

New York, Sept. 27. — The steamer Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, the latest acquisition to the large fleet of the North German Lloyd Steamship company, arrived Sunday night at quarantine, at ten o'clock on her maiden voyage, making the passage from Southampton to New York in 5 days, 22 hours and 45 minutes, the fastest voyage on record.

Valuation of Michigan.

Lansing, Mich., Sept. 27.—The equalized valuation of the state of Michigan is $1,105,100,000.

DEFICIT DECREASED.

Gratifying Showing Made in Government Finances.

Washington, Sept. 28.—The September monthly statement of the government receipts and expenditures will show a material decrease in the deficit as compared with August. The increase that will be shown in the receipts from internal revenue sources seems to justify the expectation that by January 1 next the deficit will have been reduced to a nominal amount. The excess of expenditures over receipts so far this month amounts to something over $3,250,000, but it is expected that by October 1 this excess will have been reduced to $3,000,000 or less, making the deficit for the first quarter of the fiscal year about $28,000,000. Internal revenue officials call attention to the fact that already the receipts from internal revenue exceed those of last year by about $6,000,000 and confidently predict that by January 1 this increase will have reached $7,000,000 and possibly $8,000,000. The receipts from customs so far show no material gains, nor is it expected that any substantial improvement will be shown until after the first of the year. Sugar is then expected to figure prominently in the receipts, and before the close of the calendar year much is expected from wool imports.

The expenditures on account of the Pacific railroads at the beginning of the year will be exceptionally heavy. On January 1 there will be due matured bonds of the Central Pacific to the amount of $10,614,120; Union Pacific, $15,919,512; Kansas Pacific, $1,423,000; Central branch of the Union Pacific, $320,000; Sioux City & Pacific, $1,628,320, making a total of $29,904,952. In addition to this amount the interest payments on January 1 will aggregate approximately $7,000,000. If, however, the offer of the reorganization committee of the Union Pacific is accepted about $40,000,000 would be added to the available cash in the treasury and would reduce the January payments on account of the Pacific roads by about $17,000,000. Estimating the deficit for the next three months at $17,000,000, exclusive of payments on account of the Pacific railroads, the available cash balance in the treasury at the close of the first half of the fiscal year would be about $100,000,000 in excess of the present figures, or $225,000,000. This would be a net loss for the six months of $15,000,000. Summing up the situation, the treasury officials confidently predict that before the close of the calendar year the receipts will fully equal or exceed the needs of the government.

THE LATTIMER AFFAIR.

Coroner's Jury Renders Its Verdict on the Shooting of the Marchers.

Hazleton, Pa., Sept. 28.—The coroner's jury which investigated the death of the striking miners at Lattimer met in Deputy Coroner Coeman's office Monday evening and after an hour's deliberation rendered the following verdict:

"That from the circumstances of the case and the evidence offered the said Clement Platock and others came to their deaths by gunshot wounds on September 10, 1897, at the hands of Sheriff James Martin and his deputies, and in this, we the jury do all agree; and we, Phil J. Boyle, Thomas T. Thomas, Barton Freas and Peter McKiernan, of this jury, do further say that the said Clement Platock, with others, was marching peaceably and unarmed on the public highway; that they were intercepted by said Sheriff Martin and his deputies and mercilessly shot to death, and we do further find that the killing was unnecessary and could have been avoided without serious injury to either person or property, and we find finally that the killing was wanton and unjustifiable, but in this we, George Maue and F. J. MacNeal, of this jury do not concur; and we the jury do further say that there was such strong suspicion of unlawful violence at the hands of person or persons unknown to this jury as to make this inquest necessary."

Gold Seekers Suffer.

Tacoma, Wash., Sept. 27. — There is terrible suffering on the Skaguay and Dyea trails in consequence of winter's setting in. The rainstorm that prevailed there last week was extremely severe upon the gold seekers, who were scattered along the way. The storms have destroyed their provisions and many are left with scarcely enough dry food for another meal and without money to return home. Passengers who arrived on the City of Seattle Saturday morning estimate that there are from 600 to 1,000 men on the two trails who have not the means to purchase tickets back to Puget sound. Their statements are corroborated by letters received by the same steamer.

Slain by Barrios.

San Francisco, Sept. 27.—The following dispatch was received here Saturday: "Labertad, San Salvador, Sept. 24.—Barrios ordered the shooting of Juan Aparacio in the city of Quesaltenango on the day that the revolutionists took San Marons. A telegram received Saturday by one of the leading merchants of this city gives the news that Morales and his 12,000 to 15,000 victorious troops are in Antigue." Juan Aparacio was the most prominent exporter and importer in Central America, whose house is represented in London, Paris and New York.

May Oust Britain from Egypt.

Paris, Sept. 25.—The Politique Coloniale published a dispatch from St. Petersburg Saturday saying that as a result of an exchange of views between the chancellories of St. Petersburg, Paris, Berlin, Vienna, Rome and Constantinople, the sultan of Turkey will address the powers shortly on the subject of Great Britain's evacuation of Egypt, and Russia, supporting the sultan, will invite a conference at Constantinople or St. Petersburg, with the object of settling the question on the basis of the autonomy of Egypt under the suzerainty of the sultan.

Seventeen Are Killed.

El Paso, Tex., Sept. 27.—News has been received here that the San Pedro mine in the Corralitos group, 12 miles from this city, in Mexico, caved in Saturday, killing 17 men who were at work in the mine at the time. The unfortunates were buried alive under 30 feet of rock and dirt. The San Pedro is one of the oldest mines in the group and rich with silver. It is the property of the wealthy Corralitos company, the principal stockholders of which reside in New York.

Beats World's Records.

London, Sept. 28. — At the Crystal Palace Monday J. W. Stocks, the bicyclist, beat the world's records for all distances from six to 33 miles. He accomplished the 33 miles in 61 minutes and 34 2-5 seconds. He covered 52 kilometers and 480 meters in one hour, beating the New York record of Jimmy Michael.

DEAREST WAS THIRD.

A Wheelman Gets Some Taffy Not Intended for Him.

There is one amusing feature about wheel riding that all old riders, and a good many new ones, must have noticed. That is the way a moderately proficient rider will carry on a conversation with some one behind him without really knowing who that some one may be. A moderately proficient rider isn't clever enough to turn his head to look backward, and so he talks right on in the dark.

The other day a wheelman was coming up the Dodge street hill. There isn't much of a hill on Dodge street, but slight as it is it bothers the new riders. Just ahead of the wheelman in question, who was riding at a leisurely rate, was a stout lady, mounted on a new bike. Half-way up the incline the wheelman was astonished to hear her call out:

"Coming, dear?"

The wheelman didn't answer. He felt sure the inquiry couldn't be to him, and he kept silence.

"All out of breath, dear?" she called again.

And again the wheelman made no reply.

"Don't be discouraged," she cheerily shouted. "You'll get there by and by, dearest."

The wheelman thought so too, but he made no mention of the fact.

"Does it tire oor 'ittle armies so muchee?" continued the stout lady.

That was too much for the wheelman. He put on steam and passed the lady. As he whirled by she caught sight of his smiling countenance.

"Oh, I beg your pardon," she cried, and narrowly averted a tumble.

When the wheelman had gone a little further he looked back over his shoulder and saw a lank young fellow, with fuzzy little side whiskers, toiling wearily up the hill.

And he feels pretty sure that was "dearest."—Cleveland Leader.

"FROSTED HIS PIPES."

The Troubles of a Culprit in a Justice Shop.

He was a sorry-looking specimen as he climbed wearily up to the witness chair in Justice Severson's court. His eyes were discolored and his features awry. He raised a bunged looking fist as he took the oath to tell the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth, "swelpimgod." His voice was one of the queerest in the world. It was pitched in a squeaky, high falsetto and seemed doubly comical coming from such a husky-looking specimen.

"Speak up," shouted his honor; "what's the matter with your voice?"

"Me pipes is frosted, judge, your honor," squeaked the prisoner.

"I'll frost your pipes for you," remarked the court. "What was it all about?"

"Well, ye see, judge, your honor, I went home to play wit my kid. D'ye see now? Me mother-in-law she kicks. D'ye see now? I says, here, now, I'm goin' to play wit the kid. Me an' her we got to chewin' about the kid an' she gives out a holler. A copper comes chasin' in an' when I goes to explain he grabs me pipes and twists 'em. Say, judge, I can't talk no louder than this if I was to hang for it."

"How about this, officer?" said the judge.

"The two of 'em was fightin', judge, and I separated 'em," replied the guardian of the peace.

"Where is your mother-in-law?" said the court.

That lady stepped forward calm and without a mark on her face.

"James," said the court, addressing the gentleman with the frosted pipes, "you seem to have gotten the worst of that mix-up. Don't let it occur again. Call the next case. Discharged."—Chicago Chronicle.

In Chicago.

"O, mamma," the beautiful girl exclaimed, "he adores me so, and he is so noble and handsome, and—"

"Yes, my child."

"And he brings such lovely references from his last wife."

Mother and daughter mingled their tears of joy. Presently they grew somewhat calmer and were able to speak of trousseaus and things.—Detroit Journal.

All Women Are.

"Mrs. Jones is a very observing woman," said a Harlem woman, referring to her husband.

"I guess you are right about it. I noticed last Sunday in church that she was a clothes observer," responded her husband, cynically.—Tammany Times.

THE TRUE WOMAN.

The woman who holds a man's heart in her hands
Need not be pretty nor possessed of rich lands.
She needn't wear clothes just teeming with style;
She needn't possess the first worldly wile.
Her eyes may be brown, her eyes may be blue,
To him she's a beauty away through and through—
If she's true.

It's her soul that he cares for, her steadfast devotion,
Her love as unbounded, as free as the ocean;
The touch of her hands, the glance of her eye,
The swift rush of color that comes when he's nigh;
The thousand and one little things she can do
That show him so plainly right through and through
That she's true.

What does it matter if others are fairer?
She possesses a virtue that makes her far rarer
Than professional beauties, cold-hearted and vain.
She would give him her all and care not to gain
Aught but a smile, a low "I love you,"
Which thrills her whole being away through—
For she's true.

Days may be dark, days may be fair,
In sickness, in health, in joy, in despair,
She proves in each crisis that her love is real;
It shines on serenely, come woe or weal.
The world counts for nothing, what can it do
If she belongs to him utterly all through and through
And is true?

La Madre D'Oro.

BY ALFRED R. CALHOUN.

IT WAS my fortune some years ago to be connected with a surveying party through western New Mexico and whose line of examination lay into Arizona, along the thirty-fifth parallel, where a railroad is now built.

A wilder country than that was at that time would be difficult to imagine. Far apart there were a few wretched United States posts called by courtesy "forts," but the Navajoes and the Apaches—the latter under the famed Chief Cochise—made it unpleasant traveling through the lofty mountains and across the sterile mesas that distinguish that land.

Every man in our party walked with his rifle at his back and his pistols in his belt, and when we lay down on our blankets at night our weapons were within easy reach and our pickets were as carefully posted as if we were in the presence of an enemy, as indeed we might be said to be at all times, for, though we did not often catch sight of the wily savages, we had every reason to believe that they never lost sight of us.

La Sierra Madre, or the mother mountain, as the early Spanish explorers very properly called the great continental divide, or watershed, is crossed by several trails near the latitude mentioned, the most noted being Campbell's pass, 50 miles to the west of Fort Wingate.

I had ridden ahead in this pass with two troopers to make some topographical examinations and was about five miles in the advance of the main party when an exclamation from one of the soldiers caused me to rein in my horse and to ask the cause of the alarm.

"I saw an Injun, sir, up there in the woods," said the soldier, indicating the direction with his carbine.

In an instant we were dismounted and watching, with our bridles over our arms and our carbines ready.

After waiting some minutes I began to think the man was mistaken, and was about to give the order to remount, when a horse plunged down the steep mountain side, and a glance told me that the remarkable-looking person on the creature's back was neither Apache nor Navajoe, but a white man like ourselves.

This rider's long hair and beard looked to be as white as the snow on the distant mountain peaks, and his costume was a fantastic though decidedly picturesque cross between the dress of a Mexican and that of a northwest hunter.

The pommel of his saddle, the buttons on his leggings, the stock of his long rifle and the hilts of his pistols and knife fairly flashed with silver. He was well mounted and rode in a way that showed that the years that had frosted his hair had not lessened his wonderful skill as a horseman.

He came fearlessly toward us and shook hands, saying as he did so, with the manner of an educated man: "My name is Levi Bronson; did you ever hear of me before?"

I told Mr. Bronson I never had heard of him before, but to save his pride, for the confession seemed to give him pain, I added: "I am a civil engineer and have not been long in this region."

"A civil engineer?" he repeated. "What do you want in these mountains?" and he waved his hands about him, and looked as if he thought me an intruder. I told him that if he rode back toward our party with me I would explain our object; at the same time I expressed my surprise that any man should venture into such a dangerous territory alone.

"I know the Indians, and the Indians know me," said this remarkable man. "I am to them the Silver Chief, a great medicine man, who lived with them and nursed them back to health when they sickened before the men of my race came to slay and starve them. Ah, I sometimes blush for the white blood in my veins!"

There was a strange gleam in his eyes as he spoke, and I concluded that the stranger was not well balanced. I told him the object of our survey, which had the Pacific ocean for its objective point and a railroad for its conclusion, but the information did not please him.

"It is folly to build a railroad through a wilderness," he said. "What is there to support a railroad here?" and again he waved his long arms at the forest-covered hills.

I told him that railroads had become the pioneers of civilization, and that along their tracks farms and villages and cities sprang up.

"That may be in other places," he said, "but it is impossible that a railroad should exist so close to Madre d'Oro."

"Madre d'Oro?" I repeated.

"Yes; Madre d'Oro means the mother of gold. Did you never hear of it?"

I confessed that I never had, and expressed a desire to be enlightened.

The old man eyed me for a few seconds in silence, as if judging whether I was worthy or not; then he shook his head, and said:

"It is my secret, and I do not know you well enough to confide it."

I bowed and we rode back to where the engineer corps had formed a camp.

Levi Bronson remained with us nearly a week, and during that time he refused very tempting offers to act as guide for us as far as the Colorado river.

He proved himself to be a famous hunter, and he ventured off alone with a perfect contempt for what would have been positive danger to any other man.

He was voted "crazy" by all the party, but in me the man excited the liveliest interest, and by many confidences I tried to draw from him the story of his life, which I felt sure was made up of incidents of no ordinary kind.

The night before he left he drew me to one side, and, sitting down with his back to a tree and the flames of a neighboring fire lighting up his picturesque face, he said: "And so you'd like to know something about Madre d'Oro?"

I told him that I should, if he thought me worthy of his confidence.

"It is a secret," he said, in a half whisper, "but then what does it matter if the world knew, so long as only one man can find the place?"

"What place?"

"The place where all the gold in these rocks and streams comes from—La Madre d'Oro—the Mother of Gold. Ah, thousands have died trying to find the place, and it may be that now that I know where it is I may not be permitted to enter it, for you know the Aztecs believe that the wonderful valley is enchanted."

"Indeed?"

"Yes, and I am inclined to that belief myself, but then I have spent so many long, dreary years searching that it would not do to lose heart now that untold wealth is within my reach."

I agreed with him, and by careful questioning I drew out of him his story of the valley of gold, which I subsequently found to be an established belief among the miners of the northern Mexican states, and to them it came, without doubt, from the Aztecs, who were once the masters of all this land.

Using my own language, this was the account in which he firmly believed:

Within a hundred miles of the place where we were then encamped was the wonderful valley of gold, and Levi Bronson was confident that he knew the exact location.

The valley was in the heart of the Sierra Madre mountains, walled in by towering rocks, and accessible only by a secret passage through which flowed a stream that, excepting on one day in every year, filled up the passage and made ingress impossible.

This valley is small in extent and perfectly circular. Through it the river flows cool and clear, and filled with fish whose scales are golden. The banks are masses of variegated flowers, and trees ever in blossom made delightful shades and fairy-like arbors. Birds of the sweetest song and most exquisite plumage, of varieties unknown to the outer world, make vocal this wonderful valley and flash through its dark green foliage like animated blossoms.

Running across this wonderful valley there is a belt 40 feet in width on which no vegetation grows, for the belt is the top of a wall of gold that flashes with indescribable brilliancy when the sun balances in midheaven and looks lovingly down on Madre d'Oro.

The old Aztec priests know well this valley, and so they still cherish the belief that Montezuma will again appear in the flesh, to lead them against the Spanish conquerors, whom they have never ceased to hate. They think the wealth necessary to regain their liberties will come from this valley.

"IT IS A SECRET," HE SAID.

But one white man ever saw it, and that was a Spaniard named Jose Alvarrez, who entered through the subterranean passage, and, being discovered by the guardian priests, was sacrificed to the sun on the golden ledge.

"And you know where this wonderful valley is?" I asked Levi Bronson, when he had finished his description.

"Yes," he replied; "I am sure I could lead you within one mile of the place."

"Are you going there?"

"I am."

"And you are not afraid of the guardian priests?"

"No, for I am a doctor, and I have practiced my profession for years among the Indians to make them my friends. They would not harm me."

"But, granting that you can find the gold," I asked, "of what use will such a fabulous amount be?"

"I will only take what I want," he replied.

"And how much will that be?"

"I do not know. I have earned a great deal in all these years of working and waiting. I want to make my old age serene and happy."

Levi Bronson wanted me to join him, but I declined, and we each went our separate way, and I did not hear of him again. But it is safe to say he never reached La Madre d'Oro.

I have often thought of the old man since, and those to whom I have told the story laughed and said: "He was surely insane."

Perhaps he was, but is he any more insane than the myriads who from youth to old age give every thought to the acquisition of wealth, and who seek valleys of gold as inaccessible and fabulous as Levi Bronson's Madre d'Oro?—N. Y. Ledger.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

After the Officers.

A report is afloat that the Duluth W. C. T. U. will try and bring about the impeachment of Mayor Truelson and the discharge of Chief of Police Hansen. They allege that a "blind pig" was allowed to run in full blast at the county fair; that, although it was reported to the police, they failed to shut it up; that the mayor had promised not to allow the sale of intoxicating drinks on the grounds, but that the police allowed the "blind pig" to run. Both the mayor and the chief deny the charges, and say that they knew nothing about the place, and that they court an investigation.

Elected Officers.

The national grand lodge of Hermann's Sons at New Ulm elected the following officers: President, Julius Schuetze, of Austin, Tex.; first vice president, A. Behrns, of Chicago; second vice president, W. Stein, of Great Falls, Mont.; secretary, Richard Schaefer, of New Britain, Conn.; treasurer, Conrad Walters. It is 57 years since one man has held these offices more than one term, but both secretary and treasurer were re-elections. The next meeting will be held at St. Anthoma, Tex., in 1901. An imposing monument to Hermann was unveiled with appropriate ceremonies.

Without Home.

Mrs. Christine Boenhart returned to Mankato from St. Peter, having been discharged as cured as a result of the recent examination of the patients of that institution under the new law. Her husband, during her confinement at St. Peter, procured a divorce and married again. She refused to believe the story and went to Mankato. She visited her former home and the truth was confirmed. Mrs. Boehnhart says that no notice of the divorce proceedings was served upon her and that she had no knowledge of the action at the time.

Not Guilty.

Ex-Gov. J. S. Pillsbury, C. A. Smith, Joel L. Bassett and W. L. Bassett have been exonerated from the charge of having cut pine timber which did not belong to them, or which they had no right to cut.

The jury in the case of the United States against the Pine River Logging and Improvement company, composed of these gentlemen, which has been on trial in the federal court before Judge Lochren, returned a verdict, finding for the defendants.

Attempted Robbery.

Wm. Simonson, a farmer residing about four miles west of Henning, was attacked by three masked men while going to a neighbor's. The assailants fired at him, the bullet passing through his hat, grazing the top of his head. They also used knives, but did not inflict any serious wounds. Mr. Simonson is a powerful man and finally got hold of his revolver, when he fired at his assailants four times.

A Robber Caught.

Carl Herman Larson, alias "White Face," alias "Chicago Stiff," of Chicago, robbed Oliver Cornell, of Minneapolis, of $51 at Hector. He left town, going north, but was followed by a posse, armed with guns and clubs, and captured in a corn field a mile from town. He showed fight and had to be clubbed in order to be brought to town.

Sugar Beets.

Dr. F. Ihne, of Chicago, addressed a meeting of farmers, held at Winona to discuss the sugar beet question and the prospects of securing a sugar factory in Winona. The doctor expressed himself as much pleased with the samples of beets raised by farmers this year.

Prison Born.

Mrs. Nellie Frayer, convicted of murdering the Maxwell child at Moorhead, and received at the state prison on March 10, 1897, to serve a life sentence, became the mother of a little girl on Sept. 21, her child being the first ever born in prison.

News in Brief.

The 4-year-old daughter of Station Agent Stevens at Long Lake accidentally set fire to her clothes and was severely burned.

Gregory Lasorik fell down the shaft of the Roberts mine at McKinley and was killed.

Fifty employes of the Foot, Schultze & Co.'s shoe factory of St. Paul went on a strike. They claim the firm violated agreements in regard to employment of non-union men.

The postoffice at Spirit Lake, Otter Tail county, has been discontinued; mail will go to Gresham.

Wm. Todd, wanted for assault of a 12-year-old child in Polk county, was arrested at Casselton, N. D.

About seventy new students are registered at the Pillsbury academy, at Owatonna.

Hog cholera, or a disease very much like it, is raging in the vicinity of Grand Meadow.

Fire destroyed the postoffice block and contents at Fosston.

The jury in the Merritt vs. Harris case found in favor of the Merritts, which means that stock valued at about $40,000 which was in issue, belongs to the Merritts and was given to Harris & Son as collateral for the payment of their legal services, and not as additional compensation.

Fifty men have been put to work in the St. Cloud quarries, getting out stone for the state capitol.

Jessie Wilson, a stenographer, fell from a third story window in Minneapolis, a distance of 30 feet. She was rendered unconscious for a time, but was not seriously hurt.

Ralph Blakely, a member of the leading shoe firm at Rochester, was assaulted by W. Logan Brackenridge, a prominent attorney.

William Axel, of the town of Swanville, has been bound over on a charge of assault in the second degree, preferred by a young lady named Lizzie Muller. Axel wanted the girl to marry him, and upon her refusal, it is charged, drew a knife and threatened to kill her.

The following fourth-class postoffices have been made money order offices: Bigelow, Nobles county; Garvin, Lyon county; Ware, Marshall county.

The libel suit of Samuel Treby against the Little Falls Transcript was decided in favor of the newspaper.

While a kinetoscope entertainment was in progress at Bellview the apparatus exploded, causing a panic. In the scramble to get out of the building, several people were injured.

Three men held up a cattle train on the Great Northern road near Smith Lake and relieved a number of stockmen of their money.

LONDON'S POSTES RESTANTES.

Largely Used by Certain of the Metropolis' Inhabitants.

Dotted at intervals along the 7,000 miles of streets that intersect and reintersect the wilderness of brick and mortar which men have agreed to call London are numbers of small shops—generally barbers,' stationers' or tobacconists'—in whose windows the legend "Letters Received Here" will be found conspicuously displayed. The meaning of it is obvious. Anyone who wishes for any reason whatever to conceal his or her real address can on payment of a small fee have their correspondence sent to one or the other of these private postes restantes, to be called for whenever convenient.

And their clients! They comprise all sorts and conditions of men—and women; more especially the latter. The swindling "ladies' home employment" advertiser, who is usually a woman, and who culls her victims from among the weakest and most unprotected section of her own sex, is one of their most constant patrons. So is the "widow lady" with the "wedding present of antique plate" which she is so anxious to dispose of at an unheard-of sacrifice. So too, is that other lady who is "going out to join her husband in India," and who, consequently, is consumed with a burning anxiety to dispose of her 100-guinea piano for £20. All these, together with hosts of other "sharks," whose sole business in life is to prey upon the public, find in the "Letters Received Here" shop the necessary facilities for carrying on their nefarious trade.

Of course, not all the keepers of these establishments are knowingly engaged in assisting criminals. Some there are who conduct their peculiar business on honest and straightforward lines—so far as they are able. But, on the other hand, it is notorious that a very large number are actually in league with the swindlers, sharing the proceeds of their robberies and promptly giving them the "tip" whenever unpleasant inquiries begin to be made about them. Others, again, while not actually assisting in the frauds, take good care to benefit indirectly by the resultant illicit gains, either by charging an exorbitant fee for all registered letters or by quietly annexing a few of the most promising-looking epistles from each batch that comes to hand. The latter proceeding is, of course, theft pure and simple, but it is theft unattended by little element of risk. The master swindler may suspect that he is being swindled in his turn, but he can prove nothing, and even if he could he dare not complain.

But there is even a darker side to the picture. Not a man whose business brings him closely into contact with the seamy side of modern metropolitan life but can bear testimony to the fact that to the "Letters Received Here" shop can be traced the downfall of multitudes of young women.

Of course, not all the users of these places are of the classes indicated above. If they were the authorities would quickly put a stop to the whole business. There are plenty of people who desire to suppress their true names and addresses for reasons that are comparatively harmless.—London Mail.

England as "Decay."

By an unfortunate juxtaposition of words and emblems, England is unintentionally depicted in the new congressional library as a decrepit old woman, gathering dry sticks, who is being winked at by a knowing-looking owl, perched on a neighboring bough. The pendentives of the beautiful southwest pavilion of the library are filled by four plaques in relief, representing spring, summer, autumn, and winter. Under each is a single word illustative of the season—seed, bloom, fruit, decay. The mural paintings of the room are designed to illustrate the progress of discovery through conquest to civilization, and honor is shown the four nations most conspicuous in the colonization of the new world—Spain, Portugal, France, and England—by inscribing their names conspicuously in the four corners of the pavilion, and therefore under the mottoes describing the medallions. One or other name had to be painted under the ominous word decay, and beneath the decrepit old woman: and as chance would have it, the lot fell to England.—N. Y. Post.

NERVOUS PROSTRATION.

A New Jersey Woman Expresses Her Gratitude to Mrs. Pinkham for Relief.

"Will you kindly allow me," writes Miss Mary E. Saidt to Mrs. Pinkham, "the pleasure of expressing my gratitude for the wonderful relief I have experienced by taking your Compound? I suffered for a long time with nervous prostration and general debility, caused by falling of the womb. It seemed as though my back would never stop aching. I could not sleep. I had dull headaches. I was weary all the time, and life was a burden to me. I sought the seashore for relief, but all in vain. On my return I resolved to give your medicine a trial. I took two bottles and was cured. I can cheerfully state, if more ladies would only give your medicine a fair trial they would bless the day they saw the advertisement, and there would be happier homes. I mean to do all I can for you in the future. I have you alone to thank for my recovery, for which I am very grateful."

to one or two uses of Pearline (use without soap) will have to be talked to. Why is she throwing away all the gain and help that she can get from it in other ways? If you have proved to yourself that Pearline washes clothes, for instance, in the easiest, quickest, safest way, you ought to be ready to believe that Pearline (use soap) is the best for washing and cleaning everything. That's the truth, anyway. Try it and see. Into every drop of water that's to be used for cleansing anything, put some Pearline 476

DELANO, FRIDAY, OCT. 1, 1897.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE VILLAGE OF DELANO.

DELANO DIARY

--Good dairy butter still finds a ready market about Delano.

—John Coolen claims to be the boss salesmen on washing machines.

--The Presbyterians will have no church services Sunday morning.

—Freeman's Hubbard squashes are fine; and make a good substitute for sweet potatoes.

—For sale, a span of mares; good for a farm team, or good on the road. Apply at this office.

—Wednesday was hog day and a lot of porkers found their way into the stock pen of the G. N. Ry. at this point.

—Gotlieb Herman is arranging shelving and other fixtures in the Simon Weldelee building prepatory to occupancy of the room by Charley Brunkow.

—Electrician M. J. Muckey visited Howard Lake Tuesday evening to inspect their electric plant. His wife arrived Wednesday morning and they attended the fair.

—A. L. Jones contemplates the erection of a new livery barn in the near future. He has added to his stock of horses a fine pair of blooded animals from Hutchinson.

—The Board of Education of the Delano High School delivered the diplomas for last year graduates, last week. They are nice to have, even though a long time coming.

—The rattle of coal into cellars and coal sheds is a reminder of what we are to expect soon. Though as yet Minnesota is doing herself proud by furnishing an old time autumn.

—Mr. Stephens, depot agent af Long Lake' kindled a fire near the depot. His little girl went out and got her clothing on fire and burned to death. Mr. S. was burned severely trying to save her.

—Notwithstanding the downward tendency of the wheat market the Round Elevator has found it necessary to employ two horses a part of the time to elevate wheat they bought this week.

—Our former fellow townsman C. O. Teas now has cases on the Carver County News, at Watertown. Charley used to do his end of the swearing while Gutzwiller did the balance on the Eagle.

—Henry Baker of Independence, was in town Tuesday winding up his berry business. He marketed a fine lot of strawberries and raspberries this year in Delano. He evidently thinks prosperity has come.

—The Delano Cornet Band furnished music at the fair Thursday. On the drive home they tried to get into four townships at once, by running onto a corner stone. Mr. Buckley we hear, was considerably bruised.

—The Meister Hotel barn is being repaired and additions made to it prepatory to accomodating teams that may drive in from the country and wish to have a stall for a few hours. This will be a convenience on Fair Day and Church days especially.

—If the committe on streets and alleys would take advantage of the fine weather and have a little grading done on some of the alleys; and a few loads of dirt and gravel hauled where needed, it would make travel over those much used thoroughfares much more pleasant and profitable.

—Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Lindsley entertained a large company of invited guests at their fine new residence, Friday evening of last week. Everybody enjoyed the evening, and the host and hostess, and their assistants, proved themselves adepts in the art of entertaining. An elegant lunch was served. The occasion was the twelfth anniversary of the wedding of Mr. and Mrs. Lindsley.

—Nearer and still nearer the dreaded hog cholera comes. We read of farmers loosing five, ten, twenty, or more fine large hogs, ready for market. Those in the business should be on their guard. It is better to take a fair price for pork, and get the cash, than to wait for a rise and have the hogs die. Of course if the hogs can be kept healthy, and not exposed in any way to hog cholera and the highest prices obtained that would be the most satisfactory. But don't run too many risks. If the disease continues to prevail, the chances are that other countries will quarantine against our pork, and then down will go prices.

—The wedding on Thursday at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Harris Williams was one of the grandest events of the kind it has ever been our lot to attend. A small assemblage of friends of the family and contracting parties were present. The groom, Mr. Edward E. Lucier, is one of Greenwood's able farmers, and has a comfortable home for his bride, who is the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harris Williams, well and favorably known here. Rev. McLane conducted the marriage service in good form, and gave the young couple some sound advice. The dinner furnished by the parents of the bride was one of the finest we ever helped eat. Numerous passents were received by the newly wed couple. Everybody present enjoyed the occasion and all wish the new family many years of happiness.

—Blacksmith Stone can swing a sythe in great shape where weeds are higher than his head. He says the better the day the better the deed.

—Miss Laura Schaffer was twelve years old Monday. A host of her young friendds assembled at the family residence in the eyening and helped her celebrate in fine style.

—Plasterers seem uncommonly busy now. A crew from Rockford has been doing considerable work here this summer. Even Charley Belt has turned brick mason and laid brick wall in the banker's cellar.

Personal.

William Sleight returned Tuesday from Dakota.

Mrs. T. M. Shaw visited Minneapolis on Tuesday.

Lafe Nelson, of Minneapolis, is in town seeing the folks.

W. M. Mowatt entertained his father from Minneapolis, over Sunday.

John J. Catlin visited among the professional men of Watertown, Saturday.

I. C. Stewart, of Williston, N. Dak., was in town visiting relatives this week.

John Cunningham, of Minneapolis, spent several days this week in Delano.

C. W. Kerrick went west Tuesday evening to look after some of Jim Hill's interests.

Mrs. M. C. Staples, of Howard Lake, visited her mother Mrs. Chance Monday evening.

Dr. Carter, of Howard Lake made us a pleasant but brief call while in town Saturday.

Mrs. W. M. Mowatt and Mrs. J. M. Gott and daughter Clara, are visiting friends at St. Peter.

John Cameron, of Minneapolis, came up Tuesday for a visit with Delano relatives and friends.

Hon. B. F. Christlieb, of Long Lake, has again started for California. He goes to Los Angeles.

Mrs. John Walker and daughter, and Miss Isa Kerr, of Minneapolis, visited at the Kerr home this week.

Al. Hitsman and crew have returned from their threshing trip. They didn't have a very paying season we hear.

S. A. Lentz and wife, of Maple Plain, drove up and spent Wednesday evening with Geo. W. Bolton and family.

Rev. Tabor Davies resigned his pastorate at the Presbyterian church Sunday. He expects to move to St. Paul, soon.

Miss Rosa Barth, of Watertown, is stopping at her Uuncle George P. Schaffers and attending Parochial school this term.

Stacy Redmond and family returned this morning from the County Fair. Several other parties also came on the morning train.

Mrs. P. H. Sims, of Merriam Park, and her brother Joe Fautsch, of Minneapolis, attended the funeral of their brother-in-law here Saturday.

Will Epple returned home from Dakota this morning. Fred Haffner, of Moreton N. D., came along for a visit with relatives and friends.

County Cullings.

Moore Bros., of Montrose, are now running the Howard Lake roller mills which they have purchased, and had refitted and arranged up to date.

Edward Powell, of Waverly, a brakeman on the the G. N. was killed in the Minneapolis yards Sunday evening. He has two brothers employes of the G. N.

Wright county's elephant still fails to co-ordinate. Her feet don't track. Her trunk flaps promiscuously about. Her tusks stand ont in whatever direction her head happens to lol around to, and even her tail don't come around right for knocking the flies off every time.

Congressman Page Morris will please accept our thanks for a copy of the Official Congressional Directory of the 55th Congress, extra session, An interesting book of much valuable information.—Sherburne County Times.

He hasn't sent us one; so needn't accept our thanks for the same.

The women of Wright county who are in the State Insane Asylum have been removed from other places to Fergus Falls. The Board having so ordered. No notice of the intended removal was given friends until on the day they were sent. Circular letters were sent stating that this day they have been sent.

The noted Howard case has been put off until late in October. It still looks as if the intention is to keep Frank Larabee out of the case. Unless the trial comes off and has the appearance of being fairly conducted, those interested most in the outcome will gain no credit with the populace of Wright county. The charge is a serious one. Several people who have been prominent in the county are connected with the affair, in the minds of the citizens, and, unless the trial proves the falseness of the accusations, their standing in the community must be somewhat lowered. Every liberty loving, law abiding citizen wants the matter cleared up. If there is guilt every participant should receive his deserts. If the charges are false it should be shown, and those making them dealt with for malicious prosecution. But it is an outrage on justice, and the citizens of Wright county to have such charges hanging for years over the heads of any. The trial should come off; and come off to the satisfaction of justice.

Among Our Exchanges.

St. Peter Herald: That people are wondering where all of the Klondyke gold goes to. We learn of thirty millions being sent out in a single shipment, but the boat must sink for it never seems to land in a civilized country.

World: The plethoric condition of the gold supply of the Treasury is indicated by the fact that the Sub-Treasury in this city will not pay out currency in exchange for gold deposits at San Francisco. The depositor must "pay the freight."

Wright County Times: The creamery outfit has been sold to parties in Clear Lake, and the creamery has ceased to do business. Thus another industry created by the enterprise of our people has gone the way of all the earth. What is the matter with Monticello?

St. Peter Journal: The state crematory in Forest cemetery just out of St. Paul was completed this week and is ready for burning dead bodies. The cost of cremation is $25. This is about equal to the price of a lot in the cemetery, but there would be no large headstone required of course.

Brainerd Journal: Major Baldwin is out in the public press in interviews in which he denounces Congressman Eddy, of the Seventh district. Yet after Maj. Baldwin turned Republican a year ago he went out making speeches in favor of Eddy, of the Seventh district, and Morris of this district. He called himself at that time a gold standard Democrat.

Topics of the Day.

"The Gold Fields of the Yukon Valley" which appears in Demorest's for October, is a timely article on this subject, which is now of most absorbing interest. Authoritative statements concerning the people, country and marvelous gold deposits, together with excellent illustrations, and one of the best maps of the Klondike region yet published, combine to render this an article of farreaching interest and importance.

The religious world will find in the same number a valuable and strikingly interesting article, giving the story of the discovery a few months ago of an old manuscript, containing eight sayings of Our Lord, which are believed to be authentic, and certainly have a deep interest for all Christendom, if they are.

What is more attractive than a photograph of a child in a natural, playful attitude? In "How to Pose Children," in Demorests for October, the amateur is taught the art of natural photography. This article is interesting alike to mothers and artists, and is beautifully illustrated in a manner that is an object lesson to the striver after picturesque effects.

The picturesque element is also found in this magazine, in the very clever description of that most famous French cafe, "The Black Cat."

The serial "Bobbie McDuff," and the short story "A Peripatetic Hazard," of especial interest to golfers, which appear in this number, are cleverly written, and illustrated in a most sympathetic fashion. The various departments are filled with a variety of matter at once bright, useful, and instructive; covering the ground from the "Care of Children," to a "Bicycle Tea." The Fashion Department with this number is one of the most complete and artistic ever published. Thirty-eight patterns are given of the latest Parisian styles for fall wear.

Public Auction.

I will sell at Public Auction, on my farm, on Wednesday, Oct. 20, at noon, two horses, plows, harrows, sleigh, buggy, spring wagon, mowing machine, rake, stoves, and other articles too numerous to mention. For articles over $5 an approved note with small interest, 1yrs time, will be accepted.

HOW A PUZZLL WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, 7 authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

A SHIPMENT of horses from Southern Minnesota to Liverpool, Eng., is reported as the first of a long series contemplated. It is thought that a ready market awaits the Minnesota equine in that far away land. Send them along. We have a few here and we are near southern Minnesota and will of course begin to feel the rise in price as soon as anybody. Nothing like prosperity, only we want to be sure to get aboard the right time.

New Issues and New Men.

It is becoming apparent more and more each day, that the silver question will not be the issue in the next campaign, and such being the case, Bryan, Towne, Lind, and others may as well step down and out. The republican party will have new issues and new men to fight in 1900.—Sherburne County Times.

If they don't have something better than they had in the past campaign, and some different candidates they surely will be badly beaten; or people are fonder of being humbugged than we believe them to be.

SOME of our daily exchanges are spending columns of their valuable space to inform the public that Bryanism is dead. And in the telegrams received they publish a few lines like this, from the Globe:

"KANSAS CITY, Mo., Oct. 6.—William Jennings Bryan was a carnival attraction in Kansas City tonight. In an ampitheatre erected on Grand avenue he spoke to fully 40,000 people. He discussed political and financial matters, the address being on the lines of many of his recent speeches throughout the West. Fences had been built across the street in order to compel the crowd to pay and admission to the tiers of seats which had been erected on either side of the street. When the seats had been nearly filled the crowd outside became so great and so determined that the fences were pushed down, despite all efforts of the police, and the crowd surged in around the stand from which the orator was to speak. The carnival officials and the Bryan Democratic club, of Kansas City, under whose auspices the Nebraskan spoke, were responsible for this arrangement.

Injunction Again.

The injunction business seems to have reached Iowa. It is said that a Judge Clyde ordered B. F. Wright, a newspaper man not to publish certain letters in his possession; or to not even to comment on them. Judges are surely going too far, when they forbid people to walk the streets in Pennsylvania; or tell orators they shall not address the people; or tell railroad employes they must work for the company; tell preachers they must not preach the gospel on Sunday; they must be outside their constitutional authority. But when they place their clammy judicial hand on the press of the land they surely have taken hold of more than the people will see them handle. There is a voting time, and voters of this country believe in the Constitution. They believe in the freedom of the press; in the freedom of speech; and in the rights of people to lawfully assemble; in the privilege of preaching on the Sabbath Day.

Injunction may be all right for some purposes. But the citizens of the United States desire to retain unto themselves the privilege of reading the news in the newspapers; of listening to their favorite orators; of walking on the highways; of hearing sermons on Sunday, and of casting their ballot on election day. And they will vote for the men and measures that will grant them these privileges. Many of them have come to this free country from monarchial governments; and if they desire to live under that style they know where to go without changing the form of this government from what its constitution grants to its citizens; from the very thing that brought them here.

Henry George.

From the Pioneer Press report of the great meeting of the people of New York to unite on a candidate for Mayor of Greater New York we clip the following:

"A. B. Cruickshank, of the United Democracy, then formally tendered the nomination, on behalf of his organization, to Mr. George. Charles Frederick Adams, on behalf of the Democratic Alliance, then offered to Mr. George the nomination of the organization which he represented. James T. Garvey, of the People's party, and John H. Crosby, of the Manhattan Single Tax club, also notified Mr. George of his nomination by their respective organizations. The rising of Mr. George was the signal for another outburst of cheering. Mr. George said:

Fellow Democrats, men who voted last year for William Jennings Bryan, I accept your nomination. From now until election closes I am yours, aye, and after election, too, I am a Democrat. (Tremendous applause and cries of "Not of the Hill stripe"). I cannot divide into parts the question which I as a citizen have to deal with. For the same reason that I oppose this monstrous tariff in all its forms, for the same reason that I would vote wherever I could for the utter abolition of that tariff, for that same reason I am opposed to the interference with individual liberty which you see here in New York. I am a Democrat in the Jeffersonian sense. Because the Chicago platform represented the idea of giving to the great common people what belongs to them, I stood for it, voted for it and was sorrier than I was ever before when it was defeated.

Mr. George declared that the nomination was unsought and not desired, but that he accepted in the name of the real Democracy. Immediately after the conclusion of his speech the meeting was declared adjourned.

Larabee Not in It.

It is now settled that the case of John R. Howard, charged with an attempt to bribe a juryman in Wright county, will be tried without the aid of Frank D. Larabee. It seems that the conclusion has been arrived at that to engage Mr. Larrabee in the case would jeopardize the verdict should one be secured. In a criminal case tried not long since in Le Sueur county Judge Caldwell held that it would not be lawful to permit an attorney who had been concerned in the civil case out of which the criminal trial grew to engage in the prosecution of the last named case. The case is set for Oct. 25. It will probably be tried by Attorney General Childs and his assistant, George B. Edgerton.—Pioneer Press.

They Cleared $200.

(From the Minneapolis Times.)

Last fall some bright mind in the M. E. church suggested the idea of the society procuring some land, raising a crop on it and using the proceeds in paying church debts and expenses. The idea took, and forty acres was rented just out of town and this spring a crop of wheat was sown by the members and friends of the society and the results were highly satisfactory. The wheat grew well and was duly gathered and threshed, and when sold, after deducting some necessary expenses, the net proceeds were, we understand, about $200. This was a good idea and proved profitable. Other societies might profit by the experience of their sister church and it would doubtless pay to "go and do likewise."—Park Rapids Enterprise.

Believes in the Grand Jury.

We are sorry to see so able and fearless a paper as the Minneapolis Times fall into the error of denouncing the grand jury system. The grand jury in isolated cases may and often does err; but the system itself is one of the greatest safeguards for the protection of the people that we now have. The system was instituted to break the power of wealth in the hands of the few—to prevent the oppression of the weak by the strong. This country needs the grand jury today more than ever before, in order to protect the weak from the power of corporations. What could a poor man do single handed and alone, to oppose the power of the Hills against whom the Times is making a valliant fight. A grand jury may sometimes be corrupted or misled; but on the whole, the system is indispensible to the protection of life, liberty and property. No lawyer, except a corporation attorney or corporation man, would dispense with the grand jury system.—Waseca Herald.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. Oct. 1, 1897.

The Treasury deficit is still the fly in the administrations milk. The deficit for the third month of the first quarter of the fiscal year, which closed yesterday, was not so great as for the first two months of the quarter, but that was because of a heavy decrease in expenditures and not because of any large increase in receipts. The deficit for the quarter is in the neighborhood of $30,000,000, and there is no good reason for expecting that it will be much less in the second quarter, although members of the administration are now predicting that the receipts of the government will equal the expenditures by the first of January. It is known that this continued deficit has been a source of considerable worry to Mr. McKinley and his cabinet, and believed that it was one of the reasons why the administration was so willing to have the sale of the Union Pacific Railroad rushed before Congress meets. They count upon the government's share of the purchase money to increase the available cash in the Treasury.

Mr. McKinley has returned to Washington, but his traveling isn't quite over for the season, as Boss Hanna needs him in his business, and has arranged another trip to Ohio for him. It is understood that this trip will be made the latter part of this month and that while in Ohio Mr. McKinley will make at least one speech for Hanna. If a little thing like consistency cut any figure with the Hanna McKinley combine, it would be pertinent to ask if there was impropriety in the Secretary of State taking part in the Ohio campaign, why the President can do so with propriety?

The little gathering of gold bugs calling themselves a "monetary commission" and claiming to represent the entire country has, after dividing themselves up into committees on, Metallic currency, demand obligations, and banking, taken a recess until October 11. So far as the public is concerned they might just as well have adjourned sine die.

The machinery of the Pension Bureau is being unblushingly used to help along the campaign of Boss Hanna in Ohio. A number of clerks have been transferred to the middle division, in which Ohio is, from another division, in order to expedite all applications for pensions for citizens of Ohio now pending, and in order that all pension inquiries made Ohio Congressmen may be answered the same day they are received. Of course, this is not fair towards applicants for pensions in other States, but it allows the Ohio voter to see what "pull" Hanna has, and after election Ohio applications will cease to be specially favored.

When a man adopts questionable methods in an avowed attempt to get rich by catching "suckers," as Mr. John Wedderburn, head of the businesss of John Wedderburn & Co., did, he knowingly accepts all the chances of having himself officially branded as a fraud. Therefore no symyathy was wasted on him when it was announced that the Commissioner of Patents had decided to disbar John Wedderburn & Co. from practice before the U. S. Patent Office, for fraud, and that the postal authorities were being pressed to act upon the request to put the "National Recorder," John Wedderburn & Co's. paper, on the fraud list. Mr. John Wedderburn although still a young man has so far made use of four aliases in his efforts to catch "suckers"—The Examiner Claims Bureau, The Press Claims Co., The National Recorder, and John Wedderburn & Co.

There was a very warm time in the office of the Postmaster General to "Dick" Kerens, the Missouri republican boss. The row started when Kerens produced a peremtory order from Mr. McKinley directing that a man selected for postmaster at Kirkville, Mo., by the Postmaster General, should not be appointed. Mr. Gary got so mad that he accused Kerens of wanting to have embezzlers appointed postmasters in Mo. Then the Missouri boss got "on his ear" and made things so hot for Mr. Gary that he was glad to close the incident by making an apology. That really made Mr. Gary mad was that Mr. McKinley would not allow him to appoint a man postmaster who was opposed by Kerens.

More Mortgages Iowa Republicans Idea of Success.

The democrats must consider it a disgrace for a man to succeed in this country. They have a printed list of the mortgages held by Mr. Shaw and are circulating them as campaign documents. If they wanted a drygoods box loafer for governor why did they not put that kind of a candidate themselves.—Ida Grove Era, Iowa, (Rep.)

Uncle Sam's Expenditures for September Are in Excess of Receipts.

Washington, Oct. 1.—The monthly statement of the government receipts and expenditures during September, 1897, shows the receipts to have been $21,933,088 and the expenditures $25,368,815, an excess of expenditures over receipts of $3,435,717. For the three months of the fiscal year the excess has been $29,015,954. As compared with September, 1896, there is a loss of $2,651,146 in the amount of the revenues and a decrease of $1,210,720 in the expenditures. The receipts for September are given as follows: Customs, $7,943,100; international revenue, $12,701,975; miscellaneous, $1,288,022. As compared with September, 1896, this is a loss of about $3,400,000 from customs and a gain of about $1,000,000 from internal revenue sources.

The monthly treasury statement shows that at the close of business Sept. 30, 1897, the public debt, less cash in the treasury, was $1,012,122,713, and increase since Aug. 30 of $3,787,592. This increase is accounted for by a corresponding decrease in the amount of cash on hand. The debt is recapitulated as follows; Interest-bearing debt, $847,365,540; debt on which interest has ceased since maturity, $10,334,570. Debt bearing no interest, $378,645,340. Total, $1,227,315,500. This amount, however, does not include $599,070,953 in certificates and treasury notes outstanding, which are offset by an equal amount of cash in the treasury. The cash in the treasury is classified as follows: Gold, $184,561,664; silver, $513,481,747; paper, $133,611,339; bonds, disbursing officer's balances, etc., $18,713,880; total, $850,368,631, against which there are demand liabilities outstanding amounting to $635,175,844, which leaves a net cash balance in the treasury of $215,192,787.—Pioneer Press.

Worshipers of Yellow Metal Would Piteously Plead for an International Agreement.

New York, Oct. 2.—Professor A. S. Chosh of the Calcutta university, a native East Indian, sets forth in an article entitled "India's Case for Silver," in the October number of North American Review the reasons why the people of India desire the re-opening of the Indian mints. Professor Chosh arraigns the British government for blocking the way to an international agreement for the remonetization of silver, charging that by closing the Indian mints it has confiscated one half of the wealth of the people of the Indian empire. He expresses the opinion that England may be forced, out of regard to her own interests, to change her course and he concludes as follows:

"If, however, notwithstanding every entreaty she proves false to her own and the world's interests then she may learn to her cost that other nations can act without her. If she still continues to block the way, if Senator Wolcott's mission fail and the Indian mints remain unopened, then the last hopes of India must lie in Mr. Bryan. If three years hence his efforts are crowned with success, which necessarily they must be if nothing is done meanwhile to solve the great question, he will perhaps find the gold worshipers of Europe, headed by England, waiting in trepidation in his ante chamber to entreat an international agreement. That will be the hour of his triumph and in the anticipation of it the 300,000,000 people of India will wish him godspeed with all the power of their stricken hearts."—Minneapolis Times.

Wright County Times: Thirty-five cents a bushel does not seem to be drawing many potatoes from the farmer this year. That crop is short, and the time will come when the buyer will have to offer at least 40 to 45 cents to get them.

Why don't the Times atttribute the rise in price to protective tariff? Is he admitting that the law of supply and demand figures in prices? We think in this instance he will have to admit the facts.

Valley Herald, Chaska: Potatoes are being hauled in from the country by the load and sold at 35cts per bushel cash. Now is the time to put in your winters supply.

Litchfield Review: The village of Morris is having trouble with the Great Northern Railway company, and is liable to find itself in the same fix as Wayzetta, unless it obeys the orders of company. It seems it is necessary to cut freight trains in three places in order to keep crossings open, and this is too much trouble, so the company has notified the village that unless one street is closed, the depot will be moved, probably to point about a mile west of town. Jim Hill runs things with a high hand in his territory, and does as he pleases even if he does lose a little business and cause the public trouble and inconvenience. Other towns have suffered that have won his displeasure and Morris will probably share a similar fate, unless she does as he says.

The Foot Prints: The town was thrown into a state of wild excitement Saturday evening by the report brought in that an attempt had been made to hold up the meat wagon by a man on a bicycle, the attempt being made about a mile from town. A possee of citizens immediately set out to find the man, but returned without him. The fact was explained the next morning when Pat Cunningham indignantly protested that he had met a wagon, while wheeling towards home, a little ways from town, and as the driver did not appear to see him or act as though he was going to give him part of the road he shouted "hold on do you want the earth?" The driver then shot at him twice and drove rapidly towards town. Pat was indignant and wanted satisfaction, but upon the matter being explained to him he laughed as heartily as anybody at the comedy of errors, which might have been a tragedy had the bullet found its mark.

If your add was here somebody would read it, and might call on you.

It is peopled by the descendants of vikings, including many famous warriors and heroes, but they are so lawabiding that they have but one policeman. The solitary officer is maintained more for ornament and dignity than for use. The Icelanders think it would not do to have a capital without a policeman, and so they keep one.

The talk of an international railroad to connect America with Europe, the route to extend through British Columbia, Alaska, Siberia and Russia, with the short passage across Behring strait as the only break in an all-rail trip, has been revived. The project is no longer regarded as visionary, but on the contrary many men of hard sense believe in its practicability. Recent events serve to show that the day may come when such a route will be completed.

The isolation which has been a feature of farm life is gradually passing away as the country districts have become more thickly settled and railroads have been built. Farmers' wives now have their reading circles, and altogether country life is exchanging its primitive aspect for one of comfort and convenience. The latest suggestion to lessen the loneliness of farm life is by means of the telephone. It is said that already in Kansas a number of ranches are connected with each other in this way. Cheap wiring is used, in many cases the barbed wire fences serving.

Bandits have again taught railroad and express officials that prevailing methods of protection for valuables in express cars are practically worthless by looting a Northern Pacific passenger train in Minnesota. Train robberies are not diminishing in frequency, in spite of the unceasing vigilance of officials, and the time is doubtless approaching when express cars will have to be built as safes are, bullet and dynamite proof. The expenditure of a few thousand dollars on this line of protection would have prevented many of the recent easy robberies of express cars.

It is curious that this present year should record the diamond jubilee of telegraphy, and, at the same time, bring into prominence the possibilities of wireless telegraphy. On July 10, 1837, Cook and Wheatstone's first patent for electric telegraphs was signed by William IV. The Pall Mall Gazette states that on July 4 of that year the first telegraph wire was laid. The circuit was between the Euston and Camden railway stations, under the permanent way of the London & Northwestern railway. The line consisted of five wires, each wire laid in separate grooves cut out of long blocks of wood.

SAGASTA IN POWER.

The Liberal Leader Intrusted with Forming a Spanish Cabinet.

Composition of the New Ministry—Outline of the Policy to Be Pursued—Weyler's Recall Is at Last Assured.

Madrid, Oct. 4.—Sagasta has been commissioned by the queen regent to organize a ministry, and doubtless will send Marshal Blanco to replace Weyler as captain general of Cuba. The chief obstacle in the way of a liberal solution of the crisis was that a loyalist volunteer corps strongly supported the union constitutional party in opposition to the removal of Gen. Weyler; but the general drift of the crisis was favorable to the liberals.

Sagasta's Policy.

London, Oct. 4.—The Madrid correspondent of the Standard says: Sagasta in accepting the portfolio expressed his intention to give the largest possible measure of Cuban home rule, to reverse the conservative policy in Cuba and the Philippines, to recall Gen. Weyler, if he did not resign, to prepare for a dissolution of the cortes and to select able representatives to go to Washington and European capitals, as well as to the colonies of Spain, to prove to America and Europe that Spain is at last going to do spontaneously and sincerely what the United States has suggested could be accomplished more quickly and better by mediation or the interference which the Spanish people would certainly not brook, and to which no Spanish government could assent.

Weyler Is Out.

London, Oct. 4.—A special dispatch received here from Madrid says Capt. Gen. Weyler has been recalled from Cuba. His successor, it is added, has not yet been officially announced, but Marshal Blanco will in all probability be given the place.

The New Cabinet.

Madrid, Oct. 5.—The new ministry is constituted as follows: Senor Sagasta, president of the council of ministers; Senor Gullon, minister of foreign affairs; Senor Groizard, minister of justice; Gen. Correa, minister of war; Admiral Bermejo, minister of marine; Senor Puigcerver, minister of finance; Senor Capdepon, minister of the interior; Count Xiguena, minister of public works; Senor Moret, minister for the colonies.

THE IRRIGATION CONGRESS.

Will Hold Its Next Meeting at Cheyenne, Wyo.

Lincoln, Neb., Oct. 1.—Ex-Senator Carey, of Wyoming, who was elected president of the congress, scored a triumph Thursday by securing the next meeting for Cheyenne, and he was again honored by being chosen as chairman of the national executive committee. Federal versus state control and maintenance of reservoirs in arid districts was the rock upon which the congress seemed destined at one time to split, but the chasm was not so wide but that it was finally bridged, a preponderance of sentiment favorable to federal control being shown on vote to adopt the majority report of the committee on resolutions. Resolutions were adopted declaring that the waters of all streams should forever remain public property and asking the president to withdraw valuable timber lands from sale. A resolution favoring postal savings banks was tabled.

A supplemental report of the committees on resolutions pledging the support of the irrigation congress to the Hermann bill now pending in the national house of representatives providing for the cession to the states of a million acres of arid lands was adopted.

Big Hotel Burned.

Minneapolis, Minn., Oct. 5.—The Hotel Lafayette, Minnetonka's most famous hostelry, is a smouldering ruin. Fire was discovered in the laundry Monday morning at 11 o'clock. Within an incredibly short space of time the huge structure was a mass of flames. In just 40 minutes the flames had eaten their way to the main structure. The building was like tinder and in less than half an hour the entire main building was in ashes. It was the largest summer resort house in the west, being 745 feet long, 95 feet wide and 90 feet high. The total area of floors in the building amounted to 3½ acres or five acres including the kitchen, laundry and servants' quarters, which were all detached from the main building. There were 300 bedrooms, and the halls were 16 feet wide, extending the entire length of the building.

Strychnine in the Coffee.

Schuyler, Neb., Oct. 4.—During Sunday forenoon Frank Steinad came hastily from Shell creek precinct, nine miles northwest, to summon a physician to the home of Frank Davis, where he said the whole family had been poisoned. Dr. Sixta hastened out, and found the mother and four of the seven children in the family dead. A fifth child was in a dying condition, and a sixth victim was ill. Mr. Davis and his oldest son went away early in the morning, leaving before the rest of the family breakfasted. When the meal was prepared all sat down, and early in the course of the meal Mrs. Davis made some such remark as: "Eat a good breakfast and we'll all go together." Strychnine had been put in the coffee, which soon showed its effects.

Death of Ex-Senator McMillan.

St. Paul, Minn., Oct. 4.—Samuel J. R. McMillan, for two terms United States senator from Minnesota, died at ten o'clock Sunday night of anaemia. He was born in Brownsville, Pa., February 22, 1826. He was graduated in 1846 from Duquesne college. He removed to Minnesota in 1852 and in 1864 was chosen an associate justice of the supreme court, was reelected in 1871 and in 1874 was chosen chief justice. In February, 1875, he was chosen United States senator and again in 1881. He was recently a member of the committee on revision of the confession of faith of the Presbyterian church.

Postal Finances.

Washington, Oct. 4.—Henry A. Castle, auditor for the post office department, has closed the books of the postal service for the fiscal year ended June 30 last. The results, compared with the preceding year, show that the receipts increased $166,254 for the year, expenditures increased $3,470,745, while the deficit was increased by $3,304,490. For 1895 receipts were $82,665,462; expenditures, $94,097,042, and the deficit was $11,431,579.

A GREAT LEADER GONE.

Gen. Neal Dow, the Father of Prohibition, Is Dead.

Portland, Ore., Oct. 4.—Gen. Neal Dow died at his residence in this city at 3:30 o'clock Saturday afternoon. The end was peaceful and he retained consciousness until an hour before he died, recognizing his children, who were gathered at his bedside. Gen. Dow's death was due to the infirmities of old age.

GEN. NEAL DOW.

[Gen. Neal Dow was born in Portland Me., March 20, 1804. In the campaign for temperance no single man has achieved greater results than he, and none has labored more faithfully in the face of opposition. Neal Dow was still in his teens when he won his first triumph in persuading a fire company to which he belonged to omit the wines at their annual banquet, and secured the abolition of the local custom of ringing the town hall bell at eleven and four o'clock as a signal for everyone to leave work and get a drink. It was at the age of 33 that he began his fight for prohibitive legislation, when a bill was framed by Gen. James Appleton but not submitted to the legislature.

Two years later, in 1839, an effort was made to secure prohibition in Portland. The matter was put to a popular vote and 564 affirmative votes polled. The fight was continued until 1842, when a majority of 440 decided the question in its favor. The same year the legislature was appealed to, and in 1846 the first state prohibitive law was passed. In 1849 a bill providing more stringent penalties was enacted, but the following year the law was repealed. In 1856 it was again put in force and has since remained on the statute books.

Gen. Dow was twice mayor of Portland and was offered the presidential nomination on the whig ticket in the '50s, but declined to accept. He also served two terms in the legislature. Like most prominent northerners, he was an abolitionist and made many stirring speeches on behalf of the negro, ranking with Garrison, Whittier, Pillsbury, Sumner and Hale.

In 1862 he went to the front with a Maine regiment as colonel, going first to New Orleans to the support of Gen. Butler. Afterward he was in command of Ship island and at Pensacola. He was twice wounded, and by his gallantry won the rank of brigadier general. He was captured while wounded by Logan's cavalry and sent to Libby prison. At his exchange, broken in health, he was forced to retire. In 1880 he was nominated for president by the prohibition party, but did not accept and voted against himself.]

A Point for Luetgert.

Chicago, Oct. 5.—For the time being counsel for the defense in the Luetgert case assumed that the bones offered by the state as evidence were human Monday, and then showed that if the theory is correct the murdered or missing woman was but 40 inches in height. Attorney Vincent had planned the effect with great care, and although the state ridicules the proposition the bold, flat statement created no little flurry in the courtroom. This distinctively new point in the threadbare tale of the bone juggling was brought out in the examination of Dr. Samuel C. Plummer, an expert anatomist. He declared with great confidence that if the state's exhibit No. 19 is really human and the femur of Mrs. Luetgert, the woman was but 40 inches in height—three feet and four inches. Dr. Plummer had previously stated as a scientific fact that the human femur is always one-fourth as long as the whole body. Such noted authorities as Gray and Quaine supported the statement. The alleged femur offered in evidence by the state was at the most ten inches long.

Much Ruin in China.

Tacoma, Wash., Oct. 5.—The steamer Victoria brings news of the most distressing floods that have visited China for many years. Sixty villages near Tung Chou, containing over 80,000 inhabitants, have been destroyed by floods, and the people drowned or forced to flee. There is no means of finding how many thousands have been drowned, but the number is estimated by Chinese authorities at 15,000 to 20,000. The flooded district is within 12 miles of Peking, the capital of China. As a rule Chinese officials make very little stir when a calamity like this happens, but the proximity of the disaster has resulted in its being brought to the attention of the emperor, who has ordered that all possible relief be given.

Tammany Names Van Wyck.

New York, Oct. 1.—The democratic city convention (Tammany) nominated these candidates for officers of Greater New York: Mayor, Robert A. Van Wyck, of Manhattan; comptroller, Bird S. Coler, of Brooklyn; president of the council, Jacob Ruppert, Jr., of Manhattan. It favors home rule and repeal of the Raines law and other restrictions on personal liberty, and demands dollar gas and municipal ownership of franchises. The nominations evoked disapproval rather than enthusiasm in the convention hall.

Offer for Union Pacific.

London, Oct. 5.—The Daily Chronicle publishes under reserve a sensational report that a strong London syndicate has sent the United States government, through Consul-General Osborne, an offer to purchase the Union Pacific railroad. According to this report a New York syndicate has offered £9,000,000 and the government has decided to sell the road at auction on November 1, believing that it will realize at least £10,000,000 and perhaps £11,000,000 or £12,000,000.

To Resume Silver Coinage.

San Francisco, Oct. 5.—As a result of the revival in trade, the mint in this city will at once resume the coinage of silver dollars in accordance with instructions received from Washington. The order necessitated the appointment of 15 new employes, all of which were selected from the eligible list under civil service rules.

Another Nomination for George.

New York, Oct. 5.—Henry George had already been nominated for mayor by two organizations and he received a third nomination for mayor Monday night from the people's party, which will unite with the democratic alliance and the united democracy in the formal notification.

CONDITION OF TRADE.

Failures Show a Lower Average Than for Many Years.

New York, Oct. 2.—R. G. Dun & Co., in their weekly review of trade, say:

"The failures during the third quarter of 1897 were 2,903, with liabilities of $28,963,261, of which 29 were in banking, for $3,387,069. Commercial failures, 2,874, with liabilities of $25,576,192, average only $8,899 each, lower than in any quarter for 23 years. The amount of default liabilities is the smallest in any quarter for five years, and in 15 years only six quarters have shown smaller liabilities. Manufacturing failures, 651, with liabilities of $9,431,191, average but $14,487 each; and trading, 2,164, with liabilities of $12,825,065, average but $5,927 each, both smaller in average of liabilities than in any previous year of which classified records exist.

"The volume of legitimate business continues a little larger than in the same month of 1892, for while the great increase of 27.4 per cent. at New York for the week might be supposed due to speculative activity, in spite of the establishment and growth of the stock exchange clearing house, yet payments through the principal clearing house outside of New York exceed those of 1892 by 3.5 per cent. for the week, and 2 per cent. for September. New York makes settlements for a large part of the country, and the daily average, including this city, was in September, $206,364,000, against $134,859,000 last, $133,310,000 in 1894, $122,733,000 in 1893, and $176,327,000 in 1892, so that the gain over the same month in the best of past years is 17 per cent.

"These evidences of reviving prosperity are the more important because prices for most manufactured products have advanced but moderately, and are much below the level of 1892, while speculative markets are all declining with curious unanimity, as if the large crops, which make grain and cotton weak, would not assure increased business to railways and warrant better prices for stocks. Speculation in wheat and cotton has been set back by bright crop prospects. The wheat estimates of 590,000,000 bushels, about 200,000,000 bushels more than would be required for food and seed, leaving the smallest stocks for six years without replenishment, was followed by decrease in foreign buying and caused weakness. The price of wheat has declined 5 cents and of corn nearly 2 cents for the week. Dismal reports have been frequent, but the market shows more faith in predictions of a large yield and the per cent. has declined a quarter of a cent for the week.

"Turning from speculative markets to productive industry, the change in tone is striking. All industries are pushed to increase working force, with occasional rise in rate of wages, by the growing demand. This is largely for replenishment of stocks, but dispatches show that retail trade at nearly all northern points continues to expand, and dealers well know that increase of working forces and of wages insures a larger distribution of goods. Anxious appeals for speedy deliveries disclose more rapid distribution already than had been expected, and in textile manufactures the works are hindered from taking as liberal orders as they might by doubts about future prices, though having enough to do for some time.

"Slower to gain, because less affected by replenishment of dealers' stocks than other industries, the iron manufacture has been pushed to further expansion by growing demand for finished products, which has caused a little further advance in prices.

"Failures for the week have been 194 in the United States, against 299 last year, and 34 in Canada, against 46 last year."

GREEK CABINET RESIGNS.

M. Ralli Fails to Secure a Vote of Confidence from the Boule.

Athens, Oct. 1.—The Greek cabinet has resigned. The boule (legislative assembly) met Thursday to consider the peace treaty with Turkey and the political situation in general. The galleries were crowded and the proceedings were followed with intense interest. M. Ralli, the premier, mounted the tribune, and after reviewing the events leading up to the beginning of the peace conditions invited the chamber to vote confidence in the government. He proposed a resolution to that effect. Amid great excitement the chamber defeated the resolution by a vote of 93 to 30.

M. Ralli, when presenting to the chamber the preliminary treaty of peace, took strong exception to its terms, attributing to Germany all that had been done against Greece. He declared that he would not submit a resolution approving the treaty, because it was executory, and therefore did not require approval, and also because such a step would be contrary to the sovereign rights of the state and the crown. M. Delyannis expressed his approval of this position, but blamed the government for again asking a vote of confidence, as this had already been accorded. Therefore, presuming that the government was actuated by other reasons, M. Delyannis said that he would withhold his support. The vote was then taken. Later the cabinet resigned.

Star Pointer Again.

Springfield, Ill., Oct. 2.—In a race that was witnessed by at least 65,000 people, Star Pointer, on the Illinois state fair grounds Friday afternoon, not only maintained his reputation as the king of pacers by beating Joe Patchen, but he also lowered the world's pacing record in a race by half a second, making a mile in 2:00½, the record in a race having been 2:01, which Star Pointer made on Saturday, September 18, at Indianapolis, when he defeated Joe Patchen. Star Pointer was greeted with tremendous cheers by the assembled thousands as he passed under the wire in the third heat and the announcement of the lowering of the world's pacing record in a race was received with tumultuous applause.

Stafflebacks Sentenced.

Columbus, Kan., Oct. 2.—The members of the Stafflebach family were sentenced Friday. Ed and George Stafflebach were convicted of murder in the first degree and Mrs. Stafflebach, the mother, was convicted as an accessory. The boys received life sentences in the penitentiary, and the mother received 21 years. Under the Kansas law there is no capital punishment. The Stafflebacks murdered Frank Galbraith at Galena, Kan., last June, and then robbed the body and threw it into an old abandoned mining shaft. The search revealed three other bodies in the shaft. Ed Stafflebach has been declared insane by a board of physicians.

Victims of a Prairie Fire.

St. Paul, Minn., Oct. 5.—A Miller (S. D.) special to the Pioneer Press says: Parties just in from 20 miles north state that as a result of a big prairie fire one man has died and three others may die. Seven or eight were badly burned, one family of five, named Preston, all being in a dangerous condition. Hundreds of tons of hay and grain were destroyed. The fire was caused by men making a fire.

Cubans Starving.

Havana, Oct. 5. — The concentrados are arriving at Havana in large numbers, as they have nothing to eat and in the small towns are dying in the streets. Havana herself is in great want of food. A woman from Artemisa saw three children die of hunger in a train on the way to Havana.

A Domestic Incident.

"John, dear, I wish you'd lend me your knife," she said.

"Yes, love."

"And just ask Sarah to bring down my big apron out the bedroom, and a duster, and some paraffin, and the wash leather."

"And the wash leather. Anything else?"

"Yes; Thomas must clear out the yard and sweep it up a bit. And I shall want some copper wire and the screw hammer and that bottle of stuff for renovating leather and an old brush."

"Is that all? Are you going to repair all the furniture?"

"Don't be silly. I must have some sticking plaster and a few bits of rag and a pail of water."

"Nothing else? It sounds like a surgical operation or a second edition of housecleaning."

"I wish you wouldn't interrupt when I'm trying to think of things. Let me see; there's nothing else—oh, yes, I must have a pair of scissors and my garden gloves and some scouring paper."

"Good heavens! What has happened? I hope it's nothing serious?"

"Bless the man, no! I'm only going to overhaul my bike."—Pick-Me-Up.

An Expensive Bovine Habit.

Among the number of Baltimore fresh air fund children who passed through Washington a few days ago, bound for the cool hill country of Virginia, there was one little fellow who found the very best quarters in a hospitable farmhouse at Front Royal. When the cows came up in the evening to be milked, so a friend down there writes me, the little Baltimore boy went down to the barnyard with his host to see the operation. The cows were standing about placidly, and, as is their custom at that time of the day, were contentedly chewing the cud. The boy watched the milkmaids at work, and his eyes dwelt with growing wonder on the ceaseless grind of the cows' jaws. At length he turned to his host and said:

"And do you have to buy gum for all them cows?"—Washington Post.

Reflections of a Bachelor.

Some folks are so humble that when they get to Heaven they will go 'way around and knock at the back door.

When a man gets excited in an argument he always says it does make him mad to hear people talk so foolish.

Nothing makes a girl so mad as for a man to pretend not to notice when she has fixed her hair up the way he likes it.

When a man goes out to shoot a bear and ends up by picking huckleberries, he is very apt to tell it the other way round.

A man will go to the devil for a woman, and a woman will go to the devil for a man—if she can't get one from somebody else.

When a man has to work hard to get along his wife always says it's because he's so good-natured he lets people impose on him.—N. Y. Press.

"These here quick-firing guns," said Rubberneck Bill, critically examining the weapon left by the gentleman who was being buried—"these here quick-firing guns ain't so important as a quick-drawing man behind 'em."—Indianapolis Journal.

Height of Impropriety.

"Do you know," said the girl in blue, "while we were sitting in the hammock, and just as I thought he was about to propose, a garter snake suddenly appeared."

"How indelicate!" returned the girl in pink.—Chicago Post.

IN AFTER YEARS.

Joy entered the chamber of my heart,
And led me from the grieving world apart.

Through days and years I followed where she led,
Nor thought that Sorrow hovered o'er my head.

Lo! ere the flight of many joyful years,
Grief came and gave to me her gift of tears.

And as she stood my youthful eyes before,
I said: "Behold this ghost here at my door!

"Oh, Sorrow, go! and vanish from mine eyes!"
She spoke: "I am an angel in disguise!

"I come to bless, like softly falling rain;
I am God-sent—accept thy meed of pain."

Then Joy departed; Grief came in my door,
And gave to me her wounds and burdens sore.

My heart rebelled this guest to so receive—
Methought I was too young to learn to grieve.

But now, grown old, I see that Grief was best,
And thank God for His sad-faced angel guest.

—Charles Hanson Towne, in Ladies' World.

The True Story of Many a Housewife.

BY FLORA NEALE.

"WEARY! Pshaw! a woman to talk of being weary. If I had nothing more to do than to take my ease all day in a rocking chair, I would forget how to spell the word. Weary! indeed!"

Having delivered himself of this startling announcement with a contemptuous gesture, Dinwiddle Noodle, Esq., left his wife's presence and sauntered leisurely toward the club room, inhaling the aroma of a genuine Havana.

Sigh away, little wife, perchance it will ease thy heart; but the promised sharer of thy cares is too much engrossed by his own pursuits to heed such trifles now.

Mrs. Noodle committed matrimony 12 long years ago. During that period she had received the congratulations of her friends, and listened to the respective wailings of five little Noodles. Well for them that her patience was as inexhaustible as her mother love.

Her deeds have not been chronicled by Fame; her everyday acts of kindness, her constant sacrifice of self are not even shrined within her husband's heart, and scarcely visible to his self-loving opties.

Patience, bear on, thou shalt yet reap, in joy, the fruits of seed sown in this dark time.

On five young heart pages are daily written lessons of truth and purity that no after teaching will have power to blot out. Daily little feet are guided step by step in the path which leads to the glorious land where they say no longer: "I am weary."

A mother's influence is telling even now upon the miniature world of which she is the center and the circumference.

"It strikes me that Mary is getting unreasonable," Mr. Noodles continued to soliloquize—"if I happen to say at breakfast that the tea is cold, or the toast too brown, she looks as dismal as though she had just returned from the funeral of her last friend; I think there are few men so much opposed to fault-finding as I am, but even I must express an opinion sometimes."

"The tea cold and the toast too brown." Oh, inconsistent Noodle. Just try to remember how long you kept your wife waiting with that cup of tea, for you were too much absorbed in the newspaper just then, and when she offered so cheerfully to make a fresh cup, did you kindly reply:

"Thank you, my dear, I'll not put you to the trouble," or did you growl out: "And keep me waiting an hour, I suppose!"

Did it bring tears to her eyes? Never mind, you promised once, a long time ago, "to weep with her tear for tear."

You forgot it when you gave her that scornful look and muttered:

"I wouldn't make a fool of myself."

Between you and me, friend Noodle, there is little necessity for you to make such an effort.

"Take her ease all day in a rocking chair."

How I should like to see her. But it would afford me greater pleasure to witness the attempts of you, her liege-lord, of one day, to fulfill her varied duties. I think it would require rather more than a rocking chair to rest you at nightfall.

Make a desperate effort to-morrow and rise with the first sunbeam that glances in at your window. She does. She would like sometimes to indulge just a few moments longer, but does not yield to the temptation.

She makes a quick but careful toilet, for you would be sure to remark upon one stray hair, or one wrinkle too many in the tasteful morning dress.

There are five little clamoring Noodles to be attired for breakfast, all in a hurry, falling over each other and hindering greatly in their precocious attempts to help mamma.

It would not be quite so troublesome if there was some assistance from abler hands; but you think one servant enough for any family.

An hour speeds on, in the combined efforts to dress, amuse and quiet the young ones, so that they shall not disturb poor papa, who was awake so late last night.

"What made him awake, mamma?"

Mamma wisely refrains from gratifying the juvenile questioner, and from reasons best known to himself, "poor papa" will think it unnecessary to enter into particulars, not being a temperance lecturer.

Breakfast, under your wife's supervision, is at last announced.

Don't find fault; she prepared that favorite dish herself, and much thanks she receives from you.

"Keep those children quiet, can't you, Mary?"

Five of them are preparing for school. Books are missing, lessons to be repeated just once more, to be sure of winning a good mark.

They are gone at last, and as the tumult subsides you become a little more amiable, and in token thereof take your youngest hope upon your knee. He is the only one of the tribe who resembles you, and as "Papa's own boy," is in a fair way of being a trouble to his mother.

He has been making acquaintance with the contents of the molasses jug, and proceeds to bestow artistical touches upon your immaculate shirt bosom.

Goodness of patience! Where is thy dwelling place?

"Papa's own boy" is speedily impelled from his position of honor, and papa's own hand inflicts summary punishment, which sends the delinquent sobbing to his mother, who has the double task of drying the little one's tears and assisting its irritated paternal in the search for a garment which, according to him, "should have at least one button on it."

Mr. Noodle is very hard on buttons, and strings, but it is impossible to convince him of the fact.

The morning wears away. The schoolboys have returned mischievous and hungry. You told her not to expect you until tea time. So she has had a simple meal prepared, and seats herself to share it with the children, joining in their merry prattle, encouraging the expression of joyous thoughts and feelings, making home the haven of rest and peace, which it always should be for the young.

Hark! There is a quick ring; it is yours. She has learned to know it as well as your step. But you are not alone.

"My friend, Mr. Tompkins, Mary, whom I met unexpectedly, and persuaded to come and dine with me."

You do not heed her despairing glance at the remnants of a meal, which the little ones have left. You do not understand the bewildered—"What shall I do? The fire has gone out and so has Biddy."

You leave her to her cogitations, only suggesting that she had better hurry, as Mr. Tompkins has an engagement to meet a friend in an hour.

Willing little messengers are dispatched in various directions. Biddy is recalled, not very amiable, to be sure, but still her presence is something.

The table is reset, and in a brief space of time you are summoned to another meal, which if not a regular dinner, has an aspect sufficiently tempting to hungry men.

You are somewhat surprised yourself and wonder how Mary managed, thinking she is very clever after all.

If you would only tell her so when you are alone again, in a kindly tone, how it would cheer her.

But you go out after a time and meet other pleasant acquaintances, and forget all about that "impromptu" dinner.

Nightfall brings you home once more. The little ones are sleeping, the elder children are preparing for to-morrow's recitations with mamma as presiding genius, her fingers the while are busily plying the needle.

Your dressing gown and slippers are in readiness upon that cushioned chair.

That's right, don them in silence, open the newspaper, sink back upon the

"PAPA'S OWN BOY."

cushions and become oblivious to everything around you.

The last lingerer says "good-night," closing the door softly. The busy hands have paused—the work is laid aside. Your wife is weary.

Not of struggles in the great world where every day is strife and warfare—not of arduous manual labor, but of the thousand little duties, tasks and trials which go to make up the daily round of woman's life, of a wife and mother, such as Mrs. Noodle.

Woman's proper sphere is home, but because of this, should her intellectual wants be neglected? She yearns for sympathy, for companionship—she has sometimes a craving for a higher grade of literature than "The Nursery Companion," "The Cook's Guide" or "The Seamstress' Encyclopedia."

Add a few instructive and entertaining volumes to her library—read occasionally in the evening, and chat with her upon subjects which interest you, and it will not in the least interfere with her proper duties.

Let her not be weighed down by continual demands upon her time and thoughts by harrassing cares, that weary alike body and mind, prostrating mental energy, and making her not a meet companion for an intellectual man but a mere household drudge. Mrs. Noodle is not a fancy fair. She has many sisters yet alive. Mr. Noodle also has his brethren.—N. Y. Ledger.

Irish of the Sixteenth Century.

They live in huts made of straw. The men are all large-bodied, and of handsome features and limbs, and as active as the roe deer. They do not eat oftener than once a day, and that is at night, and that which they usually eat is butter with oaten bread. They drink sour milk, for they have no other drink; they don't drink water, although it is the best in the world. On feast days they eat some flesh half cooked, without bread or salt, as that is their custom. They clothe themselves according to their habit, with tight trousers and short loose coats of very coarse goat's hair. They cover themselves with blankets, and wear their hair down to their eyes. They are great walkers, and inured to toil. The most of the women are very beautiful, but badly got up. They do not wear more than a chemise and a blanket with which they cover themselves, and a linen cloth, much doubled, over the head and tied in front. They are great workers and housekeepers, after their fashion.—Capt. Cuellar's Adventures, in Connacht and Ulster.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Dead.

Samuel J. R. McMillan, senator from Minnesota from 1875 to 1887, died at his residence in St. Paul, Oct. 3. Death was due to an aneamic condition of the blood.

Senator McMillan was born in Brownsville, Pa., in 1826, on the anniversary of the birth of the illustrious Washington. During his infancy his parents removed to Pittsburg, and at 20 he graduated from Du Quesne college, since merged in the Western University of Pennsylvania.

He moved to Stillwater, and in 1856 went to St. Paul. In 1864 he was appointed associate justice of the supreme court, and in 1874 was chosen chief justice.

During his service in the senate, Mr. McMillan was chairman of the committee on claims, and afterwards succeeded Roscoe Conkling as chairman of the committee on commerce. He also served on the judiciary committee, where his professional attainments won him a high place in the counsels of the senate, and on the committee on revolutionary claims.

Patent Mail Sack.

Last winter the government offered a reward of $5,000 for an invention that would improve the method of locking and unlocking mail sacks, the straps, staples and padlocks taking up too much time for the mail clerks on the fast mail trains. In hopes of acquiring this reward, R. R. Tichenor, of Henning, set to work upon an idea, with the result that he has applied for a patent upon a device which does away with the strap and staples. It is light and durable, opens with a key, but is self-locking, and holds the sack wide open when unlocked. It can be closed and locked with one motion of the hand. Officers of the railway mail service have inspected the device and speak very favorably of it, and have issued orders that it be put to an immediate test.

A Mandamus.

Judge Russell, of Minneapolis, has granted James C. Hawes, the deputy oil inspector appointed by H. W. Foote and removed by F. C. Barrows, his successor, a peremptory writ of mandamus, compelling the last named to restore Hawes to his position. Judge Russell granted an alternative writ of mandamus May 25, but the present inspector failed to respond, and the peremptory writ is accordingly issued. Assistant Attorney General Edgerton has filed notice of an appeal to the supreme court. Hawes was an old soldier and pressed his claim under the new law giving veterans the preference in public positions.

Big Yield of Corn.

Orrin Pike, who lives three miles south of Rochester, can boast of the greatest yield of corn reported this fall in southern Minnesota. He exhibited three stalks, on which were six ears of dent corn. There was one large stalk, the parent, and two suckers, all three the product of one kernel. This was demonstrated to a skeptic when the stalks were broken apart and shown to have grown from the large central stalk. There were 2,264 kernels of corn on the ears, every one of which appeared perfect. This is a new variety of dent corn, though it is sometimes noticed in sweet corn, yet it is seldom that suckers produce anything but nubbins.

A Sensation.

A great sensation in municipal and state circles was created in Minneapolis by the announcement that John DeLaittre, a member of the capitol commission, and a resident of Minneapolis of 30 years' standing, always known as incorruptible, had been approached by one of the city aldermen with the offer of a bribe if he would vote for Kettle river sandstone at the meeting of the commission which was to decide the question of the material out of which the new capitol should be built. Mr. DeLaittre named Alderman Alexander as the man who made the offer.

Beet Sugar Seed.

The report of State Treasurer Koerner on the legislature's sugar beet seed scheme has been completed, and it is shown that out of 27,471 pounds of seed purchased for $2,750.67, 2,232 pounds were sold at an income to the state of $279. The remainder is stored away in Northrup, King & Co.'s warehouse in Minneapolis, waiting for next season. There were 160 orders taken for the seed last spring.

News in Brief.

Mathison Bros.' saw mill at Gilman, Pierce county, was burned. The loss is heavy.

James O'Hara, charged by prison officials with breaking his parole, was arrested at Mankato.

Halvor Skogen, a farmer living near Clarkfield, dropped dead while unloading wheat at an elevator.

Walter Arnold, of St. Cloud, has been awarded the contract for furnishing granite to go into the piers of the Quincy bridge to be built by the Burlington road, for $10,000.

The residence of Robert Roberts at Lake Crystal, together with the contents, were destroyed by fire.

The 4-year-old child of M. Shapiro of Tower was seriously burned while playing in a blacksmith shop. Her clothing caught fire from sparks and she is so badly burned that she will not survive.

A sad accident resulted in the death of 3-year-old Gertrude Droes in Minneapolis. The little one was playing about the yard where a wood cart had just been driven with its load. When the dump came, the child was beneath and was caught under the fall. When picked up the head was found crushed and life was extinct.

E. Engebretson, of the Forest mills, while walking from the depot to his store, fell dead. Heart disease was the cause. He was 70 years old.

Five saloons, one butcher shop and five stores were burglarized at Owatonna in one night. About $50 in cash and considerable whisky were taken.

Apple and plum trees in Minneapolis were in bloom the last week of September.

While trying to put out a prairie fire Mrs. McLaughlin, who lives six miles northeast of Elmore, was very badly burned by having her clothing catch fire. She is 70 years old.

The last drive of the season of the boom company has passed St. Cloud, about 200,000,000 feet being in the drive. A clean rear is being taken down by the hundred men employed.

W. S. Cline, of Minneapolis, was arrested for selling cigarettes to school children.

BEDS AT SEA.

Bunks Still the Common Thing, But the Use of Bedsteads Increasing.

The common idea of a bed at sea is one made in a bunk, and that is in fact the sort of bed that is commonly used on the water, on all sorts of craft. A bunk takes up less room on a vessel, where space is of great value, and the space can be further utilized by placing one bunk above another.

There are, however, some exceptions to this common rule; there having long been on some lines of travel on inland water boats some of whose staterooms are provided with beds on regular bedsteads, and the newest of the great ocean passenger steamers now have each a number of rooms fitted up just as a sleeping room would be in a fine hotel ashore, a bedstead being of course a part of the equipment.

Until within very recent years it is probable that no transatlantic steamer commander had a bedstead in his room, and there are but a very few who have now. The captain sleeps usually upon a couch, a sort of ample lounge, upon which his bed is made, and upon which he can take a nap at other times, as opportunity offers. On the latest great passenger steamers a handsome brass bedstead has been placed in the captain's room. It is doubtful, however, whether the captain makes much use of this at sea; in the crowded waters of the North Atlantic, and in the bad weather he is very likely to get but little sleep, and to take what little he does get with his clothes on.

It is probable that the best provided for man afloat in respect to sleeping accommodations is the American ship captain. On many American deep-water sailing vessels of large size the cabin is of ample dimensions, as it may easily be with the space at command, and, carrying few or no passengers, this space is utilized for the benefit of the captain and the officers. On such a ship the captain's room would be a room of ample size, and a part of its equipment would be a regular full-sized bedstead. The bedstead is, of course, fixed in position so that it will not shift with the motion of the ship at sea. It is placed on the side of the room toward the stern of the ship, and with the head toward the stern, so that the captain sleeps with his feet toward the bow of the ship.

Such a bed on a sailing ship is usually made with four high corner posts to sustain a mosquito canopy, if one should be needed in any of the various latitudes through which the ship may pass on her long voyages. Under the bed the space is filled in solid with lockers, opening on each side like bureau drawers. The sideboards of this bed are made rather deep; they afford a slight degree of protection against rolling out, but not much. The bed is not in this respect built as bunks ordinarily are, being wider, high sides are less needed; and if the ship heeled enough to make sides necessary to keep a man in bed, the captain wouldn't be there at all, but on deck.—N. Y. Sun.

Perfume from Living Plants.

Capt. Smee has discovered a method of gathering the scent of flowers as the plant is growing. He takes a glass funnel and heats the thin end over a spirit lamp. He then draws out the stem to a fine point. This accomplished, the funnel is filled with ice and placed on a retort stand, the pointed end being placed in a small glass bottle, without touching it. After this the stand and the funnel are placed in a greenhouse among the flowers whose odors it is desired to collect. Gradually the vapor rises from the flowers, and, in meeting the colder surface of the funnel, condenses into drops on the outside of the glass. From the point of condensation it trickles down until it drops into the bottle. In a surprisingly short time a large amount of perfume is collected, and it is claimed that 90 per cent. of the contents of the bottle is perfume; the rest is water. Strange to say, this essence of the flower needs to be adulterated with spirits of wine. Otherwise it would become sour and useless.—Pittsburgh Dispatch.

Too Optimistic.

"And," were the concluding words of the professor's lecture to the medical students, "do not promise too much. I knew a physician of real ability who covered himself with ridicule and obloquy by promising a patient, whose legs he had just amputated, that he would have him on his feet within two weeks."—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Mr. Cumrox's son was studying his Latin lesson. There was a tremolo of discouragement in his voice as he remarked:

"I don't seem to get along with this lesson very well, father."

"Can't you say any of it?"

"Yes; I can say 'amo, amas, amat;' and then I always forget what comes next."

"What does those words mean, Johnny?" asked Mr. Cumrox, who deserves credit for being always ready to add to a somewhat deficient early education.

"They mean 'I love, thou lovest, he loves.'"

GOING TO CALIFORNIA?

Phillips' Upholstered Tourist Cars are Best.

150,000 passengers carried in 17 years and all of them pleased, is a flattering testimonial. Jealous imitators have started rival lines, but they lack the facilities and experience of the Pioneers in the tourist car business.

The Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad runs elegant upholstered tourist cars to California points without change, leaving St. Paul 7:00 p. m.; Minneapolis 7:35 p. m., every Thursday via Omaha, Denver and Salt Lake—the Scenic Line.

On November 2d, and each succeeding Tuesday, we will run an additional car via Kansas City and Fort Worth—the Southern Route, no altitudes and no snow.

The time is only FOUR DAYS via either route. In this age, time is an important factor in the selection of a line of travel. The Albert Lea Route being the quickest and best appointed, is most popular.

Through sleeping car berths only $6.00. A gentlemanly Phillips' conductor and colored porter accompany the car to attend to the wants of the passengers.

Meals served in dining cars, or may be prepared on cooking ranges provided for the purpose in a separate compartment.

Full information as to ticket rates, or berth reservations will be given by addressing A. B. Cutts, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad, Minneapolis, Minn.

A Methodical Man.

Just as Wiggins was ready to leave home the other morning to go down to his office, his wife said to him:

"John, I wish you would stop at Blank & Co.'s department store and have them to send me up three yards of goods to match this sample."

"All right," said Wiggins, reaching for the sample. "How much will it cost?"

"I don't remember exactly," replied his wife. "It's 35 or 40 cents a yard."

"But I must know the exact cost," he persisted, "or I can't stop for it. I am in a rush this morning to get down to the office."

"But what difference does it make," asked Mrs. Wiggins, "about knowing the cost of the goods to the penny?"

"A whole heap of difference," snapped Wiggins. "It will save my losing a couple of hours waiting for my change."—Ohio State Journal.

Not So Bad After All.

Torn Tomkins, who had a fragment of a newspaper in his hand, rolled over until he faced Woebegone Williams, nearly setting the haystack on fire in the operation, and remarked:

"Say!"

"Wot?" returned Woebegone Williams.

"I guess mebbe water ain't so bad after all, if a feller tackles it right."

"Such as how?" demanded Woebegone, somewhat startled by the suggestion.

"W'y, here's a item that says Count Maltke has sailed for Havre in the saloon of the Bretagne."

"Say! I thought there was somethin' funny in the way them swell guys keeps crossin' the ocean. Now I understand it."

And after a full and free discussion both decided that they would risk the water themselves under such conditions.—Chicago Post.

After the Pulling.

"If any of my friends call," said the candidate for congress, wearily, as he came down from his private parlor and walked up to the clerk's desk, "tell them I've gone out for a walk."

"Going to stretch your legs a bit?" asked the affable clerk.

"Just the other one," said the candidate sadly.—Detroit Free Press.

SUFFERING WOMEN.

How Many of Them Have Quietly Obtained Advice That Made Them Well.

My sister, if you find that in spite of following faithfully your family doctor's advice, you are not getting well, why do you not try another course? Many and many a woman has quietly written to Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., stating her symptoms plainly and clearly, and taken her advice, which was promptly received. The following letter is a pretty strong confirmation of our claims:

"I had been sick for six months; one doctor told me I would have to go to a hospital before I would get well. I had female troubles in their worst form, suffered untold agonies every month; my womb tipped back to my backbone, had headache, hysteria, fainting spells, itching, leucorrhœa.

"My feet and hands were cold all the time, my limbs were so weak that I could hardly walk around the house; was troubled with numb spells. I have taken four bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, one bottle of her Blood Purifier, one package of her Sanative Wash, and am entirely cured. I have not had one of those numb spells since. Can you wonder that I sing the praises of a medicine that has cured me of all these ills?"—MRS. LOUISA PLACE, 650 Belmont St., Brockton, Mass.

A Thorough Canvass.

Returned Westerner—Yes, sir, those cyclones out west usually make a clean sweep. I lost everything I had in one. It came along about noon, and took house, furniture and everything in sight. And then, I'll be blamed if the villainous thing didn't come back in half an hour.

Eastern Man—Why, how does that come?

"Way, you see, there was a chattel mortgage in the house on some cattle belonging to a neighbor I had lent some money to, and, you may not believe it, but that cussed, grasping cyclone came back and took every head of those cattle."—Puck.

Almost Inside Out.

The stomach that is not turned thus by a shaking up on the "briny wave" must be a well fortified one. The gastric apparatus can be rendered proof against seasickness with that stomachic so popular among travelers by sea and land—Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. It defends the system against malaria and rheumatism, and subdues liver complaint, constipation and dyspepsia.

A Bright Idea.

Algy—I'd like awfully to know whether she'd marry me or not.

Reggie—Why don't you ask her, deah boy?

Algy—By Jove, that's a good idea, I will. What a head you have, old man.—Yellow Book.

Why Is Star Plug Tobacco the Best?

Because it is made from selected stock of the best grade of leaf that grows. The ingredients used in its manufacture are absolutely pure—nothing injurious to the system enters into it.

BUFFALO GAZETTE

DELANO, FRIDAY, OCT. 8, 1897.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE VILLAGE OF DELANO.

DELANO DIARY

—Threshing engine, twelve horse power for sale. Call on C. H. Carlton for particulars.

—For sale, a span of mares; good for a farm team, or good on the road. Apply at this office.

—Pumpkin pies are now in their prime, and people are improving their opportunities to provide them for dessert.

—The Ladies Aid Society of the M. E. church took in about $25 at their fair, supper, and entertainment, on Tuesday evening.

—William Hawker is building an addition to his residence; putting in a cistern and making other improvements on his farm.

—J. E. Borsch is building a nice ware house on the lot back of his store. He is also tearing down a portion of his old store building across the track.

—Somehow the G. N. Trains are often late now a days. This is not their normal way of appearing here; we are accustomed to have trains on time.

—A few ducks have been seen in the air this week. The fine weather holds them about their accustomed haunts, and they don't seem anxious to leave for the south just yet.

—A couple of cases of typhoid fever out of town are in the fourth week, and we hear Watertown has a case. Several other places report cases. This seems to be a favorable season for it.

—The social in the Hall last night, by the ladies of the German Evangelical church was well attended and enjoyed. The supper was superb. The Delano Cornet Band helped make the music.

—Martin Conzet and wife attended the German Old Settler's society of St. Anthony this week. They and Mrs. John Orth, of Minneapolis, are the three left that came to St. Anthony before 1853.

—From the Litchfield Review we learn that Prof. Dewey is captain of the foot ball team, and also plays as guard. The Prof. had a reputation in that line while in Delano, as well as for hustling the studies in great shape.

—Some farmers are putting up the second crop of hay and we believe a few are mowing their meadows for the third time this season. There will be an abundance of feed. We predict a shorter and more mild winter than the last one was.

—Several teams belonging to horse traders passed through town Wednesday. Though they offered horses apparently cheap we heard of no sales. The best place to buy horses is among your neighbors. It is easier to get bit in a horse trade with professional jockies.

—Rev. J. L. Farber preached Sunday evening from 1st Cor. 15, 58. "Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoyable, always abounding in the work of the Lord, forasmuch as ye know that your labor is not in vain in the Lord." Mr. Farber preaches good sermons.

—Farming don't look to be the hard work it was a few years ago. When we drive by fields and see men and even young ladies, riding on spring seat sulky plows, or hay rakes, doing a great deal more work than was possible under the old system, and not even raising a sweat it looks as if they ought to enjoy health and happiness if any one does.

—C. O. Roehr was in town Saturday in the interest of the Farm, Stock and Home. He says a new paper to advocate the Bryan principles of the last campaign is to be started in Minneapolis, about Oct. 15. It will be a weekly, price $1.50 a year, and is to run as a daily as soon as practicable. He authorized us to secure subscaibers at $1.50 apiece.

—From Lyndale, Hennepin County, we received a letter enclosing one dollar for one year's subscription to the GAZETTE, from an Old Jackson Democrat. He says he is sick and don't know as he shall want a paper much longer. Jackson Democrats are growing old, and though the originals all die, the Jackson spirit of Democracy will not be gone.

—Improvements about town continue to be made. Nick Frank is owner of a new cement sidewalk in front of his office. J. W. and F. Q. Lindsley have had the step to their brick store remodled. J. M. Stone is ceiling up the interior of his blacksmith shop. The Meister House is getting a new floor. The I. O. O. F. have had some brick work done on the cellar entrance to their hall building.

—The girls cottage of the state industrial school, at Plankinton, S. D., burned at midnight, Oct. 6. Six girls burned with the building. The other inmates had to run, without even clothing to save their lives. And yet Delano has a two story six roomed brick veneered school house with one front door for ingress or egress; a wooden stairway in the center of the building and no fire escapes. It is positively a dangerous place for children. Fire escapes should be provided. In case of fire, with loss of life, or injury to any, the board would surely be held negligent in the eyes of everybody.

—Dr. Soper now spends his leisure hours breaking his Hamiltonians, and shining them up.

—John Brandser has a stock of winter goods on hand. Get your measure so your clothes can be done before snow flies.

Personal.

Rev. Tabor Davies preached at St. Paul, Sunday.

John Cunningham, of Minneapolis, drove up to the farm yesterday.

Billy Cochrane and S. W. Junken, of Buffalo were in town yesterday.

Rev. J. L. Farber left Wednesday morning for conference at Fergus Falls.

Rev. and Mrs. J. L. Farber drove to Montrose Sunday to attend church services.

Mr. and Mrs. Aaron Ames, of Rockford, drove over on business Wednesday.

T. K. Danforth, of Minneapolis, lately returned from Michigan was in town this week.

George Goodricks family who have been in Dakota for the summer have returned to Delano.

Squire Billings left town at an early hour this morning with a sulky. He went in an easterly direction.

Joe Brenner returned last night from Little Falls where he was a delegate to the Catholic Beneyolent Society.

Fred Haffner, of Moreton, N. D., who came home with his Uncle Will, will stay in town and attend school this winter.

Charley Schwerin, the Minneapplis mail carrier, wheeled up Saturday to spend a short vacation with relatives and friends.

Mrs. George W. Bolton and two children and Miss Alice Arnold drove to Minneapolis Saturday and home again Sunday afternoon.

Mrs Gray, of Minneapolis, who visited with her daughter, Miss Jessie, returned to the city Sunday. She can hurry when a train whistles.

Guy Landis, assistant cashier in the Flour City Bank, and a friend wheeled up Sunday to look over his old home, now the Wm. Lewis property.

Mrs J. R. Davies and daughter visited home, Mr. William Stanley's this week. Rev. D. went to conference Tuesday and will come back for them later.

The Eagle, Times, and Post, denounce the cutting of bills by the County Commissioners. They deserve having their attention called to the matter. They are not elected to cut down bills sworn to by respectable citizens, unless the bills are wrong.

The County Commissioners at their last meeting, allowed bills for themselves amounting in all to $151.10, for 28 days, including mileage. If the mileage was counted on same day as meeting, this would give them about $5.40 per day. Most any man in the county would be glad to receive as good wages per day. Why don't they cut their own bills? Dr. O'Connor had in a bill for medical services rendered a prisoner, amounting to $19.00. It was allowed at $12.00. We believe the Dr. knows better than the board does what his services are worth, and we don't think he would swear it was worth $19.00 unless he thought it was. The bill of the County Superintent and several other bills belonging to men just as honest and reliable as any of the County Commissioners were also cut.

The change in the Fair Hayen and Kingston road was recommended.

The school petition of R. C. Mc Millan was set for Nov. 5 That of Oscar B. Adams was granted.

The laying of a county road in Otsego and Frankfort was granted.

The new bridge at Boam's crossing was accepted.

The Auditor was instructed to notify the County Surveyor to survey the new county roads established.

The Chairman was instructed to confer with Co. Com., of Hennepin Co., and to contract for repairing Dayton bridge.

There is a special interest just now in the carrier pidgeon as a postal department. HOW A PUZZLL WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, 7 authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

WHAT AN EDITOR SAYS.

(From "Our Dumb Animals")

Lives of poor men oft remind us honest toil don't stand a chance;
More we work we leave behind us bigger patches on our pants,—
On our pants once new and glossy, now patched up of different hue.
All because subscribers linger and won't pay us what is due.
Then let all be up and doing; send your mite however small,
Or when the snows of winter strike us we shall have no pants at all!
After LONGFELLOW—a long ways after.

RUMOR says Judge Russel and possibly Judge Jamison will soon resign from the bench. What can be the matter that Judges want to quit? Are they afraid they will be asked to issue injunctions against some body for some corporation and make themselves as unpopular as have several other Judges lately? Don't resign for that. Do your duty, as you see it.

SOME of the gold standard organs apparently think their readers nothing short of simple. They concoct columns of stuff telling them how "Bryanism is dying out." "Free silver is dead." "Towne is about played out." and similar trash. Then they try to make out that Towne wants to run for President or for Governor or anything to get him out of the way. Then they say John Lind has refused to run for Governor again. They had best attend to some of their own candidates.

WHITE and Shaw are the Democratic and Republican candidates for Governor of Iowa. The fight is a hot one. Bryan and Towne are speaking for White, and should he win, which now seems probable, it will be a free silver victory in Iowa. Of course Iowa has been a Republican state by a large majority for a long time, but of late years elected a democratic Governor, and is apt to do so now. Should Shaw win it would be simply holding his own; while if White wins it would denote that Iowa politics have changed in the last decade, and have changed to stay.

THE fight in Greater New York for Mayor has been arranged, so far as we can see, on the national, or international question of free silver. Four candidates are up. Seth Lowe represents the wealthy and their interests. Henry George represents free silver; the city owning its own railroads, and other money making institutions; and is the poor man's friend. Gen. Tracy is the republican nominee and Van Wyck the Tammany ring nominee. Each seem to have been nominated to aid Lowe and hurt George. The fight is between Lowe and George. Should Lowe win, the papers would cry out "Gold Standard Victory." Should George win they would call it a purely local affair. To us it looks like a rough and tumble between free silver and gold standard with the chances in favor of free silver, and George for Mayor. Surely after the Palmer campaign few will vote for side candidates, of whom there is a super-abundance, and not spend so much time in telling what free silver people will do.

Present indications are that next fall John Lind will be asked to run for Governor, that he will accept, and be elected, too; that Charles A. Towne will resume his seat in Congress from the sixth Minnesota district; and that in another two years William Jennings Bryan will head the hosts for President and be successful in his efforts to restore to the people their Constitutional rights which are so surely and so rapidly being stripped away from them, by the cunning hand of greed and self aggrandizement.

Bryanism dead! Why even the few lines of telegrams concerning a meeting in his own state where he is known and has been heard by all, are obliged to state that the crowd was so great as to tear down fences and remove obstructions to their getting near enough to hear. 40,000 people listening to Bryanism, unadulterated and pure, from the fountain head. Does that agree with the organs lines on "Bryanism Dead"? Hardly. Bryanism is dead in earnest. It is true to its convictions. It is working for the good of the people, and like leaven is working the whole lump. That's how Bryanism is dead.

JUDGE TARBOX, of Monticello, held court for several days in Minneapolis instead of Judge Simpson, who has been very sick.

THE St. Cloud Time's Autumn Edition arrived this morning. It is a credit to the publishers and to the people of St. Cloud.

THE new Spanish commander in Cuba, Gen. Ramon Blanco, who takes General Weyler's place, is to act with great energy against the insurgents. Weyler is being received at home in grand style according to reports from Spain.

THE terms of Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, Mitchell, Canty, and Buck expire next year and discussions are already going on as to successors. It is a long time yet before nominations are to be made. Perhaps they may be their own successors.

THE Globe is having a serious time parading the views of that back number candidate for President, Horace E. Boies, of Iowa. They claim he has the Windom plan for fixing finances. Windom said there was not enough gold or silver for a single standard of either.

ON Tuesday, Nov. 2, nine states, Massachusetts, New York, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Virginia, Kentucky, Iowa, Nebraska and Ohio will have elections. Then will the gold standard press endeavor to explain how the issues were not of national importance. Look out for some surprises.

IT seems strange to read in gold standard papers their exultant remarks on the good times coming because of the large sums of gold arriving and to arrive from the Klondike country. Our primary money is to be increased and times made good. If an increase of primary money will, in their opinion, make good times, why don't they vote to restore silver to it's rightful place as a part of our primary money? Can it make any material difference what the primary money is made of so long as it is primary money? Isn't gold and silver both better than gold and Klondike gold? Isn't a bird in hand better than a bird in the bush?

THE good looking Joel Heatwole is being boomed for the nomination on the republican ticket, for governor. We would prefer a man in the governor's chair who did not use so many swear words, even though he was not so good looking. We believe we should surely vote for John Lind in preference to Heatwole. John's record in this line is better in this part of the country, than is Joel's. We don't believe in a candidate swearing from the day of his candidacy to election day expecting to swear himself into office, even if he is good looking. That might go around some places at Washington, but we country folks prefer something different in our chief executive officer.

THE police news, of St. Paul and Minneapolis don't seem to improve much. It is claimed that in the saintly city a man was robbed on the street and when a posse of about fifty people had surrounded the victim and were chasing the thief, the police happened along and took the man that was robbed aboard their wagon and hauled him around to the police headquarters, while the robber ran off.

In the sawdust burg a man went to headquarters to report the loss of a watch and when he came out his wheel, he had left outside, was gone.

Why, a fellow from the country will scarcely dare to go to either city. If he looses his purse he is liable to arrest. If another fellow looses his, any bystander is liable to be run in for a pickpocket. Its terrible.

SENATOR C. K. DAVIS is delivering a course of lectures on International Law, at the University this week. The Dispatch reports him:

In describing the sources of international law Senator Davis paid a tribute to moral law. "the own inner consciousness of man, the thing which deals with right and wrong, is the depository of international law, which, from its unfailing sources, gives rise to usage and controls in the due process of time."

The forces that compel obedience to this law of states he summarized as public opinion, international boycotting, restrained intercourse and finally war. He had no patience with those writers who asserted that there was no such thing as international law because there was no such thing as international law because there was no supreme power to enforce its rules.

Negro Postmasters.

"If President McKinley would appoint negro postmasters in the North instead of the South, he would play better politics. All that has been done to annex the better element of the South to the Republican party is being thrown away by giving offices to negroes where they are not wanted."—New York Dispatch. (Rep.)

Congressman Page Morris, of the sixth district, seems to be in need of dark horses for some of his offices. Perhaps he could profit by the Dispatches suggestion.

DEMOCRATS in Indianapolis have elected a mayor by 5,000 majority, six councilmen at large, by from 3,500 to 4,000 majority, and probably 11 of 15 ward councilmen, and free silver was an issue. Hoosiers evidently don't believe Bryanism defunct, right in ex-President Harrison's home, even though the combined press of Republicans and National Democrats do try to have them think so.

Electrocuted.

Midhael Sikes, an old electrician at St. Cloud, and considered a careful man, while at the top of a pole to make repairs, in front of the residence of A. Barto, grasped the live wires in both hands and was killed. He fell into the arms of a fellow workman, dead. He leaves a wife and two children to mourn his death.

"I'm a Democrat."

Henry George's campaign cry is: "I am a Democrat." Wonder if he bought the copyright of Ex-Senator David B. Hill. The latter doesn't appear to have any use for it any more. —Minneapolis Tribune.

Guess not. It don't sound like David's war cry. It has a much better ring to it.

"National" Democrats.

From several places announcements are being published that a meeting of "Democrats" has been held and a vote taken as to whether or not Henry George shall be considered the regular Democratic nominee for Mayor of Greater New York. How Democrats in Milwaukee, where they voted no, for instance can enlighten New Yorkers on this subject is a mystery. We suspect they should have signed their protests "National Democrats." When Henry George openly declared himself, in the monster mass meeting, as running on the Bryan platform, that settled it with New Yorkers. Of course he is the regular Democratic nominee and bound to be elected.

Greatest State Out.

Windom Citizen: The beautiful consummation of machine politics, ring-rule and bossism in Minnesota would be the nomination of Daye Clough for United States Senator, Tams Bixby for governor and Tim Byrnes for Lieutenant governor: then bring back Goodnow from Shanghai for state auditor.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

Don't our Republican friends believe in Civil Service Reform? If not, are the above named gentlemen entitled to the aforesaid honors through the plan of "to the victors belong the spoils? It beats all how some people object to paying the laborer his hire. Hasn't the above named quartette done most of the singing for years past and arn't they entitled to what the hat contains, gate receipts, etc. etc? If you don't like him some more vote for John Lind and his associates the next time you have an opportunity.

Hurrah! Hurrah!

(From the St. Cloud Journal-Press.)

When one gets down to the real facts of the case it may be summed up about as follows: When there are two or more men after one office, somebody is going to get left, and that somebody is going to feel sore, and it won't make a continental bit of difference whether his congressman's name is Henry Clay or John C. Calhoun. The best any of them can do is to find out what the people want, and act accordingly. The votes of the office holders never elected anybody. The people are the power in this country.—Duluth News Tribune.

Hennepin County Hints.

COUNTRY X ROADS, State of Minnesota, United States of America, Oct. 9, 1897.

Buffalo Gazette. Mr. Editor. Now that the harvest has passed and the summer is ended, I wish to give in my testimony as a second grade farmer. There is an old proverb that says all is not gold that glitters. Neither is every farmer on a Klonkike foundation.

During the spring and summer we had heavy rains and very frequent; too much for the growing crops, and therefore the yield of wheat and oats, also corn and potatoes, is short in quantity and quality. The newspapers of the cities in writing up the wheat crops of Minnesota and the Dakota's have greatly exaggerated the yield of wheat and that is one thing that will help keep down the price of the wheat. Farmers know that no such amount of wheat as they tell of is in sight. Then it is an easy matter for the railroad companies to cause a blockade, and say they can not haul the wheat, and this will help bring down the price of wheat. And yet we farmers are told of the great blessings we receive from corporations and monopolies. Well, to a certain extent we are benefited, but the profit all goes to the other fellow.

Now the money power, the trusts and monopolies do not intend that the farmer shall get much of this world's goods. They have been sizeing the farmer up for a good many years and they come to the conclusion that the farmer was getting to much of the good things of this world.

With a wheat famine in the Eastern world and a shortage in this country, the farmer of this country should get about $1.25 a bushel for his wheat, but it is not intended that the farmer shall have the fat-he might make a good fat roast for the Cannibal Islander-but would be poor diet for one of our millionairs.

Even some of the newspapers have tried to make the poor farmer believe that it was on account of great prosperity this country had receeived, that he was getting 80 cts a bushel for his wheat. They ought to be ashamed to look a dog in the face and tell such a lie as that. I venture to say there is hardly a farmer outside of the insane asylum that will swallow such a statement. When the bulk of wheat is bought up by the speculators then the price will go up. Some say the farmer is always kicking. Well he has some reason for so doing. They put the price on what he has to sell and what he buys and yet we know many of the farmers are willing tools, many of us can be easily humbugged. During the last ten years our farm property has greatly decreased in value, but our taxes are enormous. The time has come when it will be necessary for every man to look after his own interest.

We are now living in the last decade of the 19th century, and all the cry is for the dollar stipend regardless of reform. But if a single gold standard and a high protective tariff is a saying ordinance, then this country is safe and the people have nothing to fear. But it seems that politics can not leaven the whole lump. As to the farming industry it is the oldest occupation in existence and yet by many as little respected as any. Should all the farmers go out of business the country would be in a worse condition than they are on the Klonkike.

Is the farmer of this country protected against the pauper labor of Europe as they talk so much about on the other side of the house, when the wheat growing countries of Europe have an abundant crop of wheat? How are the farmers of the United States protected when the price of our wheat is fixed in Liverpool?

"In those days there was no King in Israel: Every man did that which was right in his own Eyes."

"As a jewel of gold in a swines snout, so is a man without discretion.

Wabasha Democrat: A daily paper has been started at Albert Lea, and a new paper, making number five, is about to be established at Faribault.

Broad Axe: Almost the moment after the Dingley bill was signed by the president, sugar an other articles controlled by the trusts were advanced in price. This is what the republicans call prosperity.

Valley Herald: The "Volkzeitung," of St. Paul, Hon. Chas. Lineau's paper, is in trouble. The court has appointed a receiver and the mortgagees have forclosed and taken possession, and the d-l is to pay generally. What the outcome will be is hard to tell. This paper was at one time a paying plant; it seems to be otherwise now.

It appears to be almost impossible for our wheat buyers at this place to get cars for shipping. They have been ordering cars for the past two weeks but failed to receive any. The shipments of grain on other lines must be very large, or J. J. Hill's supply of cars must be very small if he cannot supply his customers with better accomodations.—Carver County News, Mayer Items.

N. Y. World: Mr. Bryan's future was supposed to depend in some measure upon the result in Nebraska, where he succeeded in effecting a fusion. But his extraordinary hold upon the party everywhere, as evidenced by the resolutions, speeches and cheers in favor of his renomination in the Democratic conventions in Pennsylvania and Massachusetts, renders it probable that even a defeat in Nebraska—which he does not anticipate—would not disturb in the least his position as the uncontested leader of his party.

Challenged God.

"In the Town of Hanover, in Germany," Evangelist Moody writes in his Bible Class discourse in the Ladie's Home Journal, "there is buried a German countess who denied the existence of God and ridiculed the idea of the resurrection. To further show her contempt for Christianity she ordered that on her death her grave should be built of solid masonry and covered by large stones bound together by iron clamps. On this tomb was engraved her defiant challenge that through eternity this tomb should never be disturbed. But one day the seed from some tree, either blown by the wind or carried by a bird, became lodged in a small crevice of the tomb, where soon it sprouted and began to grow. And then, as if nature had seemed to mock the haughty infidel, she quietly extended the delicate roots of that seedling under the massive blocks of stone and slowly raised them from their place. And now, although scarce four generations are passed since that tomb was sealed, that most insignificant seedling has accomplished what God himself was challenged to accomplish."—Minneapolis Times.

A good many Republican papers are fond of asserting that the silver issue is dead and that Bryan is played out. We may admire their zeal, but can hardly commend their judgment. It is poor policy to underrate the enemy, and the phenomenal crowds which gather to hear Mr. Bryan wherever he speaks indicate that he still has a hold on the public which cannot be ignored. Whether it is due to his attractive personality or to the fact that free silver still has a strong hold on the public mind, it makes Mr. Bryan a formidable political factor, and it will be well for those who expect to beat him if he happens to run for president again, not to forget it.

He spoke at Kansas City on the 6th, and according to the Associated Press report, 40,000 people gathered to hear him. The crush was so great that fences were broken down and many people were injured. The eagerness of the multitude can hardly be attributed to curiosity, for Bryan is a well known figure in that region. He has been speaking throughout that section for years, from the stump and the platform, and it is probable that everybody who is in the habit of attending public meetings has had the opportunity of hearing him more than once. It is only since he became representative of the cause of what he calls "bimetallism," that his popularity has reached its great hight. And this popularity, his defeat at the last presidential election, and the slump of silver and the rise of wheat, do not appear to be able to kill. This is a stubborn fact to be reconed with, and the wise politician will reckon with it and endeavor to analyze it, whether he is a supporter or an opponent of Bryan and Bryanism a friend of free silver or of sound money.—Minneapolis Tribune.

We are gravely informed that a new and rich gold vein has been discovered in the neighborhood of Lake Wawa, Ontario, and that experts have assayed some of the product up to $692 to the ton. Gold veins and similar El Dorados in the silver and copper fields are now a matter of daily discovery, and if the mining speculators are not careful they will soon give the lay public the impression that gold mines are plucked off raspberry bushes in the boundless and optimistic west.

In Coburg, Canada, a 70-year-old man kissed his niece against her will. The indignant woman at once commenced suit for $2,000 damages and at the trial she was awarded 20 cents. It is probable that Canadian courts would ordinarily estimate the value of a kiss at a much higher rate than a couple of dimes, and that a large reduction was made in this case on account of the near relationship of the parties. If the lady had been kissed by her father it is likely that she would not have recovered more than a nickel.

Thomas A. Edison was asked the other day what he thought of those Chicago men who claim to be manufacturing gold from the baser metals. The inventor, it is said, did not reply categorically to the question, but smiled significantly and picked up from his desk a cablegram which had just been received from Italy. The dispatch read: "To Edison, Orange, N. J.: Have invented perpetual motion. Will you help me perfect it?" "You will notice," he said, with a far-away look, "that a great many remarkable discoveries are being made this year."

Some members of the party of 315 colored emigrants who left Savannah for Liberia by the steamer Labrador in March, 1896, have returned to the United States with the report that the condition of those left behind in Liberia is most pitiable. They assert that more than half the Labrador party are dead and the rest of them are trying to reach the United States, that the land promised them by the Liberian agents turned out worthless, and that the climate of Liberia is most unhealthy. Thus ends a chimera that once enchanted a large proportion of the colored southern population.

Some day when the ordinary routine is light a congressional committee should be appointed to find out why it is that the woman who elopes or horsewhips a rival or hits her husband with a hatchet is invariably "a society leader" or "one of our prominent society people." The latest illustration of this comes from Indiana, where "a society leader" has just deserted her husband for a man with a tandem bicycle. As a matter of fact, her action shows that she is undoubtedly a very common, ordinary woman, whose society aspirations never got beyond a bicycle riding academy or a roller skating rink.

RETURN WITH GOLD.

Fifteen Miners Who Found Fortunes in the Klondike.

Many Times That Number, However, Come Back Disappointed — A Railroad to Yukon Is Under Way.

Victoria, B. C., Oct. 11.—On the steamer City of Seattle, which arrived Sunday from Skaguay and Dyea, were about 160 disappointed miners who are returning after having given up all hopes of getting into the gold fields, and also 15 successful miners who are returning from the Klondike. Each one of the latter party has struck it rich. Some were bringing out as much gold dust as they could carry, and drafts on the Alaska Commercial company, with which they have deposited the rest. The gold dust and drafts brought out by this party are over $4,000,000 in value, with individual holdings running all the way from $20,000 to $150,000. All have good claims and will return. They bring news of rich discoveries on French gulch, Hunter creek, Henderson and Sulphur creeks.

Railroad Over the Pass.

Tacoma, Wash., Oct. 12. — Last week actual construction work was commenced on the first railroad to cross one of the Alaska passes toward the headwaters of the Yukon river. This railroad will be eight miles long, reaching from Dyea to the mouth of Dyea canyon. By 8½ miles of aerial tramways freight and passengers will be transported 7½ miles and lifted 3,500 feet to the summit of Chilkat pass, and then let down 500 feet in a distance of one mile to Crater lake. The contract for this tramway was let to Newton M. Bell, representing the Trenton (N. J.) iron works. He agrees to have it in operation by January 15 next. The railroad will be completed by that date, and the company expects thereafter to transport daily 200 men and their outfits from tidewater to the headquarters of Lake Lindeman.

Good Luck Brings Insanity.

Tacoma, Wash., Oct. 12. — Men are going crazy in Klondike over the excitement arising out of big gold strikes. Miners do not even take time to eat. A man named Johnson washed $30,000 out. The excitement killed him.

Gold Production in United States.

Washington, Oct. 11. — The increase in the production of gold in the United States for the year 1897 is marvelous. The estimated yield is as follows:

Colorado	$24,000,000
California	20,000,000
Black Hills (four largest mines)	7,800,000
Arizona	6,500,000
Montana	6,000,000
Idaho	4,000,000
Oregon	3,000,000
Total	$71,300,000

Washington, Wyoming, New Mexico and Nevada will also be heavy producers, and their yield will be enormously increased. During 1897 it is estimated the yield of the Klondike will be $8,000,000. Although on Canadian territory, the district is freely spoken of as American. Counting this the yield of the United States for 1897 will exceed $80,000,000—one-third of the world's estimated output for the year.

CHECKED BY DROUGHT.

Business in the West and Northwest Suffers as a Consequence.

New York, Oct. 9. — Bradstreet's says of the business outlook:

"Distribution of general merchandise in the central west and northwest is further checked owing to the prolonged drought in Kentucky, Illinois and Kansas, portions of Missouri, Nebraska, Iowa, Minnesota and the Dakotas. Telegraphic advices to Bradstreet's report serious damage in Kansas and parts of Nebraska and Iowa, where early-planted wheat is up and budding out, that planted later is not likely to sprout. Fall plowing is now impossible, six weeks without rain having dried up pastures and compelled farmers to feed stock.

"Manufacturing industries throughout the west, particularly iron and steel, continue active, and there is an increasing tendency on the part of the interior merchants to remit promptly. While the volume of trade has decreased at Chicago, it is ahead of the like record in recent years. There is a moderate improvement in business in the south, Alabama having raised the quarantine against Georgia cities, and central and northern Texas points having resumed commercial relations with Galveston. Planters continue to hold cotton, which delays collections. Higher prices this week are reported for cotton, which has been declining for some time; coal and clothing in sympathy with wool; for naval stores, under heavy purchases by large traders; wheat, wheat flour and eggs, print cloths, lard, beef and sugar have declined. Hides are weaker, lead is lower and Bessemer pigs sold off 50 cents a ton under heavy speculative offerings, notwithstanding the iron and steel markets as a whole remain active and firm."

More Money Order Offices.

Washington, Oct. 9. — The post office department has adopted a policy of general extension of the money order system. First Assistant Postmaster General Heath believes that any post office wanting money order facilities should be given them. Complaints have been constantly filed by business houses that their correspondents at villages are unable to send money orders because their post offices have no such facilities. During the past fiscal year almost 27,000,000 money orders were issued, amounting to a little less than $200,000,000. The total number of money order offices in operation is about 22,000, and the number probably will be increased to 30,000 by the next fiscal year.

Wins the Temple Cup.

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 12. — The "Temple Cup" will stay in Baltimore another year. It has been won twice in succession for the first time in its history, and if the "Orioles" take it again it is theirs absolutely. The former champions also take 60 per cent. of the money paid in at the gates during the three games in Boston and the two played here, while the winners of the "pennant" will get but 40 per cent., unless, as is generally believed, the players have agreed among themselves to divide the spoils equally. Score of Monday's game: Baltimore, 9; Boston, 3.

New Senator from Mississippi.

Jackson, Miss., Oct. 12.—Gov. McLaurin wires from his home in Brandon that he has appointed Senator-elect Hernando De Soto Money as United States senator to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the late Senator J. Z. George, whose term expires in 1899. Senator George before his death having declined again to be a candidate for office, an election for the regular term was necessary, and the last legislature, after a long deadlock, elected Mr. Money for the regular term beginning in 1899.

WEYLER RECALLED.

Spanish Cabinet Names a New Governor General for Cuba.

Madrid, Oct. 9. — The cabinet has decided upon the immediate recall of Gen. Weyler from Cuba. Capt. Gen. Blanco y Arenas, marquis of Pena-Plata, will be the new governor of the island. Gen. Blanco will be accompanied by Gen. Arderine as vice governor of Cuba, by Gen. Gonzale Painals, as chief of staff, and Gens. Pando, Bernal and Canella. According to El Heraldo, 20,000 reinforcements will accompany Gen. Blanco to Cuba.

The government is resolved to deal quickly and energetically with Weyler, chiefly in order to prevent his organizing in Havana more demonstrations in his favor or create other difficulties to the government.

The change in captain generals is regarded as assuring a radical change in policy in dealing with the insurgents in Cuba, but that the war is to be carried on with vigor is manifest from the statement made with apparent authority that the cabinet has determined to send to Cuba with Gen. Blanco 20,000 reinforcements.

New York, Oct. 12. —A dispatch to the World from Madrid says: The minister of war has cabled to Gen. Weyler to embark for Madrid immediately, handing over the command to Marquis Ahumada, or Gen. Linares. All high civic officials and the principal lieutenants of Weyler will be replaced promptly. The government telegraphs an order to cease instantly all severities and all rigorous methods of warfare practiced hitherto. A cable message has been received at Madrid from Gen. Weyler saying that he embarks for Spain on October 20, the first steamer sailing on that date.

IRISHMEN MEET.

National Convention of Independent League in Dublin.

Dublin, Oct. 12.—The first general national convention of the Irish Independent league, organized by John Redmond, M. P., the Parnellite leader, opened Monday afternoon in the ancient concert rooms here. Eight hundred enthusiastic delegates participated in cheering every point in the speeches which met their approval, and in jeering the names of Dillon, Healy and Davitt, as well as hissing the name of Mr. Gladstone when Mr. Redmond characterized him as "the Englishman who betrayed Ireland." Every reference to the struggle of 1798 was greeted uproariously, particularly Mr. Redmond's reading of the oath taken by the revolutionists. All the speeches paid tribute to the patriotism of the late Charles Stewart Parnell. Resolutions were adopted in substance as follows:

Reaffirming that the Irish question can only be settled by the concession of national self-government, and calling upon all members of parliament who "for the last few years have pursued a mistaken policy" to "rejoin the independent party, unite upon the principles of Charles Stewart Parnell and demand the release of the political prisoners as an act of simple justice and humanity; urging the Irish everywhere to commemorate the centenary of 1798; denouncing the government for repudiating the report of the royal commission of the financial relations between Great Britain and Ireland; expressing regret at the necessity of raising a Parnell family fund, and calling upon Irishmen generally to respond to the appeal, and "thereby remove from Ireland the stigma of ingratitude for the priceless services and devotion" of the late Charles Stewart Parnell, and "calling upon Messrs. Dillon, Davitt and Harrington to pay out of the portion of the Paris fund allotted for that purpose the £5,000 ($25,000) due to the Parnell estate."

Estimate of Naval Expenses.

Washington, Oct. 11.—It is the opinion of Secretary Long that almost $32,000,000 will be necessary to defray the expenses of the navy and marine corps during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1899. Having employed the pruning knife at all points where it was possible to do so, the secretary has drafted a letter to the secretary of the treasury, forwarding the estimates of appropriations required by the two services. The exact total of the estimates is $31,991,727.55. The estimates submitted to congress by former Secretary of the Navy Herbert for the present fiscal year amounted to $34,215,936.19. The apparent smallness of Secretary Long's total is due to the fact that that official proposes to make a special estimate in his annual report for docks and additional ships.

Was a Long Drought.

Chicago, Oct. 12.—The drought is broken. Rain has come to the rescue of the country. Beginning Saturday night the whole upper Mississippi valley has received the benediction of a shower. Never within the recollection of men or in the period covered by authoritative record has so long a season of drought prevailed over so wide an area of country. Crops have suffered, fruit has been blasted, fires have leaped up as if from spontaneous combustion in fields and woodland, and every moment of the time since the middle of August has been crowded with danger to cities. Farmers have been hauling water for their stock, even buying the fluid in many sections of the country.

Six Men Fall from High Trestle.

Cincinnati, Oct. 12.—A special to the Commercial Tribune from Newcomerstown, O., says: At Oldham's Station, on the Cleveland & Marietta railway, about 20 miles south of here, Monday, the section crews of Samuel Geary and Robert Price, nine men in all, were on a hand car grossing a trestle about 45 feet high when a crowbar fell in front of the wheels, derailing the car and throwing it and six men to the ground below. The men who went down with the car, Gadd, Price, Wilson, Brades, Whitacre and Geary, were all terribly injured. Whitacre and Gadd soon after the accident died. The dead and injured were taken to Cambridge. The injured men will probably recover.

Delays Her Answer.

London, Oct. 8. — Arrangements have been made to hold an informal conference between the chancellor of the exchequer, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, and other British officials on the one side and the United States monetary commissioners and Col. Hay, the United States ambassador, on the other side, for the purpose of securing a more definite understanding as to what the United States and France expect. Consequently the British government will be unable to fulfill the promise of the chancellor of the exchequer to give the United States commissioners a reply during the present month, and the delay will possibly last some weeks.

New Minister to Bolivia.

Washington, Oct. 9.—The president has appointed George H. Bridgeman, of New York, minister to Bolivia.

THE PEOPLE TO BLAME.

Their Stupidity Prevents Stamping Out of Yellow Fever.

New Orleans, Oct. 12.—From the returns there is little hope in the yellow fever situation. The board of health is daily demonstrating that with a fair show, it is possible for modern science to restrict and stamp out the disease. But the people who must suffer from a strict application of scientific methods rebel, the result being that the pathway of the board of health is beset with difficulties. If there was strict compliance with the health laws, if prompt report was made of cases, the fever germs would quickly be wiped out. But it begins to look now as if from 30 to 40 cases and from four to six deaths will be daily reported until Jack Frost puts in an appearance. Monday, as on nearly every day since the fever first appeared here, about 50 per cent. of the fatalities was traceable to neglect and a disposition to hide cases until it was too late to do anything to save life. New cases of yellow fever Monday, 39; deaths, four; total cases to date, 616; total deaths to date, 65.

At Biloxi Monday there were 12 new cases; at Edwards, five cases and two deaths; at Clinton, no new cases; at Nitta Yuma, no new cases, one death; at Scranton, nine new cases, no deaths.

Mobile, Ala., Oct. 11.—Seven cases of yellow fever, two deaths in the city, ane one at Magazine Point, three miles distant, and three recoveries, make the record for this city for the past 24 hours. Total cases to date, 121; total deaths, 20.

Jackson, Miss., Oct. 11.—There are no new cases of yellow fever at Nitta Yuma. At Edwards there are nine new cases, four of which are of colored persons, and one death. The state board of health has advised the industrial institution at Columbus, Miss., not to open the fall term until general frosts occur in the state.

OUR FINANCES.

Synopsis of Annual Report of the United States Treasurer.

Washington, Oct. 12.—The annual report of the treasurer of the United States will show that on June 30, 1896, the total available assets of the treasury were $855,685,321 and on June 30, 1897, they had increased to $874,764,377. Of these sums $308,354,448 was available on June 30, 1896 and $283,295,424 on June 30, 1897, for the strictly fiscal operations of the government. On June 30, 1896, $547,330,973 and on June 30, 1897, $591,468,953 was held on deposit against outstanding certificates and treasury notes. In addition to the net ordinary revenues, the treasury received $15,448,970 in deposits for the retirement of national bank notes and $3,250 in refunding certificates for conversion into bonds, so that the total income available for the fiscal operations of the year was $363,173,925. As against this there was disbursed besides the ordinary expenditures the sum of $11,378,502 on account of bonds and fractional currency, and the further sum of $11,092,355 in the retirement of national bank notes, making a total of $388,245,017. The net loss of available cash arising from these operations, therefore, was $25,071,091. In the issue of paper currency, the operations of the year, which amounted to $374,848,000, were exceeded in only one year—1892—and then by only a narrow margin. The redemptions, amounting to $330,710,020, were also relatively higher. The presentation of national bank notes for redemption increased to such proporions as to overtax the capacity of the force employed in counting and assorting, and required considerable advances to be made out of the general funds of the treasury. By an increase of the force, however, the arrearage of work was brought up before the close of the year.

Huge Water Main Bursts.

New York, Oct. 11.—A large Croton water main burst early Sunday morning at the corner of Madison avenue and Forty-eighth street, the heart of the fashionable district, and wrought such havoc with property, both near and remote, that not even a partial calculation can be made of the financial damage at present. The big water main was probably cracked by a blast which was fired in a sewer excavation late Saturday afternoon. Then in the night time, when the strain on the pipe was greatest, it gave way and the flood followed. The breaking of a four-foot pipe was announced by a rumbling noise which awakened the people in the immediate vicinity. Looking out of their windows they saw a great geyser in the middle of the avenue shooting a vast volume of water into the air, a column so high that it reached almost to the top of the electric light pole on the corner. Those who had no view of the fountain heard a mighty rush of water. For five hours this column shot into the air before it was shut off at its source, and in that time 10,000,000 gallons of water had run down the avenue and side streets on either hand. All the streets east of Madison avenue slope gradually, and down them the water surged in a torrent, flooding the cellars and basements.

Supreme Court Opens.

Washington, Oct. 12.—The autumn term of the supreme court opened Monday with a smaller docket than for many years past, the number of cases to be adjudicated being nearly 200 less than at this time last year. At the same time, even if no cases were filed for the next three years, it would take the court fully that long to clear up the docket. Among the leading cases is that of Bram, who is charged with the murder of the captain, the captain's wife and the first mate of the barkentine Herbert Fuller at sea in July of last year. The eight-hour cases from Utah and several railroad appeals have also been given special dates. The court will be asked to fix a time for argument in the appeal of Durrant, under sentence of death in San Francisco for the murder of Blanche Lamont. Papers have already been filed, but there is a possibility that the court may decide it has no jurisdiction.

McPherson Is Dead.

New York, Oct. 9. — Ex-United States Senator John R. McPherson, of New Jersey, died Friday night.

[Senator McPherson was born at York, Livingston county, N. Y., May 9, 1833. He was for a time engaged in farming and stock raising. He became a resident of Jersey City in 1858. In 1871 he was elected to the New Jersey senate and served for three years. In 1876 he was a presidential elector, when the state went for Tilden by a large majority. In 1877 he was elected a United States senator to succed F. P. Frelinghuysen. He was elected to a second term as United States senator by the legislature in 1883 and to a third term by the legislature of 1889.]

GOING TO CALIFORNIA?

Phillips' Upholstered Tourist Cars are Best.

150,000 passengers carried in 17 years and all of them pleased, is a flattering testimonial. Jealous imitators have started rival lines, but they lack the facilities and experience of the Pioneers in the tourist car business.

The Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad runs elegant upholstered tourist cars to California points without change, leaving St. Paul 7:00 p. m.; Minneapolis 7:35 p. m., every Thursday via Omaha, Denver and Salt Lake—the Scenic Line.

On November 2d, and each succeeding Tuesday, we will run an additional car via Kansas City and Fort Worth—the Southern Route, no altitudes and no snow.

The time is only FOUR DAYS via either route. In this age, time is an important factor in the selection of a line of travel. The Albert Lea Route being the quickest and best appointed, is most popular.

Through sleeping car berths only $6.00. A gentlemanly Phillips' conductor and colored porter accompany the car to attend to the wants of the passengers.

Meals served in dining cars, or may be prepared on cooking ranges provided for the purpose in a separate compartment.

Full information as to ticket rates, or berth reservations will be given by addressing A. B. Cutts, General Passenger and Ticket Agent, Minneapolis & St. Louis Railroad, Minneapolis, Minn.

No Wonder He Objected.

A certain learned professor in New York has a wife and family, but, professorlike, his thoughts are always with his books. One evening his wife, who had been out for some hours, returned to find the house remarkably quiet. She had left the children playing about, but now they were nowhere to be seen. She demanded to be told what had become of them, and the professor explained that, as they had made a good deal of noise, he had put them in bed without waiting for her or calling a maid. "I hope they gave you no trouble," she said. "No," replied the professor, "with the exception of the one in the cot here. He objected a good deal to my undressing him and putting him to bed." The wife went to inspect the cot. "Why," she exclaimed, "that's little Johnny Green, from next door."—Chicago Tribune.

River Days Before the War.

MURRELL, the chief of Murrell's gang, took pattern after Mike Fink, Sam Gritty and "Col. Plug," and his depredations were as terrible and far-reaching as any of the pioneers of his profession.

Mark Twain, in his "Life on the Mississippi," calls Murrell a wholesale rascal to distinguish him from Jesse James' retail rascally deeds. "What are James and his half dozen vulgar rascals compared with this stately old criminal, with his sermons, his meditated insurrections, and wary captures, and his majestic following of 1,000 men, sworn to do his evil will."

Murrell seems to have been a most dexterous, as well as a consummate villain. When he traveled his disguise was that of an itinerant preacher, and it is said that his discourses were very soul-stirring and so interesting to hearers that they forgot to look after their horses, which were carried away by his confederates while he was preaching. But Murrell's most lucrative occupation was stealing slaves to sell them in another quarter. He had a peculiar way of managing that part of his business. One of his men would tell a negro, for example, to run away from his master and allow him to sell him to another, whereby he could secure half of the money paid for him. Then the negro was advised to run away the second time, return to the gang and be sent to a free state by them, where he would be safe. Many poor wretches complied with this request, hoping to obtain money and freedom. They would be sold in this manner three or four times, until the Murrells had realized $3,000 or $4,000 from the repeated sale of one man. After this, for fear of detection, the method would be to get rid of the only witness against them, which was the negro himself. He was murdered and his body thrown into the Mississippi river.

The general rendezvous of this gang was on the Arkansas side of the river, where they concealed their negroes in the morasses and canebrakes. Though it was well known that Murrell was the head of this gang of outlaws, it was difficult to obtain proof against him. A young man named Stewart finally gained his confidence, turned traitor and exposed the whole concern, bringing home sufficient evidence against Murrell to send him to the penitentiary for 14 years.

It was found that a good many men who bore respectable names in the sections in which they lived were connected with Murrell's gang, and every effort was made to discredit Stewart's statements. He was obliged to leave the southern states in consequence.

One of the most daring deeds of the notorious outlaw was the rebellion he incited in New Orleans, his object being to raise the blacks against the whites, taking possession of the city in the melee and plundering it at leisure. The story is told by Capt. E. W. Gould, one of the oldest river captains, now living in New York. Capt. Gould collected it from accounts furnished by the man Stewart, who vouched for its correctness, and declared that it was told him by Murrell himself at the time he was in his confidence.

"I collected all my friends about New Orleans," said Murrell, "at one of our friend's houses at that place. We sat in council three days before we got all our plans to our notion. We then determined to undertake the rebellion at all hazards, and make as many friends as we could for that purpose. Every man's business was assigned to him, and when all was ready the signal was given for the rebellion to break loose. The history of it is well known. Suffice it to say that we carried off thousands of dollars in horses, cattle, and other movable property, and killed people without number who were in our way."

Another noted outlaw in the early part of the century was Mason, the highwayman of the Natchez Trace, who infested the canebrakes near Walnut hills, from where they boarded many a boat, killing the crew and carrying off the cargo.

A story well remembered by old-time St. Louisans is that of the murder of young McKenzie on the steamer Nellie Rogers. Young McKenzie was the son of a prominent merchant of St. Louis, a most estimable gentleman, who was at one time an Indian trader on the upper Missouri. The elder McKenzie had married a squaw, Indian fashion, and raised a family of half-breeds, a part of which he took to the states and educated.

Young McKenzie, then about 30 years old, had returned to his tribe, the Crows, married and was living at Fort Peck. He, with his wife and young child, together with a large number of Indians of both sexes and of all ages, had encamped on the bank opposite where the boat was discharging. They all had access to the boat, and were constantly passing to and fro.

The bar on the boat had been closed by the order of Charles P. Chouteau, the owner of the line, and no excessive drinking was allowed. They had on board as a passenger all the way from St. Louis a Mr. Clark, formerly from Philadelphia, a quiet, gentlemanly man of education, who for ten or twelve years had been living among the Indians at Benton.

After the boat had been lying there for several hours Mr. McKenzie came aboard with others and stepped into the cabin. Just as he got abreast of the stove in the hall Clark came out of his stateroom, one of the first in the cabin, with pistol in hand, and without a word fired at McKenzie. The latter fell dead, shot through the heart. His wife, with her kindred and friends, was among the first to rush aboard. The excitement among the Indians became intense.

The crew and passengers, too, were badly frightened, apprehending summary vengence from the Indians, who were entirely masters of the situation. The fires were out, and no steam could be had to move the boat for several hours. All that seemed to stand between an outraged body of fighting Indians and the Nellie Rogers was Rev. Father De Smet, for many years a missionary and manager of Catholic missions among the Indians. He happened to be on board the boat, as he frequently was on expeditions of this kind. It was decided that Clark should be disposed of, for it was evident that there was no safety for the boat while he remained on board. Ponies were secured from the traders at Fort Peck, 12 miles distant, who had come to see the steamboat. Clark, with two or three others, who were anxious to get to Fort Benton, started with very little preparations. Before the Indians had got over their consternation, Clark, whom none of them knew personally, had got beyond the reach of their fleetest horses, and, through the influence of Father De Smet, they probably never pursued him.

Among the passengers on the Nellie Rogers on that day was "Tom Dorris," a young man from St. Louis, bound for the gold mines at Helena. He was one of Clark's companions in the Gilpin race. The riders traveresed the distance of 200 miles in three days. The cause for the murder of young McKenzie was never definitiely ascertained. It was believed that an old grudge existed that was to be settled in that way whenever the parties met. Nothing was ever heard of Clark afterward beyond a letter written by a gentleman living at Findlay, O., in 1889. The story here told was published in a Cincinnati paper at that time, and the announcement was made of Capt. E. W. Gould's forthcoming book. This gentleman, who requested that his name be not used, wrote that he met Malcolm Clark at Fort Benton in 1862. Clark, he said, was a man to be feared, but a gentleman when not angry. He was married to a beautiful half-breed girl, with whom he seemed to live quite pleasantly. She had a brother named Isadore, who made his home with Clark and hunted and traded with him. In 1865 Clark moved to Prickly Pear creek and located a ranch there. For some reason Clark became cruel and overbearing to his wife. After enduring it for awhile she appealed to her brother for protection. He and Clark had an altercation, in which Isadore shot and killed him.

On the 3d of January, 1844, the whole city of St. Louis was thrown into consternation and feverish excitement by the report that the steamboat Shepherdess had been wrecked in Cahokia bend, only three miles from the center of the city. Many lives were reported to have been lost. Several boats were immediately dispatched to the scene of the disaster, and the worst rumors were soon verified.

The Shepherdess, while ascending the Mississippi river on her way from Cincinnati to St. Louis, struck a snag at 11 o'clock at night just above the mouth of Cahokia creek. The night was dark and stormy. The concussion was severe, and several planks were torn from the bottom of the boat. There were between 60 and 70 passengers on board. Most of them had retired, but four or five gentlemen in the cabin were sitting around the stove, for it was cold, winter weather.

In less than two minutes after the boat struck the water rose to the lower deck, where most of the passengers in that part of the boat were asleep. The captain ran to the cabin occupied by the women and assured them that there was no danger. Then he returned to the forecastle and is supposed to have been washed overboard, as nothing was seen or heard of him afterward. One of the pilots attempted to descend into the hold for the purpose of examining the leak, but the rush of water quickly drove him back.

Shrieks of distress arose from the deck below, and several women who ran to the stern railing reported that they saw a number of persons struggling in the river. The water rushed in with tremendous rapidity, and before three minutes had elapsed it had risen to the floor of the upper cabin. Some persons on the upper deck saved themselves by getting into a yawl, which was cut loose and rowed to the shore with a broom.

The rapid rise of the water caused all those who could to seek safety on the hurricane deck. This position was not attained without great difficulty, for the bow had sunk so deep in the water that the only access was by way of the stern. Meanwhile the boat was drifting down the stream, and a few hundred yards below she struck another snag, which rose above the surface. This threw the steamer nearly on her beam ends on the larboard side.

Drifting from the snag, she again lurched to starboard. With every lurch several persons were washed off. Some of them reached the shore, but many were drowned. A short distance below, just above the first shot tower, the hull struck a bluff bank, which again careened the boat nearly on her side. The hull and cabin parted. The former sunk and lodged on a bar above Carondelet, while the cabin floated down to the point of the bar below that place, where it lodged and became stationary. As the cabin passed the steamer Henry Bry lying at the shot tower, its captain heard the frantic cries of the passengers. He went to their rescue in his yawl, but only a few at a time could be taken off.

Among the passengers was Col. Wood's famous "Ohio Fat Girl," who weighed 440 pounds. She was saved by the combined efforts of Capt. Robert Bullock, of Maysville, Ky., and several other men. The mayor of St. Louis, who personally assisted in relieving the sufferers, caused all who were saved to be taken to the Virginia hotel. It was estimated that 60 persons perished in the disaster.—St. Louis Republic.

Too Many Rules.

The teacher who gives her pupils "simple rules" outside of the authorities for determining questions which confront them, and particularly grammatical questions, is apt to find that her rules disastrously fail to fit all cases. One time the county superintendent of schools was questioning the pupils of a country school. He wrote on the blackboard the sentence: "The fly has wings" and asked a class what part of speech each word was. They passed the "the" without serious trouble.

"What part of speech is 'fly?'" asked the superintendent.

"Adverb!" shouted all the class in unison.

"What! 'Fly' an adverb?"

"Yessir!" shouted the children, with great positiveness

"What makes you think it is an adverb?"

"'Cause teacher told us that all words that end in 'ly' are adverbs!"—Youth's Companion.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Hog Cholera.

Hog cholera continues to sweep over Blue Earth county like a prairie fire. There is not a section or corner that has not been visited by this plague, and in some townships not a porker remains to tell the story. Not less than $300,000 has been taken out of the pockets of Blue Earth county people in a few months on account of the epidemic. It will be several years before the farmers will again be able to raise hogs in that county. The plague must spend itself and the germ must be thoroughly eradicated. No one seems to be able to account for the appearance of the disease. The cholera will strike one farmer, skip another, travel to another section of the county, but ere long it will return to the pen not visited on its first trip. Many farmers in Blue Earth county have lost as high as 200 animals; hundreds have buried 50 each, while an unlimited number have lost all the way from 10 to 25, much being high grade imported stock.

Packing Plant Leased.

Swift & Co., the big meat packers of Chicago, have taken a long lease of the packing plant at South St. Paul. This move of Swift is along the line of Armour & Co., who have for some time been killing for them their beef for the local trade. For years the big Chicago houses have been buying beef on the hoof in the northwest, and have shipped it to Chicago, killed and dressed it there and shipped it back to sell. This was an expensive process. But the packers would rather do it than establish plants in the Twin Cities and recognize that point as a packing center. Of course, this state of affairs could not last forever, and it now looks very much as if the break had come.

No Ready Cash.

The state investment board met at the capitol and found that while $40,000 in loans to school districts had already been approved and new applications amounting to $32,000, there are no funds on hand, because they had all been invested in Massachusetts bonds. Auditor Dunn thinks the sale of pine stumpage this month will bring in enough money to take care of the approved applications. The board formally approved Treasurer Koerner's investment in Massachusetts bonds. He reported that he had secured the registration of the Tennessee and Alabama bonds in which Minnesota funds are invested.

Officers Elected.

During the last evening of the German Catholic convention at Little Falls the delegates and visitors were given a grand reception at the parochial school. Speeches were made by Rev. A. A. Raster, of Little Falls, and Prof. Kaiser, of St. Cloud. The speeches were well delivered and they were heartily cheered. The officers elected for the following year are: President, Geo. A. Mitch, St. Paul; vice president, August Jesse, Stillwater; secretary, George Graff, New Ulm; treasurer, P. M. Kerst, St. Paul. Stillwater was chosen as the city for the next convention.

Gets a Divorce.

Ellen Julla Blixt has been divorced from Claus A. Blixt, the man who is now serving his life sentence in the state penitentiary for the fatal blow which killed Katherine Ging. Mrs. Blixt appeared with her attorney, Frank M. Nye, but there was no evidence given outside of that of Mrs. Blixt herself, and the criminal record showing that her husband had been committed to the state penitentiary. Mrs. Blixt was allowed her maiden name, Anderson.

A New Manager.

Dr. N. P. Hulst, of Milwaukee, has been appointed general manager of all the Oliver mining properties, and has assumed charge, though the appointment is not yet officially announced. He will have charge of Lone Jack, Mesaba Mountain and Mountain Iron mines on the Mesaba Range, and all properties on Gogebic Range belonging to Oliver interests, which include Carnegie interests.

FASHION AMONG SAVAGES.

Queer Things That Strange People Do in Various Parts of the World.

Modesty in dress, more than any other virtue, varies with the latitude and longitude. The Samoans, for example, have come to look upon the wearing of clothes as a religious function in consequence of the efforts of the missionaries to make the natives dress themselves. So that it is a common sight at Sunday morning service to see the Samoan women take their seats decorously clad in Mother Hubbards, and after the service is over walking home with their Mother Hubbards on their arms.

It is considered immodest for Chinese women to let their small feet, acquired by such painful torture, be seen peeping out from underneath their dress. Any Chinese picture which shows feet of this kind is considered positively indecent by the Celestials. In some other parts of Asia it is considered immodest for a woman to show the ends of her fingers, while among Mahometan women of Arabia, who are closely veiled, exposing the back of the neck in an emergency is held to be a much greater breach of decorum than displaying the face.

For a Carribean woman to go out of the hut without being painted with arnotto is to transgress all the native rules of decency. The Tassai women of New Guinea wear two or three petticoats, one over another, and nothing else. If the native women of Sumatra have their knees properly covered the rest does not matter, while the native women of some parts of Alaska, who have been induced to remove the heavy ornament which hangs from their lower lip, act as if they were much ashamed and embarrassed.

The Maoris of both sexes in New Zealand put on clothes when the weather grows cold, while the natives of some islands off the coast of Guinea wear clothes only when they are going on a journey. Some Indians of Venezuela are ashamed to wear clothes before strangers, as it seems indecent to them to appear unpainted.

"In Tahiti," says Sir John Lubbock, "a person not properly tatttoed would be as much reproached and shunned as if with us he should go about the streets naked." The Papuans of the southwest coast of New Guinea think that clothing is fit only for women. In the Andaman islands the women think the same thing about the men.

The tyranny of fashion is as strong in Greenland as it is in Paris. The mainspring of everything the Greenlanders do, according to Cranz, is their fear of being blamed or mocked by other men. When Dr. Livingstone's carriers reached Balonda, in Central Africa, the young women could not keep in their laughter at the sight of bare backs, though their own costume was of the scantiest, because the native men of Balonda wore shoulder capes of skins.—N. Y. World.

KLONDIKE TRADEMARKS.

A Large Number of Applications Received at the Patent Office.

The Klondike craze has had its effect on the patent office, as has been shown by the application for trademarks bearing the word. Two or three patents have been applied for for objects which might be better suited for the gold fields there than elsewhere, but the chief clerk refuses to tell of them.

The application for trademarks bearing the word Klondike, Chief Newton, of the trademarks division of the patent offices, says, have been made for a certain brand of cigars, a bicycle lamp and furniture. One word can be used as a trademark as many times as may be wished, with the exception that each object must be different.

Speaking to a reporter on the subject of trademarks, Chief Newton said:

"Whenever there is anything new, or any new craze, the applications for trademarks in that line begin to come in immediately. When the Trilby craze was at its height we had application after application come in for trademarks on different subjects, which were registered, until the craze apparently died out.

"It was the same way when the X rays were first discovered. In election times or campaign years trademarks relating to the issue or bearing the names of candidates are applied for in large numbers. For instance, last year there were applications for 15 or 20 sixteen-to-one trademarks, and innumerable free silver and gold standard ones. Since the Cuban question has been agitated the number of applications for trademarks on a number of objects is large.

"I have been surprised at how much manufacturers attribute to trademarks of their articles. For instance, a certain flour manufacturing company, in instituting an interference case, made oath that the name of their particular brand of flour was worth $500,000, and I believe that was really paid for it. It is known that the sum of $40,000 was actually paid for the name of a certain polish."—Washington Star.

THE MAJOR'S BIG STORY.

Idea of His Wife Giving Him Five Dollars Took the Prize.

There were five of six of them sitting about the stove in the drug store, and they had been telling pretty tall stories. The druggist was a man of some humor and invention, and he concocted a mixture of great potency and fine flavor, composed of sp. frumenti, saccharum alba, cortex limionis, carophyllus aromaticus and aqua pura q. s. This mixture he proposed to administer to whomsoever should tell the biggest story, and the party at once began to stretch their inventive powers to the fullest extent. A toilet soap drummer was appointed judge, and the prize mixture, steaming hot, sat in an eight ounce graduated measure upon the edge of the stove.

The colonel told a war story of the Munchausen variety, the squire related a hunting adventure that evinced a decided genius for evading the truth, and the postmaster made a strong bid for the prize with a snake story big enough to make the sea serpent jealous. The others followed in turn, and the last man, the major, entered the competition. The major had in his mind a remarkable narrative about a dog that he owned that did some wonderful things, and he began his story in this way:

"Last Wednesday morning I got up a little later than usual and went down to breakfast. Most of you have seen that brown setter of mine. He's a good deal smarter than most men. Well, that dog was in the dining-room when I went in. As I came to the door, my wife, who was awaiting me, said:

"'John, when I went to wake you up this morning, I found this five-dollar bill on the floor. You must have dropped it from your pocket when you undressed last night.' Then she handed me the bill. Now, that dog of mine was—"

"Wait a bit," said the toilet soap drummer, "you needn't go any further with your story. The prize is yours. I'm a married man myself, and that lie you've just told is one you'll never improve on. I hereby render a decision in your favor."

As there was not a single man in the crowd not a voice was raised in protest against the judge's verdict.—Detroit Free Press.

BUFFALO GAZETTE

DELANO, FRIDAY, OCT. 15, 1897.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE VILLAGE OF DELANO.

DELANO DIARY

—Nick Frank's new building has a new awning. Elmer Babb put it up.

—Threshing engine, twelve horse power for sale. Call on C. H. Carlton for particulars.

—Thomas Lanway has bargained his hard wood in Minneapolis and is to ship it soon.

—For sale, a span of mares; good for a farm team, or good on the road. Apply at this office.

—Pumpkins, turnips and like delecacies are now being marketed in our village, for winter use.

—The telephone poles were pealed, painted and posted this week and talk with distant neighbors will be cheap soon.

—Several alleys and back yards need cleaning before winter sets in. All old vegetable and animal refuse should be hauled away.

—Druggist Wittman enjoys entertaining everybody that comes along with his new gramaphone. He has lots of customers.

—Delano Fair was a big one. People and pigs made up a big share of the exhibits. Other stock seems scarce. A few horses, mostly poor scrubs were offered.

—Shrader and Eppel sold some of their hardwood lumber, and cord wood in Minneapolis, and have been busy this week, measuring figuring and shipping.

—We understand that Louis Rausch is going to erect a fine brick building in the spring in place of the old structure that he is tearing down—Howard Lake Herald.

—Reports say there isn't a boy in the Litchfield High School graduating class. Yet Prof. Dewey's foot ball team won the game from Hutchinson. Do the Litchfield girls play foot ball?

—In digging a hole on Bridge street, near the residence of trustee Horsch, the men putting up the new telephone, at a depth of about seven feet had a good well with about a foot of water.

—Leon Frazee's house has been purchased by Martin Couzet, of Greenwood who will occupy it in a few days. W. H. Frazee has moved into the John Brazee house, on Third St., lately vacated by Rev. Davies.

—The three wall tents looming up on the West side at the foot of Breed's hill, belonging to the telephone men, remind some of our settlers of early days in Minnesota; some of war times; while others are only made hungry for a hunting excursion.

—Numerous cases of hay fever have been reported hereabouts, lately. This seems to be becoming the fashionable disease over a large section of country. Some have attributed it to pollen from the ragweed. If so, it would pay to harvest the ragweeds before the pollen is fit to fly.

—Rev. Hulltman, of Chicago, traveling in the interest of foreign missions, gave an evening at the Swedish church here this week. But a small audience attended; but those present claim he has rare musical ability, and they were pleased with his entertainment. Should he happen this way again, doubtless his hearers would be more numerous.

—Thomas McClary, the noted M. E. lecturer, now holds the place of R. R. preacher in the Minneapolis district. He is going to do some lecturing as well as preach to R. R. men. It is hoped Delano people may have an opportunity of hearing him in the near future. Several of our townspeople have listened to some of his lectures and pronounce them fine.

—A. L. Mealey lately received a letter from James Sherry, our fellow townsman, now of the west. He has quit railroading and expects to start for Spokane soon. He says he has done well financially; but money is not all people want in this country and he proposes to take life easy for awhile. He intends going to the Klondike in the spring. That looks as if he wanted more gold. He will doubtless have lots of fun getting it there.

—Rudolph Reider read a puzzle in a paper from the land of wooden nutmegs. A prize of a fine gold ring was offered for a solution. Rudolph sent in his interpretation, and in a short time received a nice ring, with an offer, if he preferred to do so he could return the ring and get $9.88 instead. He, preferring the money, returned the shining jewelry, several weeks since, and now says: "Ring, nit; money, nit." His father has promised us that when prosperity comes again to his son, he will let us know. And he has let us know, nit.

POOR PAPA.

(From "Our Dumb Animals',)
Mother's out upon her "bike,"
Enjoyin' of the fun.
Sister and her beau have gone
To take a little run.
The chambermaid and cook are both
A-riding of their wheels,
And father's in the kitchen
A-cookin' of the meals.

County Cullings.

Thomas R. Briggs, of Howard Lake, has been written among Uncle Sam's pensioners, lately.

Alex Payne, near Buffalo, lost his fine new barn, team and hay by fire Saturday.

The Buffalo Journal has discovered in the signs of this summer and fall, indications of war. Where will it strike Senator?

Alby Bucklin, of Rockford, an old settler, died suddenly while at supper, last Friday evening. He was a man of many friends.

Presiding Elder R. R. Atchison is expected to preach Sunday, Oct. 24, at Montrose and Watertown, and at Delano in the evening.

The Howard Lake Herald says complaints are made of thieving in that village. Saturday evening the justice's beefstake, dish and all disappeared.

The Buffalo Journal says that the temperance sentiment there "has dropped to the lowest ebb." Of course the waves of intemperance are at full tide.

"The safe road to good government is through the election of independent candidates. They represent, not parties, but the people."—Journal. What you going to run for now, A. Y.?

Editor Hamilton, of the Maple Lake Messenger has our sympathy in being required to make a hasty removal. Fire caused him to hurry up and get out.

We are much pleased to note that the Howard Lake Herald opposes gambling by minors in saloons. Might as well insist on the strict observance of the whole law Brother Tanner.

The Methodist conference held at Fergus Falls put Delano back into the Willmar district. Rev. R. R. Atchison, P. E. Rev. J. L. Farber returns to Delano, Montrose, and Rockford circuit; Annandale and Grace church, W. H. Barkuloo; Armstrong, Rockford and Mound City, N. Sutton; Buffalo and North Rockford, J. W. Valentyne; Dassel, Bonniwell's Mills and Cokato, C. M. Smith; Howard Lake and Smith Lake, R. H. Murray.

St. Cloud district, R. N. McKaig, P. E. Clearwater, J. W. Mower; Monticello, H. J. Van Fosson.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. Oct. 8, 1897.

A week in Washington without the launching of a new war scare would seem quite strange, it has been so long since there was one. The war scare of the present week was based upon the action of the Cabinet in discussing the placing of orders for a million dollars worth of smokeless powder for the Navy, as soon as the money could be made available to pay for it. This is really the most war-like step yet taken by the administration. It may be a bluff, and there may be no intention to purchase such a large quantity of smokeless powder. There would certainly be no use for it, except for fighting purposes. It is the belief of some very cool headed men that unless the administration can bluff the new Spanish ministry it will be in a position where it must choose between fighting and backing down, and the strongest opponents of the administration do not believe it will back down, simply because to do so would be to arouse such public indignation that every member of the administration would be driven in disgrace to private life. Americans can stand a lot, but they wouldn't stand a backdown from Spain on the part of McKinley's administration.

The country is beginning to see that those who charged Ex-Secretary of the State Foster with making a mess of his sealing negotiations with Great Britain knew what they were talking about. England's notification to this government that it would take no part in the sealing conference to be held in Washington has opened the eyes of the world to Foster's bungling. Representatives of Russia and Japan are now on their way to Washington to take part in the sealing conference, those governments having accepted the assurances of Foster that England had promised to also take part, when it had not done so. Months ago Prof. Elliott said that England had no idea of doing so.

When a man gets down everybody seems disposed to give him a kick. The case of Senator Wellington, of Md., is an instance. Months ago, before Wellington had made that fool exhibition on the floor of the Senate, Boss Hanna asked him to make some speeches in the Ohio campaign and he agreed to do so. Several days ago Wellington was given a hint that it would greatly please Hanna if he would cancel his Ohio engagements on account of his health, or any other old reason, and the announcement was duly made that Senator Wellington's health had compelled the cancellation of his Ohio engagements to speak. One of Hanna's Ohio friends, speaking of Wellington, said: "Hanna has been afraid of Wellington ever since he made that monkey speech in the Senate, and was determined that he should not be allowed to speak in Ohio. His adoption of a gentle hint prevented embarrassment to all concerned."

A well known newspaper man, just from Ohio, said: "During the past two weeks, I have been campaigning with Senator Hanna. The audiences that have turned out to hear him have not been large, nor, to tell the truth have they displayed a great amount of enthusiasm. The first week's meetings were in the nature of a 'frost', but latterly the attendance has improved. The fact is that the republicans for some cause, seem apathetic."

Mr. McKinley is very anxious to have the country believe that he is not taking part in the hot fight now going on in greater New York's municipal campaign, and statements to that effect are being sent out from Washington. But these statements fool nobody except those who are easily fooled or those who wish to be fooled. Mr. McKinley is with Boss Platt, and every Federal official in New York knows it and is acting accordingly. He wants Boss Platt to win, and doesn't care a snap whether it be with Tracy for a candidate or with a compromise candidate secured by the withdrawal of both Tracy and Low. He wants Platt to win because that would give him a stronger hold on the New York delegation to the next republican National convention, which Platt has pledged to the support of Mr. McKinley for a second term. Nobody in Washington will be greatly surprised if the Democratic National Committee should declare Henry George to be the regular democratic candidate for Mayor of New York.

It is unofficially stated that the board of naval officers charged with the duty of investigating and recommending to the Secretary of the Navy the best place all things considered to locate a government plant for the making of armor for naval vessels has practically decided that the best place for the plant is in the south and that their choice is between Alabama and Tennessee, with the chances slightly in favor of their recommending the latter. This recommendation will go to Congress which will decide whether the plant shall be established.

Science Utilizes All the Ox.

In an article on the "Wonders of the World's Waste," William George Jordan, in the October Ladies' Home Journal, details how science at the present day utilizes the ox. "Not many years ago," he says, "when an ox was slaughtered forty pe cent for the animal was wasted; at the present time 'nothing is lost but its dying breath.' As but one third of the weight of the animal consists of products that can be eaten, the question of utilizing the waste is a serious one. The blood is used in refining sugar and in sizing paper, or manufactured into door knobs and buttons. The hide goes to the tanner; horns and hoofs are transformed into combs and buttons; thigh bones, worth eighty dollars per ton, are cut into handles for clothes brushes; fore leg bones sell for thirty dollars per ton for collar buttons, parasol handles and jewelry; the water in which bones are boiled is reduced to glue; the dust from sawing the bones is food for cattle and poultry; the smallest bones are made into boneblack. Each foot yields a quarter of a pint of neat's foot oil; the tail goes to the soup; while the brush of hair at the end of the tail is sold to the mattress maker. The choicer parts of the fat make the basis of butterine; the intestines are used for sausage casings or bought by gold beaters. The undigested food in the stomach, which formerly cost the packers of Chicago thirty thousand dollars a year to remove and destroy, is now made into paper. These are but a few of the products of abattoirs. All scraps unfit for any other use find welcome in the glue pot or they do missionary work for farmers by acting as fertilizers."—Scientific American.

If your add was here somebody would read it, and might call on you.

There's one thing that I've noticed
'Bout the people nowadays:
That the slickest talkin' feller
Ain't the squarest in his ways.
And you'll find that most in generally,
The folks what brag and boast,
When it comes right down to workin',
Don't allus do the most.

An' them that's dressed the finest',
With their diamonds, gold and sich,
Ain't the fo'most ones at helpin'
A poor man out the ditch.
For bit's been my observation,
An' my own experience shows,
That you'll find the kindest hearts sometimes
Beneath the roughest kind o' f clothes.

An' the ones what laugh the loudest,
An' 'pear so light an' gay,
Is most allus jest a-laughin'
To keep the tears away.
An' the folks what seems the happiest
Is them what learned the art
Uv puttin' on er smilin' face
Fer to hide a bleedin' heart.

It ain't best to judge by 'pearances,
Fer as a general rule
The man who looks the smartest
Will prove the biggest fool
Fer people's like pertaters,
An' eight times outen nine
You'll find they grow the smallest
'Neath the biggest kind of vine.

PAUL F. CALLAHAN.

THE King of Corea has proclaimed himself Emperor since Oct. 15. This shows to China and other nations that she does not propose to be under control of any of them; but is henceforth to be an empire of her own.

THE Brainerd Journal quotes from the Aitkin Republican that Mr. Howe brought to the Rspublican office some fine specimens of luscious strawberries picked from the vines in October, in Aitkin county by David Archibald. And down in Texas they were having a big snow storm about that time.

FROM the Duluth papers it appears G. A. R. men are put out at Page Morris for the appointment to a good place in the new government library, at Washington, of Col. C. P. Grady, a Democrat, and an ex-reb, who served on Gen. Lee's staff. Surely if Page Morris had anything to do with appointing such a man to a position his republican friends have reason to say he has gone back on them about as bad as they ever accused Charley Towne of doing. Who ever heard of Towne getting into such trouble over appointments?

THE Toledo Blade says: "It was certainly a political blunder for the democracy of any state this year to again rear aloft the free silver banner after the awful defeat that issue sustained in the general election last year. Yet it has been done all over the country."

The Blade predicts 200,000 plurality in Massachusetts, and from 75,000 to 100,000 in Ohio for the Republican tickets.

When the votes are counted they may not hold up as the Blade counts them. What then? Will the Blade still claim a victory for gold standard?

Gold in Plenty.

"Within two weeks over eight millions in gold has arrived in New York from London. Already there is so much gold coin in use that its inconvenience is keenly felt, and there is a demand upon the treasury to accept gold on deposit and issue gold certificates therefor.

There has been some formal discussion of this matter by the treasury officials. The point of interrest was a decision made by Secretary Carlisle when the treasury gold fell below $100,000,000, that the reserve having once fallen below the amount mentioned, gold certificates could not be issued again, even if the reserve went above $103,000,000, unless the issue was specifically authorized by Congress.

The soundness of this decision is questioned by the best authorities. It is no new thing for one secretary to reverse a decision made by a previous one, and it is the beief in financial circles in the East that Secretary Gage will do this.

The business world prefers currency, because of its convenience. Paper is infinitely easier to handle and transport than is coin. Should the secretary decide to issue gold certificates, those country banks which have not the facilities for holding their reserve in gold could hold the certificates for that purpose and put into circulation the currency which they now hold.

Cashier Muhleman, of the sub-treasury in New York, speaking of this matter, said a day or two ago that there seemed to be an erroneous idea in some quarters that there was now an inconvenient shortage of currency. This he said was not the case, and he added that any action of the treasury officials which might convey that impression was, in his opinion, taken because they desired such a shortage and were shaping their course at present with a view to the need of a large amount of currency during October to meet the government's payments of interest and pensions."—Toledo Blade.

This seems like a queer article to people living in Minnesota. But to the Ohioan, just befofe election, it may be made use of as a vote getter; that is if the average voter in that state is possessed of no greater intelligence than the article in question would indicate as the belief of the Blade's editor.

Just notice its inconsistency:

1st. Gold is plenty; inconveniently so.

2nd. Even though Carlisle claims Congress would have to say so before more bonds could be issued, the Blade favors issuing bonds.

3rd. The business would prefer currency to gold.

4th. Those country banks which have not the facilities for holding their reserve in gold could hold the certificates for that purpose and put into circulation the currency which they now hold."

5th. There is no shortage of currency.

Now, if there is too much gold, and no shortage of currency in the country, why does the Blade want gold certificates issued by the government? Does it require any more facilities for a bank to keep gold than it does to keep paper?

Ohio politicians and a few other money makers may desire that the government issue another lot of gold certificates. But ordinary, plain, everyday people in this section of country believe that it would be better for Uncle Sam to begin to get out of debt than to go further in by issuing bonds in time of peace..

Letter to Page Morris.

The Saint Cloud Times publishes a letter from J. N. Gilley, of Cold Springs, Minn., which is just a little more peppery than that of Comrade Mc Donald, of St. Cloud, to Comrade William McKinley. It seems Mr. Gilley was an old soldier of the sixties; had been wounded twice; was a life long republican, and had worked faithfully for the party during the last campaign; had met the Congressional nominee, Page Morris. He wanted the post office, and secured a long roll of petitioner, but a gold bug democrat was given the plum, and Mr. Gilley was mad. So mad that he concluded to say so where he thought the blame rested, and wrote the letter.

COLD SPRING, Minn., Sept. 21, 1897.

Page Morris,
Duluth, Minn.,

DEAR SIR:—Enclosed find my G. A. R. button, which you told me last fall was "not going to hurt me any." I don't know as it did, but you may have it for all the good it has done me. During the whole campaign there was nothing but "the soldiers must be recognized and get appointments;" "justice to the veterans," etc. This looks like it. If I had been defeated by a man of any ability, or influence, or a man of any standing, I would say nothing; but to be turned down by a kid, who could not get the endorsement of any business man in this place, nor get the signature of one town or village officer, and a boy that can just control his own vote; that is an outrage! If four or five bums, gamblers, pugilists and sports control the whole Republican party, then I am ashamed of the party that I stood by so faithfully for 35 years. But what more could I expect from a ——rebel anyway. I was shot through the right shoulder and through the left arm by some of them, and yet I am ready at any time to take a gun or sword and face any one of them, from General Longstreet to a deserter.

J. N. GILLEY.

Pushing the Mails.

Compressed air, that great propeller of the future, has been used the last week in New York City to force the mail a mile in a minute from the main postoffice to the branch postoffice in the Produce Exchange. The lightning has been chained and utilized, and now the air is to carry six hundred letters in a minute. The postoffice will soon run on wind, and the next is a postal flying machine.—N. Y. WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. Oct. 15, 1897.

"What have you got to do with Cuba, anyhow?" That is the plain English of the courteously worded reply of the new Spanish ministry to Mr. McKinley's Quixotic meditation proposition, which was used to prevent Congress taking action at the last session that would have brought peace in Cuba long before now. Having had one cheek diplomatically slapped by Spain, it now remains to be seen whether Mr. McKinley will turn the other cheek for another slap, or will rise to the occasion by promptly recognizing the independence of Cuba, or even the belligerence of the Cubans. Present talk in administration circles indicates that the other cheek will be turned to the Spaniards. The opinion is growing that Congress will have to compel Mr. McKinley to do the right thing by Cuba.

As though Mr. McKinley did not have enough troubles of his own, the two factions of Virginia republicans have swooped down upon him with the demand that he umpire their dispute.

After a series of false alarms covering a period of more than ten years, during which he has been eligible for retirement, it seems that Justice Field of the U. S. Supreme Court is going to retire sure enough this time. Attorney General McKenna is slated to succeed him, and a Cabinet shake up is expected at the same time, which it is said may land "Teddy" Roosevelt in the Cabinet as Secretary of the Navy and bring about other changes of more or less importance.

Attorney General Terrell, of Georgia, who is in Washington on business before the U. S. Supreme Court is somewhat indignant at the misrepresentations which have been made of the shooting of the negro postmaster at Hogansville. He said: "A great injustice has been done to one of the best and most substantial towns in our state. The report of the Post Office inspectors will bear out my declaration that there was absolutely no evidence of any deep-seated plot on the part of the citizens of Hogansville to remove Loftin. There isn't a spark of evidence to show whether he was shot by a white man or a negro. At any rate there was no conspiracy among the prominent citizens of the town, as some of the papers put it, and all such reports are unfounded aspersions on a good people. I know the citizens there, and there isn't a better community in any state in the Union. A whole town should not be made to suffer for the deed of one miscreant. The State officers are as anxious as the Federal authorities to bring the guilty party to punishment, and every means of detection is being used to that end".

Mr. Mc Kinley is almost in a state of panic on account of his private advices from Ohio. Boss Hanna with all his egotism has become alarmed at the indifference of so many men who have heretofore been the most enthusiastic workers in every republican campaign; he fears the indifference will last until election day and that it will keep thousands of republicans away from the polls, and he has communicated his fears to Mr. McKinley, who is now trying to devise some scheme to arouse a little enthusiasm among the Foraker republicans, of Ohio. Ex-Congressman Layton, of Ohio, who although a democrat is not taking any active part in the campaign because of his pressing legal engagements, has been telling his Washington friends that the Ohio democrats have an excellent chance to win, if they can only succeed in getting out a full vote. He is confident that the republican stay at home vote will reach away up in the thousands, and is afraid that the same cause may largely reduce the democratic vote. He says he never saw such apathy among rural voters in an Ohio campaign as exists at this time.

Consul General Lee was in Washington this week preparing for his return to Cuba next week. He had a conference with Mr. McKinley and several with Assistant Secretary Day, but did not meet Secretary Sherman at all. Still there are persons who object to the assertion that Mr. Sherman has nothing whatever to do with the relations of this government with Spain and Cuba, calling it "preposterous" etc. It would be preposterous for a man who has been in Washington during the last six months, and kept his eyes open, to calm to believe that Mr. Sherman has had anything whatever to do with either Spanish or Cuban matters. The opinion is prevalent in Washington that Mr. Sherman will be froze out of the Cabinet before the first of the year. A personal friend of General Lee is authority for the statement that he will return to Virginia in the spring and begin an active personal canvass for election to the U. S. Senate, to succeed Senator Martin.

MINNESOTA, CALIFORNIA.

Pioneers, Dead, and Alive.

Climate and Fruits.

BY HON. B. F. CHRISTLIEB.

MR. EDITOR:—Having once more completed the trip across the continent and back, I will try to interest your readers with my experiences, especially during my stay in Minnesota; and, consequently, may have more to say about Minnesota than California. I found the climatic conditions of Minnesota during last summer quite detrimental to my delicate health; and, consequently, did not enjoy myself to a very great degree, and yet I found myself during my visit there reinforced by a vigorous appetite with capacity to enjoy and devour considerable of Minnesota's food supply, and I have this to say of Minnesota, putting it quaintly: that it will give one a vigorous appetite and it will also give him the "grippe."

On my return to Minnesota after an absence of nearly two years, I found that a number of old time friends and acquaintances had passed away, amongst whom I can name, Mrs. George Hoisington, Andrew Brown, the Ingerson Brothers, of Independence; John Hannen, Andrew and Adam Scherer, Charles Wolfsfeld, Mrs. Roehl, Mrs. Bernard Gasper, of Medina; George and James Maxwell, Mrs. Foglesonger, of Orono.

I was gratified to find quite a number of the pioneers of the fifties and sixties, of the big woods, still alive, amongst whom I can mention the venerable John S. Harrington, of Wayzata, who still resides on the spot where he began his Minnesota pioneer life in 1854, on the shores of Lake Minnetonka, now surrounded by magnificent residences of wealthy Lake dwellers, and in spite of his four scour years his intellect is as bright as in the days of yore, recalling many of his pioneer experiences of Ohio as well as of Minnesota. Of Wayzata pioneers, the following are still living: Benj. Keesling, Root Churchill, Mrs. Bradford Wakefield, A. K. Richards, Wm. Hoagland, Henry Maurer. At Long Lake an vicinity I still found alive David Lydiard and Eleazer Dickey the pioneers of the Nova Scotia settlement of that locality, and besides them I found James Dillman and wife (nee Mary Brown) Mrs Edward Walsh, Sam'l Lydiard, now of California, Mrs. James Johnson, Mrs V. Cox, Jacob Clasen, W. A. Spafford, John Schmitz, Isaac Christlieb, now of California, Mrs. Henry Stubbs, Milton and Rolla Stubbs, Jonathan and Charles Grave and their sister Mary Ann Parker, Mrs. Rachel Talbert, (nee stubs) Mrs. George and James Maxwell, Wm. G. White, several Married daughters of the late Charles Gordon, Miss Annie Stubbs, Perry Parrish, Fidel Strebel. Of Medina Pioneers. I found: Peter, Edward, and Nick Miller, the venerable George Reiser and wife and their sons Joseph, George and Anthony, Maurice Luby, Bernard Gasper, Chas. Kassube, Bernard Feltes, Carl, Adolph and Louis Hamisch, John Thies and his sons Jerry and John, Mrs. John Walsfeld and sons Peter and John, Peter Berens, Joseph and Anthony Merz, Jacob Engel and sons John and Peter, Peter Hoppe, the Becker brothers, the Lerch brothers, Jerry Hannen. There are many settlers of the seventies as James Vauderwesker and family, John and Nick Kohnen who may be regarded as old settlers. Time is waning and a quarter of a century seems to be but a short time after all. In Independence: Our friend John H. McGary whose zeal and pen are untiring in vindicating the rights of the masses, Earl Hoisington and wife, George Hoisington, Mrs. Daniel Styner, Henry Jackson and wife, Washington Rader Jacob Bryant, Charles Goodsel, John Williams, and his son Harvey, Ebenezer Brandon, Mrs. Batdorf and her sons John and Barton, and Benj. Drake, a pioneer of the fifties of Carver county, later of the vicinity of Howard Lake, including many experiences as an early day printe of Minnesota. I was also gratified to meet Dr. Wakefield, of Monticello and renew my 35 years acquaintanceship with him, finding him quite hale and hearty at his great age. 75 years. There are others of Wright county that I could mention if space would permit.

Time is fast rounding out a period of a half century since settlements began in this region and as I name the pioneers still living, it is gratifying to learn that so many still survive. I met quite a number of them during my recent visit to Minnesgta and it gave me much pleasure to have the opportunity to converse with them once more and allude to our early experiences in the Big Woods, then a beautiful forest, impressing one as immense picnic ground, recalling the memory of those who had passed away, some in the effort to reduce forest to a region of agriculture, some in the great contest to save the Union and others in the great struggle to keep the savages at bay and from destroying the homes so recently made in that wilderness. May these survivors enjoy many happy years of life and the memory of all the pioneers be cherished by posterity.

The first rain of this season for California occurred about the first day of this month. The fruit crop of California thus far ripened and marketed has been abundant and of good quality and the displays at the stores and fruit stands of this city is magnificent and luscous and of unusual size. Peaches, apples of four inches in diameter, Pears and other fruits nearly as large. Grapes seem to be about two or three times the size of any grown in Minnesota coming under my notice last summer.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Oct. 13.

Among Our Exchanges.

The Oregon Agriculturist: Nearly every year there is some special reason to wish for the Nicaragua canal. Good potatoes are now worth about a dollar a bushel, equal to $1.65 a sack, in New York city. If the canal were now in existence it would double the value of every bushel of potatoes in Oregon. Fancy red apples are now worth $4 a barrel in New York.

Diphtheria is reported at several points around Annandale, but as yet no fatalities have resulted. At South Haven the the four children and wife of Thos. Waller are victims of the epidemic. They will all probably recover. No cases have appeared in Annandale and those cases in the surrounding country are under quarantine. LATER—As we go to press we learn of the death of Mary, the oldest daughter who died yesterday.—Annandale Advocate.

Minneapolis Tribune: One Money is to be made a senator in Georgia, but in some other states it is charged that money makes the senators.

Ida Grove Era, Iowa, (Rep.): The editor of this paper is no pessimist, but he is certain that unless some hard work is done from now until election time, L. M. Shaw will not get the votes he should have, and that the republican ticket in Ida County will meet defeat. The county is naturally republican, but the republicans must do some work. Especially will it be necessary for everyone to cast his vote on election day. Over confident stay at homes can easily bring defeat to what should be a glorious victory.

St. Paul Dispatch: Arnold Luetgert may open a saloon, if acquitted, but the Chicago beer-drinkers will not likely forget his familiarity with certain destructive chemicals.

Minneapolis Times: If the court martial would only do the proper thing, Captain Lovering, who brutally abused Private Hammond at Fort Sheridan would soon be looking for a job as third assistant pig sticker in a slaughter House.

Litchfield Independent: Chattanooga, Tenn., normally Republican by 500 votes, went Democratic last Tuesday by a thousand majority.

Litchfield Independent: James Martin, the frog catcher, has 6,000 dozen frogs corralled in a pen near lake Ripley. His largest catch for one day was 600 dozen. The market at present is overstocked, and so instead of killing and sipping at once he is herding his drove for a rise in the market. Great business is frog catching, this year. The crop is a big one.

NOCALES, Ariz., Oct., 15.—A sensation has been sprung in the adjacent state of Sonora, republic of Mexico, by an ecclestical edict from Archbishop Lopez, the seat of whose archepiscopal see is at the City of Hermosille, the capitol of the state, excommunicating all members of the Masonic fraternity.

Nearly all of the highest officials in the state and many of the most prominent citizens are members of the Masonic order and at the same time many of them are devout Catholics. The wives and feminine members of their families are also. Consequently this sweeping edict has spread consternation all over the state.—Tribune.

THE SONG OF THE "No. 9."

My dress is of fine polished oak,
As rich as the finest fur cloak,
And for handsome design
You just should see mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I'm beloved by the poor and the rich,
For both I impartially stitch;
In the cabin I shine,
In the mansion I'm fine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I never get surly nor tired,
With zeal I always am fired;
To hard work I incline,
For rest I ne'er pine—
No. 9, No. 9.

I am easily purchased by all,
With instalments that monthly do fall;
And when I am thine,
Then life is benign—

To the Paris Exposition I went,
Upon getting the Grand Prize intent:
I left all behind,
The Grand Prize was mine—
No. 9, No. 9.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889, at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France. This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered—the GRAND PRIZE—giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor—the most prized honor of France.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best it will be your own fault. Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine. If he doesn't keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue and terms. Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory. WHEELER & WILSON MFG. CO. Chicago, Ill.

The extent to which life insurance has been developed in the United States is shown by a statement made by L. G. Fouse, of Philadelphia, an eminent actuary. He says that under the legal reserve system, including the industrial method, there is carried in the United States $6,000,000,000 in insurance. Under the assessment and fraternal order systems the amount is $8,000,000,000, making the enormous total of $14,000,000,000 under all systems.

The anarchists, it appears, have not been neglecting the two "youthful despots." A plot to kill the kaiser on his recent trip to Russia was discovered, and a conspiracy was unearthed to assassinate the czar on his visit to Poland a short time ago. No damage was done in either instance. These plots show, however, that presidents and premiers are not the only sort of magnates who have won the anarchists' hostility. Kaisers and czars are also in peril, but they are guarded better than the rulers of more liberal governments.

Tom Smith, of Kansas, beats William Tell out of sight. He shoots four rifles, and with the fourth knocks an apple from his own head. Three rifles are made stationary, at various angles. Sighting by a glass, he fires, hits the trigger of the rifle 30 feet behind; the second rifle hits the trigger of the gun 30 feet in front, while No. 3 fires a ball and strikes the trigger of gun No. 4, at another angle, which knocks the apple from his head. His family might as well buy a cemetery lot and have it ready. They will be short on Smiths in Kansas.

Dr. W. L. Moore, chief of the weather bureau at Washington, who is both physician and mineralogist, states that during the months of January, February and March 1,200 suicides were reported in the United States. In July, August and September there were 1,600. There were 1,700 murders and 50 persons lynched or hanged during the three cold months, and 2,500 murders and 113 hanged or lynched during the three hot months. Investigations are being conducted in regard to the connection between crime and atmospheric conditions.

The land of morning calm, ancient Corea, has opened two more of its ports to the world. Chinampo and Nulpo are on the coast of two rich provinces. Of course American traders and manufacturers will look out for new opportunities in that quarter. Such as it is, the Corean civilization is very old and the people are well-disposed and industrious. Corea is known to have many undeveloped mineral veins and fresh gold discoveries may be expected in that region. A rush to Corea would add a little variety to the almost bewildering number of gold hunting expeditions at the present time.

The experiment of the Salvation Army in transplanting city poor from the slums to farms with a view to make them independent and self-supporting will be watched with great interest. The question whether the same causes that make people dependent in the city will make them fail to be successful in the country is an interesting one. Perhaps the most interesting question connected with the experiment is whether the people can be induced to go. Whether they will take to the idea of going to the country and living in comparative isolation is one of the problems the Salvation Army may solve.

The Japanese government has undertaken the construction of 1,200 miles of railway, the first that has ever been built there, in the island of Formosa, recently acquired from China as one of the indemnities of the late war. The Japanese have found, since subduing the rebellious natives, that the island, which many thought worthless, is exceedingly rich in natural productions and worthy of careful commercial development. The railway will not only be useful in transferring troops from one part of the island to another, but it will serve to bring the trade of Formosa more closely into Japanese hands.

George M. Pullman Is Dead.

Chicago, Oct. 19.—George M. Pullman died suddenly of heart disease at 5 o'clock this morning, in his magnificent brownstone home at the corner of Prairie avenue and Eighteenth street.

Mr. Pullman retired last evening at his usual hour, which was somewhat early. He was apparently in his ordinary health, and there was no indication of his demise, or indeed any premonition even of illness. He was at his office in the Pullman building up to 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, attending to business. Nothing unusual was noticed in his appearance. Mrs. Pullman is in New York and has been sent for.

George Mortimer Pullman was born in Chautauqua county, New York, March 3, 1831. At 14 he began life as a clerk in a country store, later associated himself with an older brother in the cabinet making business at Albion. He came to Chicago in 1859 and at first engaged in the business of raising buildings, elevating entire blocks a number of feet to bring them up to new street grades. While riding in an old-fashioned sleeping car from Buffalo to Westfield, N. Y., it occurred to him that there was a field for building comfortable sleeping coaches. From 1859 to 1862 he made a series of experiments on the Chicago & Alton and Galena roads.

The first car, the Pioneer, was completed early in 1865, and immediately took rank as the most perfect railway vehicle the world had ever seen. This was the beginning of the Pullman system, which has grown to the present enormous proportions. Mr. Pullman was identified with almost every public enterprise in Chicago. The industrial town of Pullman, within the city limits of Chicago, now contains over 11,000 inhabitants.

EDITOR DANA DEAD.

The Close of a Long and Notable Career.

His Death Had Been Long Expected and Came Peacefully—Occurred at His Long Island Home—Outline of Life.

New York, Oct. 18.—Charles A. Dana, editor of the New York Sun, died at his home in Glencove, L. I., at 1:20 o'clock Sunday afternoon. The cause of Mr. Dana's death was cirrhosis of the liver. On June 9 he was at his office apparently strong and healthy. The next day he was taken ill, and he never afterward visited New York.

Short Biographical Sketch.

[Charles Anderson Dana was born Aug. 18, 1819. He came of an old New England family, which has supplied as many students to Harvard and as many well-known names to literature as any in the east. Among its members are numbered Francis Dana, the revolutionary patriot; Richard Henry Dana, the poet; the other Richard Henry, who wrote "Two Years Before the Mast," and James D. Dana, the geologist. He followed the ancestral track at Harvard, when weakness of the eyes interrupted his studies and obliged him to leave the university without taking a degree, in spite of his high scholastic achievements.

College life over, he joined with Theodore Parker, Emerson, Margaret Fuller, George William Curtis, Hawthorne, Channing and others in their attempt to found the Brook Farm community. This was an endeavor to form an ideal society based upon real equality and perfect fraternity. The plan was not a success, and the members of Brook Farm were soon scattered. Young Dana abandoned his visionary hopes and turned his face to a life of toil. He at once entered the newspaper profession and was first employed by Elizur Wright, who was then publishing a paper called the Chronotype in Boston. He earned five dollars a week. From this point his rise was rapid. In 1847 he went to New York, having been engaged as city editor on Horace Greeley's rising paper, the Tribune, at ten dollars a week. The following year he was sent as special correspondent to Europe. His work there soon gained him renown as a correspondent, and on his return to New York he became Greeley's principal assistant. His salary gradually was increased from $1,000 to $2,500 a year, this being the highest salary paid at that time by any newspaper.

Mr. Dana's leisure hours were spent in literary work. He published a volume of poems, and in 1855 he began, in association with George Riley, to edit the "New American Cyclopedia."

From the first of his connection as managing editor of the Tribune and until he resigned his post thereon in April, 1862, Dana fought with Greeley, through the Tribune, against the spread of slavery in states and territories where it had not already gained a foothold. In 1861 Mr. Dana went to Albany to advocate the election of Mr. Greeley to the United States senate, and he almost succeeded in his endeavor. In the following year they differed on the proper conduct of military operations, and Dana resigned from the management of the paper, after a service of 15 years.

June 16, 1862, he was appointed to the war department commission to investigate claims at Cairo, Ill.; on March 15, 1863, as special commisioner of the department to report on the conditon of the pay service in the western army. June 1, 1863, in order that he might be subject to military exchange if captured when visiting the front of the army, he was appointed major and assistant adjutant general, and on December 31, 1863, was nominated to the senate for that office, but he never formally accepted it, and the nomination, at his request, after he had returned from Vicksburg, was withdrawn on February 24, 1864. January 20, 1864, he was nominated for assistant secretary of war for one year, from January 19, 1864, confirmed January 20, and took the office on January 28; renominated January 23, 1865, and confirmed on the same day. He renderd the principal part of his service for the war department under the above commissions and as assistant secretary by visiting the army headquarters at Rosecrans, Sheridan, Sherman and Grant, advising confidently with the commanding officer and corresponding freely with President Lincoln and Secretary Stanton, resigning as assistant secretary July 1, 1865.

When the war was over, in 1867, he went to Chicago, and for a year acted as editor of the Republican. Then he returned to the metropolis and organized the company which now publishes the New York Sun. The Sun was already an old-established journal, having first appeared in 1833. Dana's conduct of this journal was so fearless that in 1873 his criticism of the Grant administration led to an attempt on the part of the heads of the government to hale him to Washington for trial in a police court on a charge of libel. Justice Blatchford, then of the United States district court in New York, declared the attempt an invasion of constitutional rights and refused to grant the necessary warrant of removal. For nearly 30 years Mr. Dana made the Sun an independent democratic Journal. In its issue of October 14, 1897, in the heart of the Greater New York municipal campaign, Mr. Dana repudiated democracy of every stripe and declared for the principles and policy of the republican party. This was on the ground that the democracy of William J. Bryan represented principles, tendencies and purposes which the Sun abhorred, and that the gold democracy was impractical and without definite purpose or significance.]

Spread of the Fever.

New Orleans, Oct. 19.—Before seven o'clock Monday evening the 100 mark of deaths during the present period of yellow fever prevalence had been reached. When the board of health closed its books Sunday night there had been 93 fatal cases. Between Sunday night and nightfall Monday seven deaths were reported. This century of deaths has occurred among less than 900 cases that have been reported to the board since early in September, when the first case made its appearance in New Orleans. New cases on Monday, 37. Two cases are reported from Franklin, La.; two at McHenry, Miss.; 12 at Scranton; two at Pascagoula; 16 at Biloxi; two and one death at Clinton; two and three deaths at Edwards.

Story Denied.

London, Oct. 19.—The marquis of Salisbury telegraphs from Hatfield house, Hertford, saying there is absolutely no truth in the story published by the Daily Chronicle of this city, saying the premier is anxious to retire on account of ill health and anxiety respecting the health of the marchioness of Salisbury, and that an early reconstruction of the cabinet is probable.

Chickasaws Raid a Town.

Wichita, Kan., Oct. 19.—Mill Creek, a small town in the Chikasaw nation east of Berwyn, I. T., was raided by 35 Chickasaw braves, who terrorized the inhabitants, drove the merchants from their houses and engaged in a wild orgy which ended in killing a man.

REPORT OF THE MINT.

Facts and Figures Given by Director Preston for 1897.

Washington, Oct. 19.—The director of the mint has submitted to the secretary of the treasury his report for the fiscal year 1897, covering the operations of the mints and assay offices, together with the statistics of foreign countries relative to production, coinage and the monetary condition of each. Following are extracts from the report:

The value of the gold deposited at the mints and assay offices during the fiscal year 1897, cents omitted, was $129,165,500; of this amount $87,603,337 was original deposits and $42,102,162 redeposits.

The coinage value of silver bullion received during the year was $9,725,022; of this amount $9,470,623 was original deposits and the remainder, $254,398, redeposits.

The purchase of silver bullion for subsidiary silver coinage, under the provisions of section 3,526, revised statutes of the United States, aggregated 259,248 fine ounces, costing $171,455.

The face value of uncurrent domestic gold coin received at the mint and assay offices was $1,025,121; of this amount $622,751 was transferred from the treasury for recoinage, and the remainder, $402,570, was deposited by individuals, the total coinage value of which was $1,015,314.

The coin executed during the year was as follows:

Gold	$71,646,705
Silver dollars	21,203,701
Subsidiary silver	3,124,086
Minor	984,569

At the average price of silver for the year the commercial ratio between gold and silver was 1 to 31.94; at the average price of silver for the year one dollar would purchase 741.65 grains, equivalent to 1.54 ounces.

The net imports of gold were $44,609,841, as against $78,904,612 net exports for the previous fiscal year. The net exports of silver were $32,636,835, as against $33,262,258 for the fiscal year 1896.

The products of gold and silver in the United States for the calendar year 1896 was: Gold, $53,088,000; silver—coinage value—$76,069,230. The world's product of gold and silver for the calendar year 1896 was:

Gold	$204,396,699
Silver (Commercial value)	109,406,809
Silver (coinage value)	215,242,700

The coinage of gold and silver by the various countries of the world, so far as reported, was:

Gold	$195,899,517
Silver	153,395,740

The director of the mint, in his report, reviews the decline of silver since 1873 and attributes the decline to the great increase in production.

Windsor (N. S.) Almost Destroyed.

Halifax, N. S., Oct. 18.—Historic Windsor, one of the most beautiful towns in the province, was devastated by fire Sunday morning. For six hours, beginning shortly before three a. m., the fire, fanned by a violent northwest gale, raged so fiercely that the local fire department was absolutely helpless to cope with it, and within half an hour after its discovery the mayor began to call for outside assistance. Long before noon the town had been eaten up almost completely, the area covered by the flames being nearly a mile square, and of the 400 or more buildings occupying the section barely half a dozen scorched structures remain. Among the buildings that escaped are the Windsor cotton factory, Kings college, the Anglican church, the Edgehill school for girls and the Buffrin hotel. The total loss is estimated at $3,000,000. While a number of the heaviest losers are partially insured and some of them pretty well covered, the total insurance is calculated to be not more than $500,000. Two lives were lost, Michael Whalen and his wife, an aged couple, and two children of Walter Mosher, a boy of 12 and a girl of nine, were badly burned.

Made Bogus Coins in Prison.

Pittsburgh, Pa., Oct. 19.—Warden E. S. Wright, of the Riverside penitentiary, has discovered that a number of the convicts confined in the institution have been manufacturing counterfeit 50 cent pieces. He has unearthed the metal from which the "queer" money was made, the molds in which it was cast and the names of several convicts who were connected with the matter, but as yet he has been unable to find the man who originated and carried out the scheme. The counterfeits are magnificent specimens of the coiner's art. The die from which they were made is almost perfect, and the milling of the coins, which is the government's chief protections of metal money from those who would imitate it, is as near perfect as it is possible for human ingenuity to make it, and that such coins could be made within the walls of the Riverside penitentiary with the crude implements to be obtained by the prisoners is a startling feature of the case.

Exports and Imports.

Washington, Oct. 16.—The treasury statement of the merchandise and currency imports and exports of the United States during September shows the exports of domestic merchandise to have aggregated $103,360,669, as compared with $83,746,362 for September last year. This brings the increase of such exports for the last nine months over the same period last year up to over $80,000,000. The imports of merchandise during September amounted to $42,410,018, of which over 50 per cent. was free of duty, a loss in total in imports as compared with September, 1896, of $8,400,000. For the nine months an increase is shown of $66,660,853. The gold exports during September amounted to $54,787, and the imports to $4,244,383. The exports of silver during the month aggregated $4,572,594, and the imports $646,548.

Over a High Bank.

Marshfield, Ore., Oct. 19.—Monday afternoon ex-Judge J. H. Noster, his wife and daughter and his son's wife and baby, while driving from Mickle Point to Coquille City, met with a terrible accident. They had reached a point about half way to Coquille City, and were driving around a high, rocky point, when they met another team. The judge attempted to back his team to one side of the road to allow the other to pass, but the horses became frightened and unmanageable and backed off the grade, a distance of about 35 feet. Mrs. Noster was instantly killed and the judge's life is despaired of. The other ladies and children were also badly bruised. One of the horses was killed and the buggy wrecked.

California Town Burned.

Iowa Hill, Cal., Oct. 18.—Iowa Hill, a mining town situated in the mountains of Placer county, was visited by a most damaging fire early Sunday morning. The fire started in the Central hotel, and within a few minutes the hotel was a mass of flames and the walls falling in. Two of the lodgers in the Central hotel, William Golden and William Owens, perished in the flames.

Mrs. Langtry's Husband Dead.

London, Oct. 18.—Edward Langtry, the husband of Lily Langtry the actress, died Friday night in the asylum for the insane at Chester, to which he was recently committed.

JUSTICE FIELD RETIRES.

Has to His Credit the Longest Term on the Bench.

Washington, Oct. 15. — It was announced at the supreme court Thursday that Justice Stephen J. Field, of California, had notified President McKinley of his intention to retire as a member of the court and had informed his colleagues of this fact. The members of the court after adjournment at four o'clock called in a body on the retiring justice to pay him their respects. It is expected that his successor will be nominated by the president immediately after the convening of congress in December and that Attorney-General McKenna, also of California, will be named for the office.

Justice Field has been eligible for retirement ever since November 4, 1886, when he reached the age limit of 70 years. It was on August 16 last that Justice Field broke the record for length of service on the supreme bench, as it was on that day he exceeded the term of service of 34 years 5 months and 6 days to the credit of Chief Justice Marshall, whose service had up to that time been the longest in the history of the court. The total length of Justice Field's service up to the time when his retirement will take effect, December 1, will be 34 years, 7 months and 20 days. Under the law Justice Field will receive the full salary of an associate justice of the United States supreme court—$10,000 per year—for the remainder of his life.

Justice Field is a remarkable man and one of a remarkable family. His father was David Dudley Field, a Congregational minister of New England, and his mother was Sumit Dickinson Field. His grandfather on his father's side was Timothy Field, a captain in the revolution, and his grandfather on his mother's side was Noah Dickinson, who served with Israel Putnam in the French and Indian war and also served through the revolution. The justice is not the only member of his family in this generation to receive distinction. His brothers were Cyrus W. Field, who carried through to success the first transatlantic telegraph cable; David Dudley Field, who attained great eminence as a lawyer; Matthew W. Field, an eminent engineer; Henry M. Field, who was a distinguished clergyman; Jonathan Field, who was president of the Massachusetts state senate, and Timothy Field, who was an officer in the United States navy.

A WRECK AT SEA.

Steamer Strikes a Rock—Over 150 Lives Lost.

Havana, Oct. 18.—The gunboat Maria Christina, which left this port Saturday for the scene of the Triton wreck, has returned, accompanied by the tugboat Susie, which went with her. The two vessels arrived here at one o'clock Sunday afternoon, the gunboat having on board 19 and the tugboat 23 of the members of the lost ship's company, of whom 13 are civilians and soldiers. These are all who were saved of a total list of 200, passengers and crew.

Just as the Triton was sinking Capt. Ricardo, her commander, committed suicide by shooting himself with his revolver.

The coasting steamer Triton, from Havana to Bahia Honda, province of Pinar del Rio, went upon a rock Saturday morning, between Dominica and Mariel, on the north coast of that province. Her cargo shifted, and 15 minutes later she sank in 120 fathoms of water.

A scene of terrible confusion and panic ensued as soon as the passengers realized the meaning of the crash. In a wild struggle they rushed for the boats. The first boat that was lowered capsized immediately and all of its occupants were drowned in the whirling waters. The next was struck by an enormous wave and turned over, drowning 20, but the frail craft righted again, and eight who had been thrown out regained it. Some were good swimmers and kept themselves afloat for hours; others floated about on planks. Four soldiers on planks whom the strong currents carried east of Havana, opposite Moro castle, were saved by a pilot boat going toward Cardenas. They declare that Saturday night there were many others near them on planks, but when morning came all these had disappeared. Some of them probably became food for sharks.

Roof Falls on Audience.

Cincinnati, Oct. 16.—The falling of the ceiling in Robinson's opera house Friday evening gave Cincinnati almost a repetition of the horrible accident of '76, when the cry of fire in the same opera house caused a stampede in the audience, and over 100 persons were crushed to death. Friday evening the Holden Brothers Comedy company was producing "Dangers of a Great City," and the curtain had just been rung up on the second act, when there was an ominous cracking heard all over the house. The list at the hospital showed three dead, five dangerously if not fatally wounded, and 25 more or less seriously injured. The ceiling of the theater was in the shape of a dome, which was formed by rafters rising from walls of the theater and joined in the center of the ceiling by a circular bar of iron. This bar was fastened to the roof of the house by iron rafters, the whole forming the inside shell of the theater. This whole mass was precipitated upon the heads of 200 spectators.

To Divide Alaska.

Unalaska, Sept. 29. (By the revenue cutter Corwin to Seattle, Wash., Oct. 15.)—Lincoln territory, in all probability, before the adjournment of another congress will have been carved from the vast domain of Alaska. For many months past there have been whisperings of such action, and the movement has gone so far that petitions have been prepared for circulation in this northern country asking congress to create the territory. Briefly outlined, the proposed territory will embrace the Yukon basin from the international boundary line on the east, to the seacoast on the west. The northern boundary will be the Arctic ocean, and the southern an irregular line from Mount St. Elias to a point about midway between the mouth of the Yukon and the mouth of the Kuskokwim.

A Notable Reception.

New York, Oct. 18.—Evangelina Cisneros, the Cuban girl who was rescued from a Havana prison, was given a public reception Saturday night at Delmonico's. She was introduced there to a large number of specially invited guests and afterward appeared on a platform erected at the foot of the Worth monument at one corner of Madison square. Probably 200,000 people were congregated in and around the square.

Seal Experts Confer.

Washington, Oct. 16.—The state department confirms the report given out by the foreign office in London that Great Britain assents to a meeting of experts in Washington in the seal question, and Mr. Hay cables that Prof Thompson, the British expert, was to sail at once.

How to Make Tea.

More than half the Tea consumed in the United States and Canada is of Japanese growth, yet, the majority of Americans apparently do not understand how to prepare it so as to develop the delicious qualities which it contains. The Japanese Government has appropriated a large fund to aid the Japanese Tea growers and Tea merchants in prosecuting this educational work, and it is hoped that American ladies will be apt students. The main Bureau of the Japanese Tea Guild has issued an official recipe for making Japanese Tea, the translation of which is as follows:

First.—Use a small, dry and thoroughly clean porcelain teapot.

Second.—Put in one teaspoonful of tea leaves for each cup of tea desired.

Third.—When using Japanese teas, pour on the required quantity of fresh boiled water, and let stand with closed lid from 2 to 3 minutes. Never boil the leaves. In order to retain the natural flavor, Japanese tea leaves should be kept in tight can or jar, free from moisture.

Note.—To thoroughly enjoy the natural, delicate and sweet flavor of Japanese Teas, neither sugar nor cream should be used.

Perhaps Andrews Was to Blame.

The son of a well-known Providence lawyer came home at the end of his first term in college exulting in the fact that he stood next to the head of his class, says an exchange. His father was less easily satisfied. "What! Next to the head?" he exclaimed. "What do you mean, sir? I'd like to know what you think I send you to college for! Next to the head, indeed! Humph! I'd like to know why you aren't at the head, where you ought to be!" The young man was naturally crestfallen, but upon his return to college he went about his work with such ambition that the end of the term found him in the coveted place. He went home very proud, indeed. It was great news. The lawyer contemplated his son for a few moments in silence; then, with a shrug of his shoulders, he remarked: "At the head of the class, eh? Humph! That's a fine commentary on Brown university!"—Chicago Tribune.

No Charge.

It was evident that he was angry, and perhaps he had reason to be. Just as he passed under the scaffolding the painter flourished his brush a little too vigorously and the result was disastrous.

"Look at that," he yelled, indicating his coat and making all sorts of violent gestures.

The painter looked at it as requested.

"You have a right to kick," he said, when his scrutiny was completed. "It's a very uneven piece of work. I won't charge you a cent for it."—Chicago Post.

AN OPEN LETTER

From Miss Sachner, of Columbus, O., to Ailing Women.

To all women who are ill:—It affords me great pleasure to tell you of the benefit I have derived from taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I can hardly find words to express my gratitude for the boon given to suffering women in that excellent remedy. Before taking the Compound I was thin, sallow, and nervous. I was troubled with leucorrhœa, and my menstrual periods were very irregular. I tried three physicians and gradually grew worse. About a year ago I was advised by a friend to try Mrs. Pinkham's Sanative Wash and Vegetable Compound, which I did. After using three bottles of the Vegetable Compound and one package of Sanative Wash, I am now enjoying better health than I ever did, and attribute the same to your wonderful remedies. I cannot find words to express what a Godsend they have been to me.

Whenever I begin to feel nervous and ill, I know I have a never-failing physician at hand. It would afford me pleasure to know that my words had directed some suffering sister to health and strength through those most excellent remedies.—MISS MAY SACHNER, 348¼ E. Rich St., Columbus, O.

THE HOME COMING.

The day's work done, my homeward way
Beneath the elm trees' shade
I wended; near the gate my fay
Watched for me while he played.

Oh, he was fair to see!
A winsome boy was he,
With eyes of heavenly blue;
A soul no stain that knew.

And soon as he adown the street
My coming did espy,
Forth would he speed on eager feet,
Bounding with joyous cry,

To grasp my hands and give his kiss,
And tell what he had done
Or seen the while through that or this
His sportive hours had run.

Oh, his was guileless art
The way from heart to heart!
Thoughtful amid his glee,
A loving child was he.

Now many a year that fair young head
Has rested 'neath the sod,
And I the homeward way still tread
To where he lives in God—

An unknown way; but when I near,
At last the shadowy gate,
Of lacking welcome I've no fear;
For me my child's await,

Mature in heavenly grace and lore,
To greet me as my guide,
And ope for me my mansion's door,
And aye with me abide.

And so, the while a tear
Drops on the sod so dear,
Still home with cheer I fare;
My child awaits me there.
—Christian World.

Fragments of an Evening.

THIS is simply a fragment torn out of an evening. The reader will please uprear before his vision a bedroom, a gas jet burning at what might be called the middle register of illumination, a bed upon which a small, white figure reclines, if burrowing and writhing may be brought under that head, and a man bending over the ensemble of nightgown, twinkling feet, brownie doll and copper cent.

[Note. The copper cent has been given as a bribe to induce a willingness to go to bed.]

First Voice (small, piping, but extremely cheerful)—Let's play circus, papa.

Second Voice (firm, but gentle)—No. Pop's boy must say his prayers and go to sleep.

First Voice (adding nothing whatever to the original proposition further than a little stronger tincture of persuasion)—Let's play circus, papa.

Second Voice (its proprietor evidently determining quietly to ignore the suggestion)—Begin now, sweetheart. Put your hands together that way. "God bless mamma"—

"Gaw bless mamma"—

"'And papa'"—

"An' papa. * * * If I say 'Gaw bless papa' will you play circus?"

"Maybe so. Now, honey mustn't talk about anything else when he is saying his prayers. 'And Sister Ros'"—

A sudden ejaculation of delight as one of the wee feet, plunging upward at a right angle with the bed's surface carries with it the counterpane and sheet, forming thereby a very insignificant looking pyramid of covering.

"O-o-o-o! Circus tent! Papa be elephant!"

Sternness on the part of the senior. A quick leveling of the pyramid by simple process of extracting the center pole and straightening out the architect to his proper length of two feet three inches.

"Now, go on. 'God bless Sister Rosie and'"—

"O-! Papa's a bad boy. Spoiled my circus."

"'Sister Rosie and grandmamma and'"—

Silence.

"Don't you know what becomes of little boys that won't say their prayers?"

The reluctant one looks defiantly out into the adjoining room, from which a celebrated and especially fiendish frog is supposed to come when called upon for the purpose of carrying away little boys who do not say their prayers.

"You b'oke my circus."

"All right. I'll turn down the lamp. Then we'll see what happens."

The rebel manifests a disposition to hedge, provided he can do so with dignity and untarnished honor.

"'Gaw bless Sister Rosie and'—am I a good boy, papa?"

"'And grandmamma.'"

But this skimming over and neglecting a vital proposition is not to be permitted.

"Am I a good boy, papa?"

"Yes, I guess so. Go on, now, little man. 'God bless Sister'"—

"If the frog comes to carry away your good boy will you whip him?"

The elder of the couple concludes that by making a vehement declaration and continuing it on through many words he will be able to lead the devout one back to his supplications, even unknown to him.

"Well, I should say so. A nasty, big frog that would come to carry away my boy when he was just saying his prayers as nice as anything—I should think I would whip him. And so would grandmamma punish him, too, and drive him away, because grandmamma is good to her little man and loves him—and so let's say: 'God bless grandmamma.'"

"Gaw bless—would you whip him with a stick?"

"With a stick and a switch and—and a curtain-rod."

"An' th'ow stones at him?"

First Voice — (its owner awaking to the fact that the doctrine of physical force is in danger of overshadowing the matter of orisons)—Now, my boy mustn't talk so much about other things. Go on with your prayers. Now—

Second Voice—O-a-i-u-e-a-o-i-a-e!

This is not the name of a Hawaiian lady. It is the chronicler's poor, futile effort to make the very accommodating Roman alphabet cover and describe the ejaculation and wail of dismay, sorrow, despair, gloom, dolor and lugubriousness which rose when the supplicator discovered the awful truth that his cent had disappeared.

First Voice—Sh! sh! What's the trouble?

Second Voice — My—cent — all—gone!

First Voice—Your what?

Third Voice (by the sound feminine, by the words, maternal)—He's lost his copper cent in the bedclothes—mamma's darling!

The small bunch of melancholy repeats another Hawaiian name—this time it is that of some island—and joins his progenitor in delving into the bedlinen in search of the faraway Klondike where treasure nestles. At length the money is found.

The head of the house is impressed by an idea.

"Now, you'll lose it again if you try to hold it in your hand. Let me pin it in a fold of your nightie. There! Isn't that fine? You can't lose your money now." He had formed a very bunchy wen upon the front of the garment, the core thereof being the copper.

"Go on with your prayers now. 'Grandma, and—'"

"Papa, did you fix my money so I can't lose it?"

"Yes, you needn't be afraid any more."

"You good boy, papa! Let me kiss you."

The little arms are extended after the manner of a letter v, and at the sight of the honest admiration which beams out of the bright and very wideawake eyes the parent in his heart forgives this little interruption of the holy function. His boy will be too big even to want to kiss him some time, and it is best to accept the sweet fruit of child love while one may. But austerity follows affection, and order proclaims itself.

"Now papa's boy mustn't do anything at all but say his prayers and go to sleep. Go ahead at 'grandma.'"

"* * * And grandmamma and Auntie Ruth and * * * Aunty Ruth bought me a shicken."

"'And Auntie Alice.'"

"Auntie Ruth bought me a shicken. Shicken with eany in it."

Third Voice (the voice of wisdom from the outer room)—If I were you I'd notice his chicken, or you'll never get past it. That's the way I managed Rosie, and she's asleep now.

"Notice it? How—oh, yes; so Auntie Ruth bought you a chicken full of candy, my, that was nice! Did you give Sister Rosie some of it?"

"E—ess."

There is something drawn out and protracted and sleepy about the response, and the man at the bed looks closely.

"He's about gone. Dear, little old chap! Well, I'll rush it through and not keep him awake too long. I'll bunch it. Sweetheart, say 'God bless everybody.'

The sweetheart revives with an alacrity evidently born of the belief that emancipation is to be cheaply purchased.

"Gaw bless ev'body. Watch me turn a summerset."

"Why, you little possum! No, sir. No somersaults till you have finished. You must say: 'And make Rosie a good girl and Ted a good boy,' before there are any somersaults."

Silence. One foot kicks upward over the edge of the covering, where it is discovered like a new country, and a joyous "land-ho" of delight is uttered.

"Look at my foot, papa."

"Now, sir, I insist that you finish your prayers. This has gone far enough. The frog will come, and so will the big dog. And besides," as a heaping up of sorrows, "God doesn't like little boys who turn somersaults in the middle of their prayers. No, sir. Not the least bit. So," with amazing severity, considering the size of the adversary on whom he was "picking," "'Make Rosie a good girl and Ted a good boy.'"

"I'm too tard."

"Too tired! Oh," in an excess of grief and sorrow, addressing the brass ball at the head of the bedstead, "was there ever such a sinful little boy? Breaking his poor old papa's heart by his wickedness! Won't say his prayers! Poor, poor old papa, who loves him so much—"

Second Voice (from far, far, far away)—"And make papa good girl an'—an'—an' Rosie bless—ev'body—an'—n—n'."

Silence!

The self-described one of the broken heart bends over and notes the sealed eyes, the little face nestling into the depths of the pillow and the tranquil, regular breathing.

"Amen!" he says, very gently.—Chicago Record.

"Pretty Nearly."

The dreadful uncertainties of agriculture are graphically expressed in an incident reported from Kansas City. A somewhat ragged man, with an honest face and calloused hands, was charged in court with being a vagabond and having no visible means of support. The court questioned him closely.

"Where have you been recently?" he was asked.

"I've been out in central Nebraska for 13 years," he answered.

"What have you been doing out there?"

"Working for a living."

"No quibbling, sir! Tell us exactly what you were doing in those 13 years."

"Well, your honor, I was on a farm, and I raised 13 crops—pretty nearly."

There was a world of pathos and experience in those last two words, and the unfortunate man was discharged.—Youth's Companion.

Lost His Name.

One may, it seems, lose one's wits without altogether losing one's wit. The late Henri Meilhac, a French dramatic author, who always had some clever thing to say, was troubled in his last days by a sad loss of memory. One day he exclaimed to a friend who called:

"Hurrah! I've got my name back! You know 'twas forgotten."

"Why, nobody forgot your name—"

"Yes, I did; and I should say that was quite enough!"

This was Meilhac's last joke. He died within a few days.—Youth's Companion.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Indigent Children.

For the ensuing 18 months the St. Paul city and county hospital will afford shelter and treatment to the indigent, crippled and deformed children who may be placed in that institution by the board of regents of the state university.

Heretofore the state has made no special provision for the care of crippled and deformed children, as it has in the cases of the insane, imbeciles, pauper children, etc. Accordingly, the last legislature made an appropriation of $10,000 to be entrusted to the board of regents of the state university, to be expended by them in caring for such crippled and deformed children, as well as children suffering from diseases likely to result in permanent deformity. The law imposes but one condition upon the regents, which limits the amount to be expended in any one year to $5,000.

Another Hold-Up.

Another freight and cattle train was held up just outside of Minneapolis. Three masked men boarded the train and robbed every man from the engine to the caboose, about 40 in all. Every cent of money, with watches, knives and other things, were taken from the men, who were all harvest hands returning from their work in North Dakota and western Minnesota. Some of the men had their entire season's earnings, but others had taken the alarm and sent their money ahead by express. One of the men thinks that about $200 was secured.

Confessed to Murder.

John Ives, a tramp, who had served out a thirty days' sentence in the Owatonna jail, upon being released, told the sheriff that one of the other prisoners had made a confident of him and had confessed that he had fired the shot which resulted in Policeman Winkelmann's death at New Ulm two years ago. The prisoner has gone under different names. Ives says he knows him as Tom Hogan, but he is now awaiting the action of the grand jury on a charge of larceny under the name of Michael Enright.

Good Report.

Architect Friebus, of the Indian office, has returned from a six weeks' tour of inspection of the school buildings on the western Indian reservations. He reports that the buildings at the reservations in Minnesota and North and South Dakota are in good shape. He also reports that the gas plant established at the Pipestone school in Minnesota is a success and is an ideal light for small schools. It is probable that he will recommend the installment of such plants in all the small schools.

Personal Property.

A compilation of the readjusted assessment of personal property, as fixed by the state board of equalization at its recent session, shows an increase of about 3 per cent in the total as returned by the county boards. The total is, however, still about $900,000 more than last year. The total valuation returned by the county boards was $102,218,627. This was raised by the state board to $105,612,716, an increase of $3,394,089.

Logging on a Large Scale.

Red lake logging operations are to be conducted this winter upon a very large scale, especially for the first year in which logging has been permitted in much of that portion of Minnesota's pine region. During the past month a constant stream of men and teams has been pouring into the woods and the preliminary work, such as road building and the construction of camps, is well under way.

Inspecting Dairy Herds.

The inspecting of dairy herds and testing the milk as to butter fat and general productiveness has been resumed by the state dairy and food commission. Inspectors will be sent out to take charge of the herd for a day, to watch the milking, measure the quantity and make fat tests.

A CHILD'S RECOVERY

From Paralysis and Six Years of Convulsions.

Little Fannie Adams, of Umatilla, Cured of a Dreadful Malady—A Cure of Unusual Interest—A Reporter Investigates.

From the Lake Region, Eustis, Fla.

For some time past the Lake Region has been receiving reports from Umatilla, Fla., of an almost miraculous cure that had been effected in the case of Fannie Adams, a daughter of A. J. Adams, of that place, and last Saturday a representative of this paper made a trip to Umatilla for the purpose of determining the authenticity of the same.

The family live a short distance from the village, where it was found that the people were cognizant of the cure which had been effected, and were rejoicing with the family in their new found happiness. The father, A. J. Adams, is a hard-working honest farmer from east Tennessee, and the family came to Florida four years ago in the hope that a change of climate would be of benefit to their afflicted child. Much of their earnings have gone for doctors' bills, whose services proved unavailing. The representative was greeted by Mrs. Adams, from whom he gained the story of her great trial.

Fannie, the youngest child, was born in east Tennessee, and was seven years old on the third day of February, 1897. When ten months old she was stricken with paralysis, which affected the entire left side. This stroke of paralysis was followed by convulsions, and from the time little Fannie was ten months old until February, 1897, there was not a single day or a night that she did not have spasms of the most distressing nature. Not a single convulsion, but always three or four, and sometimes as high as ten in one day.

The family was all broken down with care, and Mrs. Adams states that for one year she did not go into her kitchen to superintend her household work. All the fingers of the right hand of the little girl are enlarged and misshapen, caused by her biting them during the fearful suffering. The case baffled the skill of the best physicians, and they were frank to say that they could not determine the cause, or prescribe a remedy to aid the afflicted child.

But what a change now in that household; for little Fannie has recently been released from her six years of agony, which brings the light of happiness to the faces of the parents.

In January, this year, Mrs. Adams, who had purchased some of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People for her fourteen year old daughter, determined to try their effect upon little Fannie. After three or four doses, she noted an improvement and she then told the father what she had done. He at once went to the village and bought another box, and up to this time six boxes have been used. The first pills, Mrs. Adams states, were given in January, the latter part, and certainly not earlier than the fifteenth or twentieth, and the child had her last convulsion on February 3d, nearly three months ago. Her general condition has improved in every way, and it was not a month after the first pills were taken when she began to walk without assistance.

The pills were bought at the drug store of Dr. Shelton, in Umatilla. In answer to the question, did he, to his personal knowledge, know that the remedy had benefited Fannie Adams, as was stated by her parents, the doctor said that he was a regular practicing physician, and as such was loth to recommend any proprietary medicine, but still he was ready to do justice to all men, and he did know that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People had benefited Fannie Adams, and also volunteered the information that he knew of other children in the village who had been benefited by their use.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. Pink Pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

LIMBURGER FOR BAIT.

Schneider Shows His Friends How to Fish for Bass.

Schneider and some of his friends took a little outing last week. They didn't have much money is the reason they didn't go to Long Branch or Bar Harbor or to Michigan. They simply went up the Miami, and found a dry spot on the bank of the river and pitched a tent. Then they salted two or three kegs of beer in the cool sand, and were ready for fishing. Murphy was in the crowd. Never mind which Murphy, this one was Irish.

"Oi'll go down to the sthream," he said, "and Oi'll bring ye oop a sthring uv fish that'll make yer mouth water."

He came back an hour or two after without a fish.

"Thim bass are not afther flies to-day, begorra. Thot I know. Divil a wan uv them would bite."

"Vy you didn't try some grasshopper boogs? Dem coot bait somedimes, dey tole me."

"Ah, to the divil with grasshoppers, Schneider. You're always full uv munky suggestions. Go an' do your own fishin' wid thim grasshoppers if you think they're ony good."

"Vell, I'm not mooch of a fisherman, but I nivir coom back mitout somedings to show fur my vork, even uv I haf to go the store und py a zardeen box. I git you some fish for supper oof you shust vait an hour or two."

Schneider started down to the stream and without a minnow or fly, or even a "crasshopper boog." He went up the stream and in a short time he came back with fish for supper, though some were only blue cats, but very good they are when fried the right way.

"You're the stuff, Schneider, you're the stuff," was the chorus that greeted his return.

"Phwere did you git thim fish, Schneider? You've robbed somebody, you thavin Dootchman."

"Dint I tole you I vos a fisherman, soomtimes, hey? Vot you tink uv dem, an all uv 'em alive, py crachus?"

"Phot you bait wid, Schneider?" said Murphy.

"Dot's a secret, but if you don't giv it away I told you. I cot dem fish mit a little piece uv limpurger cheese. Oh, dem fish are Dutch fish, I tole you. Murphy, ven you ko fishin' again mebbe some time you bait mit a pertater. Den you git soom Irish fish."—Cincinnati Commercial Tribune.

Wanted Her Money's Worth.

It happened on a west-bound Sutter street car. The car was crowded. Some of the passengers were strangers. At the corner of Franklin street the conductor gave the signal to stop. He called out: "Fourteen hundred." Nobody moved. He shouted again, more lustily; no response. He repeated the call, louder each time. At last he walked up to a lady in the farthest corner of the car and politely told her that it was the fourteen hundred block. The passengers looked at him a moment somewhat perplexed.

"But I want to get off at fourteen hundred and 'four,'" she snapped at him, savagely.

The other passengers began to smile, and the lady left the car in a fit of silent indignation.—San Francisco Chronicle.

The Physician's Error.

The patient was far gone; it was the opinion of all that he could not live but a few moments. Just as the breath was about to leave his body, one of the physicians, a gentleman of culture, and a graduate of one of our best colleges, remarked: "Poor fellow, he looks badly." At this the dying man opened his eyes, jumped up in bed, and shouted: "Who is the villain who desecrates my deathbed by his solecisms?" Then he glared at the culprit and continued: "No, sir, I am not looking badly. I admit I look bad, but not badly, for I am not cross-eyed." And from that moment he began to recover, while the canker of remorse began its work upon the heart of the offender, and ere many days his name was to be found in the obituary column of the village paper.—Boston Transcript.

BUFFALO GAZETTE

DELANO, FRIDAY, OCT. 22, 1897.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE VILLAGE OF DELANO.

DELANO DIARY.

—Fresh Bread, Rolls, and Cake at Mrs. Billing's Restaurant.

—To-day the sun came out and we have had a genuine Minnesota fall day.

—The new telephone poles are fine and large. We have one almost in our barn door.

—Threshing engine, twelve horse power for sale. Call on C. H. Carlton for particulars.

—For sale, a span of mares; good for a farm team, or good on the road. Apply at this office.

—John Waber, is building a nice frame house on the farm on the Watertown road. Johnny is a hustler.

—Among Typhoid Fever patients in Minneapolis hospitals are Mrs. Charles Cunningham, and Rev. Farber's oldest son.

—If the weather is fine several Delanoites intend driving to Watertown to hear Rev. Atchison on Sunday at 3 P. M.

—A little grading and a few loads of gravel in some of our alleys would add much to the beauty and healthfulness of our village.

—Miss Arnold is interesting her pupils in a gymnasium. They are to practice in the attic of the school building for the present.

—The wires were strung, and the terminal appliances of the new telephone company arranged in Wittman's drug store this week.

—Othello, by Sanford Dodge Saturday evening, at the City Hall. It is not often Delano people have a chance to see a Shakespearian play by an artist of acknowledged ability.

—If you want your new suit done in time for Thanksgiving Day call on John Brandser and give your order before he gets more suits to make than he can complete by that time.

—John Cunningham's auction was fairly well attended. O. L. Billings was auctioner. Things went fairly well. About $200 worth was sold. One horse brought $73 another $13.

—Landlord Gilmer has built a nice barn for his cow and chickens, on the alley, on a lot lately purchased of S S Breed. Fresh milk and fresh eggs are handy to have in the hotel business.

—We understand a project is on foot to establish a large orchestra in town. We would expect a small orchestra to make more money than a large one; but perhaps the large one would have more fun.

—We understand L. H. Pryor has established a drug store at Montrose. And a doctor is to locate there soon. M. D's. are getting terribly thick in this section of country; but Montrose and vicinity should keep one fairly busy.

--Our tailor, John Brandser, has lately a letter from his brother who went to Stockholm to attend the exposition and and to visit friends. He has got back to New York, where he is taking lessons in cutting, from the John J. Mitchell establishment, one of the largest in the world.

--Andrew Reider, a veteran of the late war, who has had the easy mail route from Delano to Rockford, daily except Sunday, for eleven years past, and whose contract was good for another couple of years, received notice to discontinue carrying the mail after Tuesday.

—On Thursday of last week in company with Rev. Farber we visited Watertown, and had the pleasure of calling on our neighbor the Carver County News. It has a nice little office. C. O. Teas and his partner keeps things in apple pie order; while Editor Burns is up to date.

—Miss Alta K. Clark, of Hamline, the musical critic of the Dispatch, who visited in town over Sunday, sang "Nearer my God to Thee" at the M. E. church. Her sister Ellen played the accompanyment. They are fine musicians, and the audience enjoyed the treat.

—The boys should not jump on the trains while moving. Neither should the trains run through town faster than the law allows. If trains can't get out of town decently, an extra engine should be kept here to help them. It would be better than running over someone sometime.

—Constable Merriman took charge of a couple of Delano's young men who think it smart to jump on moving trains, for a few minutes a couple of nights this week. We understand the next offense or next offender will be run in for an all night session. It is wrong to jump on trains and risk life and limb just to show smartness and should be stopped and Joe is the fellow to stop it.

—A lady reader of the GAZETTE approves of stopping the boys from risking limb or life by jumping on trains. But thinks the Council ought, while they are about it, to look after the saloons, which are breaking the laws daily, and enticing the boys to ruin of mind, body and soul. The lady reader is correct. While the smaller evil should be stopped the larger one should not be winked at. It is like "straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel."

—Take a look at the new cream candy and taffy at Billing's

—Double strength, home made Hoarhound candy at Mrs. Billing's.

--J. D, Young hauled in the biggest cabbage today we have seen this fall.

--Don't forget to attend church Sunday evening. Presiding Elder R. R. Atchison will preach.

--The River Street printing office, we hear has already got a correspondent threatened with a shelalia.

—John Brandser is our home tailor, attends to his business and deserves your patronage. Give him a call.

—Paul Plotnick is the boss hunter. We met him on Wednesday with the biggest coon we ever saw. It must have been the "gross fader" coon.

--From High School notes in the Eagle it appears our school authorities are awfully slow about getting books for the scholars. Also, that there are pupils in the school that don't always behave themselves. If pupils persist in disturbing the school they should be sent home. One or two unruly scholars can waste many precious moments for the entire room in which they play.

Personal.

Anthony Roehl, of Herman, is visiting friends in town for a few days.

Mrs. W. D. Freeman has been enjoying a visit from her brother Mr. Fuller.

Mr. Sanders, a Litchfield printer, made us a call yesterday on his way to the cities.

Misses Ellen and Alta Clark, of Hamline, were guests of Miss Mary Catlin over Sunday.

Frank Shaw who has been at Long Lake awhile is again assisting George Bolton at the depot.

Aaran Ames, of Rockford, attended the Cunningham auction. He bought a spring wagon.

Dr. J. E. Soper and wife, with their bran new team visited Minneapolis friends over Sunday.

Mat Fautsch drove up to visit his brother Rufus, who was reported very sick Tuesday, near Montrose.

Mr. and Mrs. John cunningham, of Minneapolis, came up and attended their sale on the farm this week.

Mrs. Charlotte Metzger, of Minneapolis, passed through town, Tuesday, on her way to Watertown to visit her brother and family.

Mrs. M. A. Chance visited Minneapolis last week. Mrs. H. A. Dean returned with her and visited over Sunday with Delano friends; on her way to Buffalo.

Mrs. Dr. Lewis, of Mt. Vernon, Washington, and Mrs A. D. Smith, of Omaha, visited their parents Mr. and Mrs. John cunninghami in Minneapolis, last week.

Mr. and Mrs. C. J. Buckley and Queeney and Walter visited Uncle John Grafft, and famely, at Annandale last Sunday. Mrs. B. says Arqandale is a real nice town.

J. H. McGary, of Independence made us a call yesterday. John is one of the fellows who believes in the power of the press, and in making use of the power properly.

County Cullings.

Attorney C. A. Cahley has opened an office in Buffalo.

The Herald is in hot water because the Globe gave credit for its article to the Heron Lake News, and the GAZETTE had "a column of wild and irrelevant denunciation." What better could Bro. Tanner expect when he tries to antagonize free silver and free trade?

From the Howard Lake Herald we learn that Charley Moore fell, in the mill, and broke his leg.

The discontinuing of the Delano and Rockford mail route was a hard blow to people who have business in the direction of either place. It obliges mail from both towns and their vicinities to go to the cities and rub the risk of getting back when it can. With the Rockford route running, mail could reach Rockford, Buffalo and points east or west on the Soo road the same day it left Delano and mail from the Soo line was sure to reach its destination to points on the G. N. road the same day. But with the Rockford route abolished papers and letters must go to the cities and if the mail clerks are over crowded it must stay in the city or somewhere else until it is sorted. Papers printed Thursday on the Soo road do not get here until Monday sometimes, and those printed Thursday and Friday here, we are told are not received on the Soo road, sometimes, till the next week. That's too long. The Rockford route was much surer as we learned long ago.

Bean Soup.

There are are a great many people who "don't know bean's" so far as cooking them properly is concerned, according to the new hygiene of foods. The Journal of Hygiene gives this receipt for a perfectly nutritious and entirely digestible bean soup: Soak the beans over night in water to which a little soda has been added. In the morning rub them well to remove the skins, which are indigestiele and the cause of the gases generated by eating beans. Put the beans in a kettle, cover with cold water, boil till tender, then wash through a fine sieve. Have a quart of rich milk heating in a double boiler and stir into the beans till of the proper consistency. Season to taste.

Legal Notices.

AMENDMENTS TO SECTIONS 6, 7, 9 AND 10 OF ORDINANCE NO. 4, CONCERNING LICENSES.

The Village Council of Delano do ordain as follows:

That sections numbered six (6), seven (7), nine, (9) and (10) of an Ordinance concerning licenses, passed May 30th 1885 are hereby repealed and in lieu of said sections the following are ordained.

SEC. 6. Auctioneers shall each pay a license fee of seventy-five ($75.00) dollars per day provided that no citizen of the Village desiring to leave the Village shall be required to pay license for auctioning his goods.

SEC. 7. All persons not being residents of Delano, Wright County, Minnesota, engaged in the sale of goods, chattels, jewelry or notions of any kind from house to house sellers of any description of patent medicines not manufactured in Delano, Wright county, Minnesota, shall pay a license fee of seventy-five ($75.00) dollars for each day they may be so engaged.

SEC. 9. All persons not being residents of Delano, Wright county Minnesota, engaged in the sale of goods, chattels, jewelry or notions of any kind on the public streets, sidewalks, alley or public grounds of the Village of Delano, or from any wagon or vehicle of any kind, or from any box, platform, or erection of any kind, or standing on such streets, sidewalks, alleys, or grounds, shall pay a license fee in the sum of seventy-five ($75.00 dollars per day.

SEC. 10. It shall be unlawful for any transient merchant to sell, or offer for sale, any goods, wares, or merchandise, in any room, or store, of the Village of Delano, without first having procured a license and such person shall pay a license fee of seventy-five ($75.00) dollars a day. All persons occupying rooms for the purpose of stores and offering for sale at said rooms goods, wares, or merchandise, and who have not been assessed by the village assessor, or who shall not have a bonafide lease of such rooms or building for a term of at least one year shall be considered, for the purposes of this ordinance, transient merchants.

This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage.

Passed, Oct. 18th, 1897.

Attest: J. E. BOUSCH, President.

L. M. MAXFIELD, Recorder.

Late Educational News.

Oh the 8th day of October more than 10,000 students were on the rolls as members of the first Freshman class of the Cosmopolitan University. The confusion into which the plans regarding the Cosmopolitan's educational work were thrown by the retirement of President Andrews, in order to meet the urgent wishes of his friends at Brown University, has been met by the acceptance of the Presidency by Dr. Eliphalet N. Potter. President Potter has been at the head of two great colleges for nearly twenty-five years, and brings to the work exceptional talents as an organizer and a man of broad culture and commonsense ideas. He is already at Irvington engaged in organizing his staff of professors. The work of the University has been grouped under fifteen heads covering the various branches of knowledge. Each of these will be in charge of a professor. As soon as the task of selection is complete, the students will be assigned their work and the largest Freshman Class in the history of the universities of the world will begin its studies.

The extraordinary dimensions of the class thus formed has opened the eyes of the public to the importance of the gap in educational facilities which the Cosmopolitan has undertaken to fill. Knowing that the appropriation made by the Cosmopolitan is a limited one and that the entries are far beyond the most sanguine expectations, embarassing the work by their proportions, many professors and other prominent men have already made the offer of advice and assistance without pay.

HOW A PUZZLL WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Agents wanted in all unoccupied territory.

THE OLD LOG HOUSE ON FATHER'S FARM.

Dear brother do you remember
The old log house on father's farm,
How it kept us warm in cold December
And sheltered us from the winter's storm?

Dear brother do you remember,
More than forty years ago,
How cold it was in that December
And how deep was the winter's snow?

The old log house is standing yet,
But the roof has fallen in;
The doors and windows are out of fit
And only shows what it once had been.

Forty years and more have passed away
Since this rude mansion from the forest came.
It is as a landmark by the way,
And its endearments to me are ever the same.

In eighteen hundred and fifty five
To the far North West we came.
And there in the wilderness to live or die,
We settled upon our claim.

Our farq was simple and plain then.
Our wants, they were but few.
We lived on what the Lord did please to send,
And this was all that we could do.

Father, mother, sisters, they are gone,
While you and I are left to roam.
But we'l meet them in the far beyon,
And sing of home sweet home.

Brother, those years are past and gone,
And you and I are growing old;
But they say, in the far beyond,
There are pleasures for us untold.

On 11th of May, eighteen fifty eight,
Minnesota was admitted as a state.
On the map she makes quite a show,
Above St. Anthony's fall and below.

Brother, when first to these forests we came,
There was in them abundance of game,
And from the fruit off the cranberry vine,
Of venison and lake fish we often did dine.

Dear to my heart are the scenes of my childhood
When first to Minnesota we came.
There in the untrodden wildwood,
We built the old log house on father's claim.

Earthly joys, how soon they fade and die
When we are bereft of earthly pleasures here below.
Heaped in unhallowed graves they lie
While marching on to the tomb we go.

—An early settler to his brother, who is far away.

IT'S Judge McGee now. Vice Judge Russel resigned, in the Minneapolis Judicial district.

THE Wayerly Tribune and the Valley Herald are among our exchanges that have changed their style of makeup.

OUR copy of the Prison Mirror, printed at Stillwater, Thursday, Oct. 21. was received by us Tuesday, Oct. 26. That's too slow for Uncle Sam's mail.

FEARFUL snow storms are reported from Colorado, Nebraska, and other southwestern states. Large loss to property, especially telegraph and telephone lines occurred.

THE Methodist Herald has changed its form, and now appears in book form as the Midland Christian Advocate. It is well gotten up and contains good family reading matter.

OUR Pioneer Press for Tuesday last arrived this morning, Friday, and our Demorest's Magazine for October came in the same mail, a week or so after we had received the November number. Why are things thus?

THE elections next Tuesday will furnish interesting reading for somebody. Just how things will go is at present a conundrum. But when the votes are counted doubtless, as is usual, somebody will be surprised.

THE gold standard seems to fluctuate considerably, when measured by wheat. As soon as the elections are over, next Tuesday, we expect to see wheat and gold get further apart. There could, at present, be no better way to electioneer among farmers than to keep the price of wheat up.

THE Republican people and the Republican politicians are having a regular time of it over the candidacy of Moses E. Clapp for Governor. The people seem to want Moses, while the politicians would prefer an Aaron, with with a golden calf. The people have the power. If they turn out to primaries and elect delegates to represent themselves instead of the bosses; they may get Moses for a candidate, and then unless the opposition puts up just as good a man, Minnesota will have Moses. And if John Lind is his opponent we will be sure of a good Governor anyway.

VAN SANT appears to be ahead in the race for Governor, anyway among newspapers.

JOHN A. LOGAN Jr. appears to be getting a bigger reputation than his illustrious father ever had, but of quite a different quality.

SINCE "Old Endland" has told the McKinley Bimetallic Commission plainly that she would not engage in any plan for restoring silver to its rightful place as a part of the primary money of the world. Since an international agreement to have silver put in use as it formerly was, is out of the question, so far as Great Britain is concerned it would seem there is nothing left for such leading Republicans as President McKinley, himself, who appointed Mr. Wolcott and others to try to carry out the McKinley idea of international bimetallism, but to come out squarely on their beliefs and do as Charley Towne did some time ago, join with those who think Uncle Sam capable of making his own money, and enough of it to keep people busy exchanging it for necessaries and luxuries produced largely in this country.

Free silver Republicans and others who believe in the United States being able to use its own silver at home as money, and that neighboring nations will soon be glad to accept money, good in this country, for commodities of their own countries are not badly disappointed, nor even surprised to learn that England don't want to help in our plan.

Election of U. S. Senator.

The democrats of South Carolina have set a good example to other states. They have just selected a candidate for United States senator by a primary ballot. When the legislature convenes it will have nothing to do but register the people's choice. This comes as near election of senators by a direct vote as we are likely to attain for some time.—Wabasha Democrat.

It don't appear to us that the people should be satisfied with such and arrangement. The Legislatures in some states are notorius for registering other wills than the people's choice. If the candidate for Senator is already chosen the members of the Legislature should not be chosen simply because of their willingness to vote for the candidate selected. Legislators should have other duties than registering a vote for U. S. Senator, to perform.

Reputation.

A man's reputation in a community is usually what he makes. He is, in a measure responsible for his reputation.

If a man is honest everybody understands it. Even little children will say Mr. so and so is an honest man. I like to trade with him. Or if a merchant is dishonest at heart, and given to taking advantage of people when opportunity permits, people become aware of it very soon. A man is usually known by the company he keeps. "Birds of a feather flock together" is an old saying, but none the less applicable to the "genus homo." When a man is found idling away the precious hours of his life, without visible means of support, people become suspicious that he gets his living dishonestly; that he picks it up where it isn't lost; takes where it doesn't belong to him. If a rogue wants an assistant he will look for him among loafers, not among busy men.

In most towns petty thieving and other sneaking tricks are constantly occurring; for years perhaps, the perpetrators go uncaught. But scarce a person in town but is satisfied in their own minds that they belong to a gang that flock together; that seldom do anything for a living. Occasionally a man of enterprise belongs to the crowd. He puts on a better appearance to the public, and usually is leader of his flock.

When a horse is stolen; or victuals, or horse feed, or wood, or coal, or pocket books, or merchandise, or money, or anything else disappears from its accustomed place in a village of the size of Delano, suspicion at once falls upon those whose reputation has been established. If their innocence is proven then the shady characters about town have to take the blame. It is best to be honest and keep good company.

If a man or boy is needed for any business the would be employer turns over in his mind the bad qualities rather than the good of the person he wishes to hire. If the man or boy is an idler; keeps bad company; uses profane language or gets drunk, it is hard for him to find employment. Surely, in this direction the world is growing better.

Young man, always have something to do. Keep the best company you can find. Be industrious, honest, upright, prompt, and you can look all men in the face, and your rerutation won't suffer even though evil disposed people try to lay at your door the sins of others. It may be under a cloud for awhile, but the truth will prevail.

How They Vote in Nebraska

The old "Abe Lincoln" eagle at the head of this column is a picture of the bird carried through the war by the Eighth Wisconsin. It has been adopted as the republican emblem for the state and will head the ticket on the ballot. To vote a straight ticket it is only necessary to place an (X) in the circle which will appear below the eagle.—Weeping Water Republican, (Neb.).

Then if a voter gets his patriotism aroused to the right pitch he just makes an X under the old eagle, "Abe Lincoln" and the work is done. How easy it is to secure voters for a straight ticket under such a plan. But it don't always give the voter the easiest way to vote for the best men. Some of them, doubtless, are expected to be thinking more of the old eagle and of Honest Abe, than of the candidates on the ticket; they are expected to be thinking of war times instead of the present when they vote, and of course to vote straight, by making an X under the noble bird. This don't seem to us like giving the people the fairest chance to express their views by their ballots, as to present conditions.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. Oct. 22, 1897.

The administration can scarcely conceal the satisfaction it feels at the knockout blow administered to Senator Wolcott's international bimetalic commission by England, but it is striving to hide it for several good an sufficient reasons. It knows that it is already under suspicions of having given England a tip, and what is more important, it knows that the votes of Senator Wolcott and the other five senators—Carter, Pitchard, Shoup, Warren, and Clarke—who remained in the republican party, when other silver republicans led by Senator Teller abandoned it, solely because of their belief that this administration would be able to accomplish something for silver through some sort of an international agreement, will be needed when the attempt to jam an administration financial bill through the Senate is made this winter. It remains to be seen whether their votes can be had. None of these men are fools. Their attitude towards the administration financial bill will probably depend largely upon whether Senator Wolcott has been cured of his international bimetallism hallucinations by the rebuff given him by the British government and whether he sees through the game that has been played upon him and his silver colleagues and their constituents. Not only must the administration get these votes but it must also get those of the gold democrats-Caffery, Gray, Lindsay and Smith-, and then get the bill to a vote in the Senate, in order to pass it. And, as though this outlook was not a source of sufficient worry to Mr. McKinley, Czar Reed's friends are dropping mysterious hints that he may not deem it wise to allow the House to pass any financial legislation at the coming session of Congress.

With all its numerous faults England never fails to see that the interests of the humblest Englishman are protected in the most remote portion of the world. Knowing this, there is much interest felt in Washington in connection with what England will do about that correspondent of a London paper who starved to death in the streets of Havanna, as a result of his having been robbed of everything he had, including his passport, and being unable to identify himself or communicate with friends at home and obtain assistance. There are portions of this story that seem incredible, but if an investigation shows its main points to be true, it is a good ten to one shot that England will speedily demand and get the fullest reparation from Spain.

There is an impression among prominent democrats that Wm. R. Morrison will enter active politics again when his term as a member of the Interstate Commerce Commission expires, and be a candidate for Congress from his old district, now represented by his old time political opponent, Jehu Baker. Mr. Morrison's many democratic admirers would like to see him back in congress, where he was once such a power.

Gamblers care nothing for men or political principles in an election; they bet their money to win, and the fact they are gladly taking all the offers to bet against the regular democratic candidate, and even giving odds of three to one to tempt betters, tells its own story, and the gamblers are not the only men who regard the election of Judge Van Wyck, the regular democratic candidate for Mayor of New York city, as a certainty. One wager of even money has has been made in Washington that Van Wyck will poll more votes than all the other candidates combined, which was a case of a man's backing his enthusiasm instead of his judgement. Needless to say he wasn't a professional gambler.

Secretary Gage did not deny the correctness of the statement published this week purporting to give the substance of the financial recommendations of his annual report to Congress-merely said that his report was not complete and was therefore not a subject for newspaper discussion. The three features of this statement were the issue of 2½ per cent gold bonds in sufficient quantity to refund the entire bonded debt of the country and to allow $250,000,000 to be converted into cash; to establish an issue and redemption bureau with which shall be deposited $25,000,000 in gold, to be used to redeem paper money, and to make various changes in the National banking law, including a reduction of the tax on circulation to a rate just enough to pay for supervision and the allowance of banks with $25,000 capital in towns of less than 4,000 inhabitants. These recommendations may be made or they may not be made by Secretary Gage, but there isn't the slightest hesitation in saying that they will never be favorably acted upon during the life of the present Congress by that body. Every time the gold bond idea has been before Congress it has been sat upon.

Harmless Press.

Emperor Wilhelm should not get excited over press comments. If he lets the press have plenty of lee-way; its opinions will not injure him. As a proof sample we offer the Minneapolis Times, Donnelly's Representative and the X-Rays of Minneapolis, all of which have political opinions that render them perfectly harmless.—Annandale Advocate.

Mr. Satterlee should be a good judge of harmless papers and political opinions.

Morris and Tawney Responsible.

During the consideration of the tariff bill there was a great effort made to place lumber on the free list, but through the efforts of Congressman Morris, assisted by Congressman Tawney, a $2 tariff was retained.—Aitkin Republican.

When you buy lumber for a new granary, barn, or house, and think it comes about $2 per thousand too high, just remember that the Republican says Morris and Tawney are responsible for it

From the Interior.

Oct. 26, 1897.

BUFFALO GAZETTE,

MR. EDITOR:—We still live and enjoy the rights of free suffrage under a so called Republican form of government. They tell us that prosperity is at high water mark, and we can float up stream or down; just according to the supply and demand. And that the flag will not be lowered for the mourners in adversity. And while the millionairs are pullling the stipend in at the bung hole, the masses are worming away at the spigot. During the last session of Congress the all wool Republicans and the gold plated Democrats sent forth a decree, in the form of a Dingley bill, that all the world (United States) should be taxed, and tribute paid to Caesar. And now the time has come for every man to stand up and be counted. And under this tax, we are paying more for sugar; more for boots and shoes; more for lumber, and many other things too numerous to mention, and all these extra dollars go, not into the government treasury, nor into the pockets of the poor, but into the coffers of the rich. Is it right that the people should be taxed just to pay tribute unto Caesar? Some of the newspapers are making a little light of the farmer; think he is getting to smart in politics; had better keep still on a subject he knows nothing about. A farmer may not be able to count money and figure interest quite so fast as the millionaire and shrewd politician, but nine times out of ten he is possessed of more common horse sense. Politics are quite exciting in the Mark Hanna reservation (Ohio) this fall, and it seems to be a question who will get there. There is an old proverb that says: "Truth is stranger than fiction." But it seems that proverb has been reversed in these latter days. You may produce argument until you are black in the face, but it will have no effect upon the man who is married to his idol. Many tell us that free silver and Bryanism is dead and will never have a resurrection. Now if it is any comfort for those fellows to believe this false prophesy, we say to them, get all the comfort out of it while you can for the day is coming when you will tremble in your boots; and your knees will smite together, as did Belshazzar's, when he made a feast for his thousand lords, and he was made to see the hand writing on the wall. If the true light of prophesy in this age and generation is hid, it is hid to them that are lost. It is not necessary for a man to be a philosopher to see that there is something wrong in this, the last decade of the 19th century. It seems from all outward appearances that we are in the heel of time; people are running after false Gods and crying for vengance.

Some of the newspapers are trying to make the farmer believe he is rich because he has got a few bushels of wheat to sell at 75 or 80 cents per bu., but not so, the farmer has more ways for his money than many people suppose, and his expenses are greater than many think for.

It is said that all the clerks and those in the employ of the government at Washington, who live in Ohio, will be given a furlough and free transportation, to go home and vote, at the November election. With some, it will be a great calamity should Mark Hanna not get back to the U. S. Senate. If he gets there, it will be by his money and not brains; he will buy his way in as did Simon Magnus try to buy salvation. Mr. Single Gold Standard man you can hoop up your politics and cry "down free silver" but when the day of retribution comes you will call for the rocks and mountains to fall upon you to hide your shame.

It seems that the 53 ct dollar of last fall is still current money among the merchants and goes readily for 100 cents. It pays taxes; pays interest; pays the doctor; pays the preacher; pays for the newspaper; and pays funeral expenses. It is a silver dollar established by the government containing 412½ grains, and says it is a hundred cents, no more nor no less. And all the Mark Hanna and John Sherman ritualism can not change it. Last fall there was over six million one dollar men; and a little over seven million 53ct men. They, like the old man believed that the tail went with hide and so voted for the money power to have the golden calf, tail and all. You can preach false doctrine and play second fiddle on your ram's horns from now until dooms day, but free silver and Bryanism, as you call it, will be heard from, from the upper porch of the tabernacle, in 1900. The other fellow is getting the grain and you are choking on the cob. "The people sat down to eat and drink and rose up to play,"

I was much pleased to read in last weeks GAZETTE a letter from my old time friend, Hon. B. F. Christlieb, now of Los Angeles, (city of the Angels) Cal. I was reminded when we were boys together in the early days of Minn., and smoked the pipe of peace; when we met at parties, log rollings, and house raisings. I wish for my old time friend, long life and prosperity in his new home; planted by the sea in Southern California. Time has been on our track since first we met in the early days of Minnesota, and the mark of age is upon our brow. But the world will plod on when we are gone and time will mark other victims for the mold. I hope my friend will come often as a correspondent to the GAZETTE.

Well, Mr. Editor, I have spoken my piece and If Mark Hanna gets there I shall expect second prize.

Yours in hope of that better day a coming. SUPERNUMERARY.

A Gift of the Buffalo.

A cattle-breeder in the Northwest has crossed the buffalo with the domestic cow. The astonishing result is an addition of full 50 percent. to the milk-yielding capacity of the animal.

If the practice shall bear such results generally the profit to the country will be enormous.

The annual production of milk in the United States is 5,210,000,000 gallons. Reckoning it as worth 10 cents a gallon, and addition of 50 per cent. by the cross-breeding of cattle would add no less than $260,500,000 to the annual wealth production.

By all means let our cattlemen push the buffalo experiment.--Thrice-a week World.

HOW A PUZZLL WAS SOLVED.

When you want a certain article, you want the best make of that article, don't you?

But how to determine which make is best is what puzzles you, isn't it?

And when the puzzle is solved for you, 7 authority which cannot be questioned, you are pleased, aren't you?

And you would like to hear of one puzzle that has been solved for the people of the whole world, wouldn't you?

Well, we will tell you about that very puzzle, and its solution.

At the Universal Exposition of 1889 at Paris, France, the best sewing machines of the world, including those of America, were in competition. They were passed upon by a jury composed of the best foreign mechanical experts, two of whom were the leading sewing machine manufacturers of France.

This jury, after exhaustive examination and tests, adjudged that the Wheeler & Wilson machines were the best of all, and awarded that company the highest prize offered, the GRAND PRIZE, giving other companies only gold, silver and bronze medals.

The French Government, as a further recognition of superiority, decorated Mr. Nathaniel Wheeler, president of the company, with the Cross of the Legion of Honor, the most prized honor of France.

That is how the puzzle of the best sewing machine in the world was fully solved by the most competent authority in the world in favor of the No. 9 and No. 12 Wheeler & Wilson machines.

The No. 9, for family use, and the No. 12, for manufacturing uses, are the best in the world to-day.

And now, when you want a sewing machine, if you do not get the best, it will be your own fault.

Ask your sewing machine dealer for the No. 9 Wheeler & Wilson machine, and if he does not keep them, write to us for descriptive catalogue, prices and terms.

Bottles made of paper under a German patent are now much used, especially at sea, which is hard on fine glassware.

The builder of the famous old United States frigate Constitution called it "a powerful agent of national justice." It proved to be that, and also materially hastened the return of peace in the war of 1812.

The counterfeiting of certain lines of American manufacture is reported to be a new industry in Germany. But as a rule American goods are like American girls, and cannot be successfully imitated.

The reign of the present czar will probably be marked by the completion of the great Siberian railroad and the construction of a thousand-mile canal from the Baltic to the Black sea, to cost a hundred million dollars. That would do for one monarch's share of internal improvements.

As the bicycle scorcher and the boat rocker retire into winter quarters the idiot with the "unloaded" pistol again takes the center of the stage. There should be no "unloaded revolvers." Every revolver should be loaded and everyone should understand that fact and leave firearms alone.

Sir Edwin Arnold, whose sojourn in Japan caused him to entertain and express such a favorable opinion of the natives of that country, has married a Japanese lady. By thus uniting himself with a "Pitty Sing" he has shown his faith by his works. "The Light of Asia" will now shine more refulgently than ever on the enraptured vision of the poetic Sir Edwin.

The Piute Indian in Nevada is said to be thinning out rapidly, due to the deadly salaratus biscuit. The Piute squaw got the idea of throwing a handful of salaratus into the flour and for the last year every buck on the reservation has stuffed himself daily with the seeds of indigestion and intestinal disturbance known as saleratus bicuit. The next census reports will find what is left of Lo pasturing on patent medicine and pessimism.

It is announced that the fortune left by Fair, the bonanza king, has so shrunk since his death that it now amounts to but $15,000,000. This sum should suffice to keep his three children in bread and butter for the remainder of their lives. But as a dozen or more eminent legal gentlemen are still at work energetically upon the estate the heirs may be in luck if they receive enough from it to cover the cost of bread and oleomargarine.

The Salvation Army in California has touched the heart and pocket of the sugar king, Claus Spreckels. He has bought a large tract of land in Monterey county and leased it to the army, advancing money until the Salvation beet growers are self-supporting. When they begin to make money they are to be encouraged to buy ten acres of ground apiece on ten years' time by installments. Mr. Spreckels agrees to buy their beets at good prices.

Henry O. and James M. Neville, twins, were born in Kentucky in 1815 and the similarity of their careers is something marvelous. Both married sisters and each is the father of seven children, each lost a child, each was a county judge, each entered the federal army as a captain and was mustered out of service as a colonel. Their father, James Neville, a Virginian, served as a private through the revolutionary war and died in Fauquier county at the age of 99 years.

The annual report of Gen. Sternberg, surgeon-general of the United States army, shows that alcoholism among the regular soldiers is slowly but surely decreasing. There was a time when Uncle Sam found it difficult to obtain recruits unless he took residents of city slums, more or less addicted to drink. But the personnel of the army is improving, and for the past few years a greater proportion of country boys, who make the best soldiers, has been secured for enlistment. In the course of time, it is to be hoped, the "bummers" will entirely disappear from the ranks.

A valuation has been fixed at last on a masculine heart when trifled with by one of the softer sex. In Maine a jury awarded damages amounting to $1,789 against a young woman who disappointed an expectant bridegroom at the last minute. The amount asked was $25,000. Why it was scaled down to the nice figure of $1,789 is not explained, but the award is at least an assurance that the male cardiac muscle has a value, and that everything is not fair in love when the victim is only a man. The damages are large enough for a Klondike grub stake, and may lead on to fortune and a girl who will stick.

Mark Twain's remark about the perils of going to bed because statistics prove that more people die there than anywhere else is recalled by the annual report of the interstate commerce commission, which shows that last year American railways carried 511,772,737 passengers, and that of this enormous number only 181 were killed, or only one in 2,827,474. When it is considered how complicated the business has become, how numerous the trains are, great speed they maintain, and how the fate of those aboard them depends upon sobriety and faithfulness in railway employes, this record seems wonderful.

THE JURY DISAGREES.

Celebrated Luetgert Murder Case Results in a Mistrial.

After Being Out Sixty-Six Hours Jurors Stand Nine to Three for Conviction—To Be Tried Again.

Chicago, Oct. 22.—The gray light of a cool autumn morning straggled through the big windows of Judge Tuthill's court Thursday as Adolph L. Luetgert, the man who has been on trial on the charge of murdering his wife and boiling her body in a vat, heard from the foreman of the 12 men who considered his case for 66 hours, the words: "We are unable to agree upon a verdict."

He stood up, and with only a good-natured smile in his swarthy face, shook hands with his son Arnold, his counsel and business partner, William Charles, in less than five minutes was led back to jail, the jury was dismissed and the great trial was over.

Division of the Jury.

The 12 men were divided as follows:

For conviction and the death penalty—Heickhold, Boyd, Bibby, Mahoney, Behmiller, Hosmer, Shaw, Fransen and Fowler.

For acquittal—Harlev, Holabird and Barber.

As the jurors filed into court about 10:40 Thursday morning they were a haggard-looking set of men. Several of them were collarless, and the eyes of all of them were swollen and red. The jurors took the seats they had occupied daily for over two months.

ADOLPH L. LUETGERT.

In reply to a question by the judge, Foreman Heickhold said that the jury had not agreed upon a verdict, and that it was his firm belief that there was no prospect of an agreement. The jury stood nine for conviction and three for acquittal, and had stood that way for 38 hours, and there had not been a solitary change in the vote within that period.

Points of Disagreement.

When the jurors had received their vouchers, they were taken down to the basement in an elevator and left the criminal court building by way of a rear entrance to the jail yard. The jurors left in squads of four. They did this to avoid the great crowd that had collected in front of the criminal court building and also to get away from reporters. But the latter gentlemen were fully posted on exists and entrances to the big building and met the jurors as they emerged from the jail yards. It was reluctantly admitted by several of them that the disagreement was brought about by a wide difference of opinion regarding the rings found in the vat, the testimony of Emma and Gottlieba Schimpke and the testimony of Kenosha witnesses who positively testified that they saw Mrs. Louise Luetgert alive in the Wisconsin town on May 3, 4 and 5. Juror Harlev did not believe the rings found in the middle vat of Luetgert's factory were Mrs. Luetgert's rings. Holabird was inclined to believe the story of the Kenosha witnesses despite the impeaching evidence introduced and Barber would not believe the strong evidence given by the Schimpke sisters. These were considered the strong features of the trial by these jurors.

MRS. LOUISE LUETGERT.
[The Missing Woman.]

Awful Destruction.

Madrid, Oct. 22.—A dispatch received here from Leyte, one of the Philippine islands, says that place has been almost devastated by a cyclone, that many persons have been killed, and that the damage to property is incalculable. The cyclone, it is further announced, destroyed the towns of Tagloban and Harnanion and the island of Leyte as well as several villages. It is estimated that 400 persons lost their lives through the disaster. Later advices from Manila say the cyclone occurred on October 12 and they add that Carigare and Burgo, on the eastern coast of Leyte, have been wiped out and that an immense wave swept inland, engulfing villages. Several thousand natives perished at Tagloban. The cyclone also swept the island of Samar.

Slaughter on the Nile.

Cairo, Oct. 26.—Details just obtained of the revenge of the dervishes upon the Jaalin tribe, caused by the refusal of the latter to join the forces of the Khalifa against the British, show it to have been terrible in the extreme. The left bank of the river between Berber and Metmeh was practically depopulated. The dervishes butchered every male member of the offending tribe and carried away the women, after sending 150 maidens to the Khalifa. The dervishes in addition threw many women and children into the river.

Weyler Denies a Rumor.

Washington, Oct. 22.—Senor de Lome, the Spanish minister, has received the following cablegram from Gen. Weyler: "Please deny the report that has been published that I have refused to surrender my command and that Gen. Castellanos refuses to consider as pacified the four western provinces. In accordance with her majesty's command I will sail on the last day of this month."

THE DEAD NUMBER NINETEEN.

New York Central Express Train Plunges Into the Hudson River.

New York, Oct. 25.—Buffalo and New York special No. 46, on the New York Central & Hudson River railroad, due to arrive in this city at 7:30 o'clock Sunday morning was thrown from the track at daybreak into the Hudson river 1⅞ miles below Garrison's station. The retaining wall along the river had been undermined by high water in the river, and the track caved under the weight of the train. The train consisted of the engine, a combination baggage and express car, a smoker, two ordinary coaches and four sleepers. The engine and two forward cars are submerged in 50 feet of water. Engineer Foyle and Fireman Tompkins went down with the engine. It is known that it was a trifle foggy, and that the track was not visible, but if there was any break in the lines of steel, it must have been of very recent happening, for only an hour before there had passed over it a heavy passenger train laden with human freight. The section of the road was supposed to be the very best on the entire division. There was a great heavy retaining wall all along the bank. What seemed to have happened was that underneath the tracks and ties the heavy wall had given way, and when the great weight of the engine struck the unsupported tracks it went crashing through the rest of the wall and toppled over into the river.

Then there happened what on the railroad at any other time would have caused disaster, but now proved a very blessing. As the train plunged over the embankment the coupling that held the last three of the six sleepers broke, and they miraculously remained on the broken track. In that way some 60 lives were saved.

The express car and the combination car floated out about 20 feet from shore, but sank a little later. One man was taken from the top of the car and efforts were made to rescue those inside. A few were gotten out, the passengers left upon the track making a human bridge to the shore to take the wounded on. The day coach and smoker had gone down in the deeper water, and rescue was impossible. In the latter coach the conditions must have been horrible. The car turned completely over and the passenger end of it was in the deep water, while the baggage end stood up towards the surface. The men in that lower end must have fought like fiends for a brief period, for the bodies, when taken out, were a mass of wounds.

Garrisons, N. Y., Oct. 26.—The complete list of the killed in the New York Central & Hudson River railroad wreck, a list of which the railroad officials believe includes all of those who could possibly have been lost, numbers 19. The bodies of the engineer, fireman and Mr. Van Etten's secretary are yet in the river with small hope of their immediate recovery. Of the 16 dead, who lay in the coroner's office at Cold Springs, eight were Chinese, whose names or residence meant scarcely anything to the general public, and yet six of those eight were identified and claimed long before any person had come forward to inquire or seek for two well-dressed and evidently very respectable white women, the only women killed in the wreck. The 16 bodies that were held at Cold Springs for identification and claim of relatives were divided between the two undertaking establishments.

As Dun Sees Trade.

New York, Oct. 23.—R. G. Dun & Co., in their weekly review of trade, say:

"After the heaviest buying ever known in many branches during September and the first half of October, it was both natural and desirable that a more quiet period should give time for testing the size and temper of retail trade, and for distributing part of the enormous quantities bought. In textile goods the rush of orders went far beyond all distributive demand in August, and represented great replenishment of stocks, and the similar rush for goods has been correspondingly great in other lines during the past two months. The produce market acted with as little apparent reason as usual. Although Atlantic exports of wheat were 3,576,607 bushels, flour included, and for three weeks of October, 10,309,908 bushels, against 7,742,214 last year, with western receipts not 500,000 bushels larger, the price advanced 2½ cents. Corn, with smaller receipts and exports, barely a quarter of last year, declined a small fraction. Failures for the week were 224 in the United States, against 274 last year, and 36 in Canada, against 60 last year.

Bicycle Firm Assigns.

Chicago, Oct. 23.—An assignment was made Friday by the Fowler Cycle company, one of the largest bicycle concerns in the west. The officers of the company are reticent regarding the amount of assets and liabilities, but the best information obtainable gives the liabilities at $400,000; assets much less. It has been rumored for some time that the company was in financial difficulties. The action taken Friday was precipitated by the employes. A committee of the men called on the treasurer and asked if they would be paid to-day wages due them up to a week ago today, which were due last Wednesday, or whether they would be paid to date. The difficulty of raising another week's pay roll decided the officers of the company to assign. The firm employed 500 men.

World's W. C. T. U.

Toronto, Ont., Oct. 26.—The World's Christian Temperance union convention, at its session on Monday, adopted a resolution declaring unequivocally its opposition to regulation or license as applied to any and all forms of sin, and its abhorrence of any compromise whatever with anything which is wrong in principle or sinful in practice. Another resolution exceedingly regrets the persistency of the United States senate in refusing to ratify the Anglo-American arbitration treaty, the more so since by so doing they neglected to voice the sentiments of the people they were elected to represent. Other resolutions drafted declared against lynching, for church cooperation and for equal suffrage.

Lost at Sea.

Gloucester, Mass., Oct. 22.—The annual roll giving the names of the fishermen who have lost their lives during the year ended September 30 is made up and shows a loss of 59 men and 11 vessels during the past year, against the loss of 74 men and 13 vessels in 1896. The crew of the schooner Lizzie J. Greenleaf, numbering 18 men, probably went down with their vessel, as they never have been heard of. The total value of the vessels lost was $65,830.

ALASKA.

Gov. Brady Makes His Annual Report —The Gold Craze.

Washington, Oct. 23.—The report of John G. Brady, governor of Alaska, for the past fiscal year has been submitted to the secretary of the interior. A summary follows:

It estimates the present population at 30,000 natives and 10,000 whites; predicts that with reindeer transportation mails can be sent all over Alaska during the winter, and recommends that $100,000 be appropriated for government buildings and $60,000 for schools. It says nothing has so retarded Alaska's substantial growth as the helplessness of settlers to obtain titles to their homes on account of the failure of congress to extend the general land laws, and urges congress to create a commission of five, one senator one representative and three bona fide Alaska residents to codify laws for Alaska. The secretary of the treasury is urged to confine the hunting of sea otter to the natives, for, "if the white man is not shut off at once the Aleuts will have to be cared for by the government."

Reviewing gold operations, Gov. Brady says: "Ship load after load of gold seekers and their freight has been rushed to the extreme limit of salt water navigation (Lynn canal), and there they have been literally dumped upon the beach, some above high water, and many below, as they learned to their sorrow when the water covered them as they slept. The gold seekers have had a terrible time, but they are brave, and started out to endure hardship. As a class they rank far above the average manhood of the country. Skaguay is being built up rapidly. Lumber is in demand, and lots are selling as high as $1,500. Americans are anxious to secure a route to the Yukon which shall be entirely upon United States territory. Different parties are now out, and are carefully examining the mountains between Yakutat and Cook inlet. This is the third season of the work in Cook inlet. The excitement over the Klondike has drawn many away from that district; nevertheless, the output of gold this year will be no mean sum. The possibilities of the whole region bordering upon this inlet and upon Prince William sound will draw crowds of adventurers in the near future."

MANY VESSELS STRANDED.

A Great Storm Rages Along the Atlantic Coast.

Cape May, N. J., Oct. 26.—One of the fiercest northeast gales of years has swept the lower Jersey coast and up Delaware bay. Many vessels have been stranded and there is an unconfirmed report that a ship went down off shore Monday morning. A fleet is riding at anchor within the harbor, unable to proceed either way, and the meadows are so inundated that railroad travel to the coast resorts is practically suspended. The tide here is abating somewhat, but the wind at midnight was maintaining a velocity of 30 miles. Portions of the board walk have been swept away, as well as cottage porches and fences, and the damage is estimated at thousands of dollars.

Baltimore, Md., Oct. 26.—A special to the American from Ocean City, Md., says: The storm of the last two days was the worst ever experienced in this section. The wind attained the proportions of a hurricane, and the surf ran four feet deep across the beach into Synepuxent bay. The large porches of Congress hall, Trimpers, the Eastern Shore hotel, Cropper's pavillion, Atlantic hotel and Meyer cottage are completely wrecked. The immense fish pond of the Ocean Fishing company was carried out to sea. The Cambridge hotel was nearly wrecked. A large two-masted schooner was sunk in the bay after being driven against the drawbridge. The damage will reach thousands of dollars.

SPAIN'S SHARP REPLY.

She Wants No Aid or Interference from the Outside.

Madrid, Oct. 25.—In the special note to United States Minister Woodford the government declares that Spain has done all in her power to end the war in Cuba and cities the many sacrifices which have been made by the nation, the number of troops sent to Cuba and the reforms which are to be carried out in the island, and which are fully described. The communication is courteous in tone, but very determined in rejecting the substance of the American note. Spain resolutely asserts her determination to settle the Cuban question herself without foreign assistance or interference of any kind. She declines to fix any date for the pacification of Cuba, which she proposes to bring about as she sees fit by force of arms and by political reforms culminating in autonomy combined. While regretting the losses and damages the insurrection has inflicted on foreign residents, Spain argues that it would not have happened if international law had been observed by the United States especially. The note ends with the statement that "Spain will not admit the right of any foreign power to interfere in any of her affairs."

Gen. Miles' Report.

Washington, Oct. 23. — Gen. Miles, commanding general of the army, has made his annual report to the secretary of war. A synopsis follows:

He commends the efficacy of the army and speaks of the progress that has been made on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts in the matter of fortifications. He asks that congress authorize two more regiments of artillery to garrison the new fortifications, and also five additional regiments of infantry. He devotes considerable attention to Alaska, and says the waters of Alaska should be thoroughly examined by the naval forces, and that there should be at least three military posts established in the territory to support the civil authorities. He refers to the improved condition of the Indians, and recommends that the policy of employing army officers as Indian agents be continued. He makes recommendations in detail for the protection of coast points, and says that the maximum peace footing of the army should be one enlisted man to every 1,000 of population, and the minimum one to every 2,000.

Famine in Ireland.

Dublin, Oct. 26.—There are two sides to the question of the famine in Ireland. One side is that of the government, which alleges that the famine is exploited by politicians as an argument against the administration of Irish affairs. The other side, held by many of the clergy, politicians and people, is that it is certain there will be great distress throughout large sections of the country. The archbishops and bishops of Ireland deem it their duty to submit to the government a statement of their conviction, formed on the personal knowledge of seven members of that body, that the failure of the potato and cereal crops in many districts, particularly on the southern and western coasts, must lead to great distress, and unless speedy measures of relief are adopted to disastrous consequences.

Perished in Burning Hotel.

Oil City, Pa., Oct. 25.—Three persons were burned to death and seven more were severely injured in a fire that destroyed the Hotel Brooklyn at Kelletville, 25 miles southeast of Oil City, on Sunday morning at an early hour. The building was a three-story one, roughly built of double boards, and burned like tinder.

A Home-Grown Experience.

A man went into an icehouse to cool off. An abrupt and impetuous hired man closed and locked the door and went away. The next day was Sunday and the hired man did not come back. While the man who learned to cool off waited for the return of the hired man his object was accomplished in a very thorough manner. He cooled off. The muffled door gave back but echoes to his blows, and his voice could find no place to escape and sound the alarm. When he grew tired of walking and swinging his arms to keep warm the chunks of ice that were piled around him did not offer a tempting bed. Hunger gnawed at his vitals and refused to be satisfied with diet of raw air. Darkness settled down like a six months' Arctic night, and the only sound which broke the profound stillness was the man who wanted to cool off trying to swear. The hired man opened the door on Monday morning, and the man who wanted to cool off crawled out more dead than alive. When his tongue had thawed out he began to abuse the hired man. "Fool!" retorted the hired man. "Fool, you are a lucky dog and do not know it. Don't waste time in abusing me, your benefactor, but go and write a book of impressions on Alaska." Then the man who wanted to cool off saw that his fortune was made.—Chicago Record.

Sea Dogs on Wheels.

The bicycle fever has broken out in a most unexpected quarter. It is only natural that a landsman should take to that speedy method of locomotion, but who would ever think that seamen would get the craze? Perhaps it is because they have become accustomed to rolling. Nearly every British ship that comes into port now carries a bicycle, and the skipper is usually an expert rider. At sea he rides around and around the main deck, and as soon as he reaches port he takes his wheel ashore. Three sea captains were riding in the park the other afternoon. One of them was a novice and confessed his inability to work the tiller so as to sail a straight course. "It's very good," he declared, "if it just had a little more pitch to it. Ah, that's better," he added, as he struck a stone and pitched off head foremost. The manufacturer who will turn out a bicycle with elliptical wheels will make a hit with seafaring men. — San Francisco Post.

He Raised the Wind.

The ship had lain becalmed in a tropical sea for three days. Not a breath of air stirred the mirror-like surface of the sea or the limp sails that hung from the yards like drapery carved in stone. The captain resolved to wait no longer. He piped up all hands on deck, and requested the passengers to also come forward. "I must ask all of you," he said, "to give me every match you have." Wonderingly the passengers and crew obeyed. The captain carefully arranged the matches in his hand as each man handed him his store, until all had been collected. Then he threw them all overboard but one, drew a cigar from his pocket, and, striking the solitary match on the mainmast, endeavored to light it. In an instant a furious gale swept over the deck, extinguished the match, and filled the sails, and the good ship Mary Ann sped through the waves on her course.—Philadelphia Inquirer.

FIBROID TUMOR

Expelled by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Interview With Mrs. B. A. Lombard.

I have reason to think that I would not be here now if it had not been for Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It cured me of a fibroid tumor in my womb.

Doctors could do nothing for me, and they could not cure me at the hospital. I will tell you about it:

I had been in my usual health, but had worked quite hard. When my monthly period came on, I flowed very badly. The doctor gave me medicine, but it did me no good. He said the flow must be stopped if possible, and he must find the cause of my trouble.

Upon examination, he found there was a Fibroid Tumor in my womb, and gave me treatment without any benefit whatever. About that time a lady called on me, and recommended Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, said she owed her life to it. I said I would try it, and did. Soon after the flow became more natural and regular. I still continued taking the Compound for some time. Then the doctor made an examination again, and found everything all right. The tumor had passed away and that dull ache was gone.—MRS. B. A. LOMBARD, Box 71, Westdale, Mass.

LEISURELY LANE.

Is there no road now to Leisurely Lane?—
We traveled it long ago;
A place for the lagging of leisurely steps,
sweet and shady and slow.
There were rims of restful hills beyond,
and fields of dreamful wheat,
With shadows of clouds across them blown, and poppies asleep at our feet.

There lads and maids on a Sunday met and strolled them, two and two;
The leaves they laced in a roof o'erhead and only the sun peered through;
And there was time to gather a rose, and time for the woodbird's call,
And plenty of time to sit by a stream and harken its ripple and fall.

Is there no road now to Leisurely Lane?
(God knows we have hurried afar!)
There was once a lamp through the brooding dusk, and over the tree a star;
There was once a breath of the clover bloom (sweet Heaven, we have hurried so long!)
And there was a gate by a white rose clasped, and out of the dusk a song.

That song . . . the echo is strange and sweet, the voice it is weak and old;
It hath no part with this fierce, wild rush and this hard, mad fight for gold!
It hath no part with the clamor and din,
and the jarring of wheel and stone!
Oh, listen, my heart, and forget—forget that we reap the bread we have sown!

Is there no road now to Leisurely Lane—
where, lingering, one by one,
The summoning bells of twilight time over the meadows blown
May find us strolling our homeward way, glad of the evening star?
Is there no road now to Leisurely Lane?
God knows we have hurried afar!

Home Journal.

IN THE GRIP ∴ ... OF A GRIZZLY.

The Unpleasant Experience of a California Sheep Herder.

"NOW that you've all told your stories about the meanness and cussedness of the coyote," said Johnson Bleeker, a mountain herder in the San Bernardino mountains of California, in a company of ranchmen at the store over at Warner's Springs the other evening, "I have a little on that subject to say myself. I owe my life to a pack of coyotes up in Kern county, and from all that I can learn they are the same as all others of the coyote family. In 1873 I was teaching a district school in San Diego county, and was all run down in health and spirits. When the long summer vacation came on, I had an invitation from my brother Ned to come and spend the summer at his ranch in the mountains in Kern county. I accepted, and went there on mule back, because there were no railroads in southern California then.

"The second day I was at my brother's ranch. We went out for a week of hunting in the mountains. We were armed with the best rifles, and our horses carried a big lot of ammunition and camp stores. Ned soon tired of hunting, and after we had tumbled over two wildcats and several antelope he wanted to get back to his horse, sheep and vineyards. He told me that the upper mountain canyons were full of big game, and that he knew from the loss of several calves and pigs that summer there were bears in the heavy timber. That was enough to excite my best endeavors with a rifle, and I stayed in the mountains while Brother Ned went down to his ranch. For a week more I got nothing more than a deer, several antelopes, and for the sake of getting rid of the mean varmints, I shot a dozen or so coyotes.

"I spent one night in a camp of a few miners, who were washing gold in a canyon, and the next morning when I rode away one of them advised me to keep near to their camp, for they had seen the day before grizzly bear tracks in the mud about the springs two miles away. I laughingly assured the miners that I took pride in my marksmanship, and was naturally cautious and cool, so I thought no harm could come to me. Along about noon that day I shot a buck some 200 yards from me, and as the wounded animal bounded away in a heavy chaparral, I drove my spurs in my mustang and gave chase. It was easy to follow the buck, because it left a trail of blood stains on the ground, and in the brush as it bounded along. The deer ran down the mountain slope for perhaps a quarter of a mile, and then suddenly struck down the mountain. And so, following it, I came at last to the edge of the canyon, with its large timber and heavy undergrowth. Just as I entered this canyon I came upon the overturned trunk of an enormous tree, which had apparently fallen several months before, turning out a huge mound of clay with its roots. The trail of blood showed that the deer had leaped over the trunk, but my horse was no jumper, and I began hastily circling around the tree. As I turned the angle of the clay mound at its root, with a vicious snort an enormous grizzly sprang up erect out of the shadows and faced me with jaws open. This apparition and the sudden 'squatting' of my horse occupied one second. Before the next second was over my horse had jumped about 15 feet, I should think. I had gone over his back in a curve, turning somersaults before I struck the ground. My gun had gone clear over the grizzly's head and lay on the other side of him, and there I was with my leg broken above the knee.

"Isn't it queer what funny things you will think of in some awful moment of sorrow or suspense? I lay there, trying to imagine whether Ned would find enough of my bones to accord me decent burial when he came to search for me. I was absolutely feeling in my pocket a little dizzily for a pencil and paper, so that I could write a few words, when the grizzly came, smelled me over two or three times, and at last took hold of my left shoulder and began to drag me. Then the pain in my broken leg and my tortured shoulder overcame me and I went off into blissful unconsciousness. When I began to find myself again the loud howling, deep growling and screams of rage startled me back into the world. I found the grizzly standing over me, while all around, not more than 20 yards away, were great gaunt, hungry coyotes. They had gathered in great numbers, and I saw in a moment what had saved my life thus far. They were afraid to venture upon the bear while he held his prey, and he could not begin ripping up his captive while they stood around, strong in numbers and emboldened by famine. Whenever the grizzly put his head down to take hold of me, the coyotes instantly began to crowd nearer, whereupon he raised his head with a warning growl, and they fled to a safer distance. This occurred not once or twice but a dozen times. The very fact that I am here to-day, gentlemen, is due to a gang of coyotes that would have torn me into a good many fragments if they could have had their way.

"But the brief respite came to an end. The bear, tired of being defrauded of his meal, decided to drag it to some more secluded place, and there feast at his leisure. He made one last charge upon the coyotes and then, rushing back, seized my shoulder again and started off in a trot. A few moments of agony were followed by another fainting spell, and once more, happily, I was unconscious. When I recovered the same howling, raging pandemonium was going on around me. Added numbers had made the coyotes more courageous, and they were pressing close upon the grizzly. He had not yet begun to devour me. He would stand over me and growl for a moment and then make onslaughts upon the enemy, scattering them like chaff. As I turned to watch him in one of these violent attacks I was startled to find that I was lying just before the door of one of my brother Ned's bearpens in the lower mountains. It was a little house, built and roofed with logs securely clamped together. The door was raised and fastened to the lever that connected with the trigger inside. I had helped to build a dozen just like the one near at hand. At first my thought was of the grim joke it would be on Ned's bear trap to have his brother devoured by a bear right in front of it. Then something else occurred to me. The bear came back and stood over me. His mouth was open to shut down on my neck and finish this story for me. I could feel his hot breath on my face, when the coyotes made a rush, and one of them actually seized my foot. The grizzly rushed after them furiously. Now was my opportunity. With superhuman exertion born of a highly desperate condition of affairs I rose upon my uninjured knee, and half scrambled half rolled into the pen. Before I was well in I could hear the huge brute coming on a run. I crawled another foot further—too late—no, I reached the trigger with the tips of my fingers, and down shot the ponderous door, scraping the grizzly's nose as it fell. I was shut up in the bear pen.

"What a moment that was in my life. If I were to live a thousand years I should never forget it. How the brutes did rage outside. A hundred times they walked around the pen, the bear officiating as chief mourner, and the coyotes skulking after him and howling dismally. As for me, I lay stretched on the ground inside and laughed and cried, and cried and laughed, for my nerves were gone all to pieces, and I had a spell of what would have been hysterics if I had been a woman. Sometimes I varied the performance by fainting comfortably away, with such a blessed sense of security, and when I waked again I cried and laughed some more. I staid there and kept house in that bear pen I don't know how many hours, and all the time my broken leg ached horribly.

"After awhile a fusillade of shots roused me, and I saw the grizzly rise upon his haunches. Then some more shots sounded and he fell, with faint struggling motions of his arms. The coyotes rushed at him first, but a few more shots scattered them.

"The next I knew there stood my brother Edward, looking down upon me in the bear trap. I was suffering too much to observe the expression of his face, but he was astonished beyond expression to see me alive before him. He was accompanied by my two miner acquaintances of the night before. 'I'll be hanged if it wasn't the closest call with a grizzly bear I ever heard of,' was the only exclamation the miners could make.

"You see it happened this way. My frightened horse tore like mad through the timber, and passed the miners in the canyon. They knew at once that an accident had befallen me. They started immediately to hunt me up, when they came across my brother Ned, who had come up for another day's hunt with me. They saw where I had passed through the chaparral, and where I had been thrown from my horse. The prints of the bear's feet had given them reason to believe I was done for, and the blood on the ground assured them of a frightful death I had met. It was four or five months before I could get about without crutches, and it was several weeks that I lay critically ill at my brother's ranch with my shattered limb. The doctors say it is marvelous that I lived through the first month. I still feel pain where the break occurred whenever the weather is damp, and I don't suppose I shall ever get over the horrible sensation of that July day, when I had my life saved by the coyotes. Do you wonder that I have a tender spot in my heart for the beasts that nine out of ten men think are the meanest and sneakiest that live?"—Detroit Free Press.

The Sea.

It is the sea which ennobles everything. Between the line and the surf there was but the ancient foreshore, covered with prickly tamarisks and mauve-colored heath, with yellow sand conspicuous here and there. At the limit of the foreshore the rugged border line cuts clear into a deep and somber blue. It is she—blue as any grape on this cluster which hangs in the cooling breeze. The azure deepens, filling up a good half of the range of sight; the white sail of a fishing smack floats alone like a hollow shell; the eternal monotone of ocean is borne upon the ear. Draw near and see the leaping silver foam. Above this intense blue the sky is transparently, superbly pale, and the stars are hurrying to light their lamps. There is not a living soul, not a plant, nor any sign of the hand of man. There might be Nereids and Fauns dancing on the strand, as in the days when the world was young.—"Journeys Through France."

Down on Lady Macbeth.

A young Scottish clergyman, fresh from the class room, was allowed on one occasion to preach in a certain parish church. Giving out the text: "Who can find a virtuous woman?" he led off with the remark: "Lady Macbeth remains the eternal type of the ambitious female." Afterward a parishioner inquired: "Who is yon Lady Macbeth?" He had sought her name in all his available works of reference, and not finding it, concluded: "She'll be some grand London lady."—Chambers' Journal.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

Big Sales.

The biggest and best sale of stumpage ever held by the state auditor of Minnesota was that conducted by State Auditor Dunn in the hall of representatives at the state capitol.

There were upwards of 200 buyers present and the bidding was extremely spirited. With but few exceptions all of the sale prices were in advance of the estimated values, and in some cases the advance reached the remarkable point of 150 per cent increase. The average price paid was upwards of $3 per thousand, and it will bring the state in over $175,000. Under the new law about $25,000 of this will be paid into the treasury immediately as a guarantee of good faith, the balance of the purchase price being due when the logs have been cut and and surveyed by the surveyor general.

Of the 58 larger parcels offered, all except three were sold. Besides these about 100 smaller tracts were offered, on which the standing timber was under 100,000 feet on a parcel, and 60 of them were disposed of. The total sale was upwards of 60,000,000 feet.

Asks an Investigation.

Warden Wolfer, of the state penitentiary at Stillwater, has requested the state board of prison managers to make an immediate and thorough investigation of the manner in which the state prison has been conducted since his appointment as warden in the spring of 1893. The warden has asked for the investigation for the purpose of publicly proving or disproving the truth of certain charges preferred against Deputy Warden Frank H. Lemon, alleging that he has violated the rules of the prison and the ethics of civilization by cruel and inhuman treatment of convicts.

Remonstrances.

Remonstrances have been sent to the interior department by county officials and settlers of the Mille Lacs lake region protesting against the allotment of the unoccupied lands on the reservation. Nine-tenths of the valuable land has been patented, one-half of the remainder has been entered and most of the rest is occupied by settlers who are only waiting for the government proceedings of homesteading. The continued wrangle about these lands is occasioned by the efforts of the attorneys, who are making a good thing off poor Lo.

Four Victims.

The large barn belonging to Sivert Berg, living four miles southwest of Hanley Falls, was totally destroyed by fire, together with all its contents. While the workmen were engaged in clearing away the debris, the remains of four human beings were found, but were so badly burned that they fell to pieces as soon as disturbed. The victims are supposed to have been tramps who had been sleeping in the hay loft. There was no clue to their identity, as no one saw them enter the barn.

To Protest.

The Indians of the Minnesota reservations are reported to be talking of sending a delegation to Washington to protest against the operation of the dead and down timber law. Already it has come to be understood that some of the men that are preparing to harvest the dead and down timber on some of the reservations have given it out that it will not pay to stop at the class of timber prescribed by law.

Immense Land Sales.

September was the biggest month for land sales the Great Northern has had in the Crookston district for ten years, and the first half of October overtops all of September. Six thousand acres of land sold in fifteen days in small tracts to actual settlers and nearly two thousand acres of that quantity in Polk county, shows that the Red River valley leads in its attractions to new settlers.

News in Brief.

John Johnson, of St. Paul, took rough on rats and died.

Albert Trapp, while on his way to the depot at Little Falls, was robbed of $35 and a gold watch.

Ex-Senator W. D. Washburn's residence in Minneapolis was robbed of $3,000 worth of jewelry.

Harvey Canfield was accidentally shot in the thigh with a rifle while hunting near Little Falls.

The granite for the $80,000 soldiers' home at Danville, Ill., will come from the Rockville quarry, near St. Cloud.

Eastern parties are negotiating for starting a linen paper factory at Rochester, and have leased a building for that purpose.

While Mrs. Minerva Graham was driving about St. Paul, shopping, a satchel containing $40 in cash and a check for $250 were stolen from the buggy.

An elevator in the plant of the Cold Storage Co., of St. Paul, with 36 barrels of apples and three employes, dropped 25 feet. Messrs. Reibel and Brady were injured.

A human foot was found on Plymouth avenue, Minneapolis. The foot had been dragged out of a grave and was well preserved, looking as though it had been buried but two months.

Judge Willis has rendered a decision that may cost the city of St. Paul in the neighborhood of $17,000. He declared unconstitutional the law under which the city council cut the salaries of city officers, and therefore that the city council had no right to make the cuts in salary about two years ago.

The cold storage warehouse of the Eagesser Brewing company at Mankato was burned.

Emanuel Bauman, of the town of North Star, got caught by the drive belt of a threshing engine and as a result one arm had to be amputated near the shoulder.

Adjt. Gen. Muehlberg reports that the contest to secure the location of Company E, of the Second regiment, formerly at Hastings, has practically narrowed down to two cities, Winona and Mankato. The former city already has a company of militia, and Mankato is making a strong effort to secure the prize.

The football game between the elevens of the Minnesota university and the Ames (Io.) college resulted in favor of the latter by a score of 12 to 10.

Miss Anna Holland secured a verdict of $75 against the school directors of Dover township, Olmstead county. She had a certificate from Winona county and Superintendent Chapman refused to endorse it.

The packing house at New Brighton has resumed operations. The yards are taxed to the utmost to handle the business, and P. S. Shufeldt, the proprietor, sees every prospect of running the plant continuously.

THE FARMING WORLD.

MODEL COW STABLE.

Labor of Feeding and Cleaning Reduced to a Minimum.

The illustration shows a portion of the cow stables, built on at the north end of the barn, the feeding floor being ten feet wide and each side 12 feet for stable. The main barn is 60 by 40; the cattle barn 60 by 34, with a milk room on the west side 12 feet square. The cow stable is a one-story structure, with a 14-foot monitor roof, five window ventilators on each side overhead, three doors at the north end (two for cattle to enter), a smooth, clean floor, the Buckley basin watering device, regulated by a tub of water in the milk room, Smith's swing stancheons, and a manure gutter in rear of cows. The labor of ventilation, watering, feeding and cleaning the stables is reduced to a minimum. Manure is dropped under the stable. The main barn is packed full of hay annually. It also contains stables for six horses, bedding material for cows and feed. A circular silo, 40 feet in diameter and high to hold 150 tons, will be built this summer, to open into the main barn. Last winter's cow ration consisted of ensilage, hay, oat fodder, corn fodder and corn meal, gluten meal and bran, all except gluten and bran being raised on the farm.

MODEL DAIRY BARN.

On this 125-acre farm, of which ten are in woodland, 60 in pasture and 55 in thorough cultivation, things are made to move all the time. The six horses are kept busy at work except during winter, and three men are employed all the time, others as needed. Milk is the main crop being sold direct to consumers in the neighboring cities.—Orange Judd Farmer.

HOW TO KEEP ONIONS.

They Must Be Handled Quite as Carefully as Apples.

Half the secret of keeping onions well is in housing them in a perfectly dry, sound condition. If to be sold before cold weather, keep in any dry place with plenty of air; a loose floor where air can pass up through them is best. For winter use, keep at a low temperature; if kept from actual freezing there is no danger of the temperature being too low. They must be kept dry, but if they become frozen they should not be handled, merely covered and kept in the dark until the frost gradually leaves them. It is not the freezing which does the mischief, but moving them when frozen, and repeated thawing and withdrawing of frost. Wherever the essential conditions prevail of uniformly low, dry temperature, absence of light and not too severe frost, they may be safely stored for winter. Moisture and heating in bulk should be guarded against. To avoid gathering moisture and heating, the bulbs should not be over two feet deep, better less. If too warm they grow and rot.

For winter storage, place them in a building with tight floors under which the frost cannot get. On such a floor place scantling, upon which lay narrow boards one-half inch apart. Upon this drying floor build up a false partition one foot within the outside walls. Thus arranged, they have a free circulation of air all around and under them. When the temperature sinks to 20 degrees it is well to fill in the space with straw to stop the circulation of the cold air. They can be put in bins of this structure, from two to three feet deep. Cover with hay or cornstalks sufficiently to protect them. Always handle them as carefully as apples, as even slight bruises cause them to mold or rot.—N. E. Farmer.

HORTICULTURAL DOTS.

Too many varieties of any kind of fruit are usually not as profitable as fewer ones.

Try growing the sugar beet next season if you wish to, but build no castles in the air.

Plum trees are best planted when two years old, and the rows had better run north and south.

A squash vine that is badly infested with the squash vine borer should be pulled up and burned.

People around Chicago, even on high-priced land, make money by turning cabbage into sauerkraut.

Carrots make splendid stock feed; ought to be grown on every farm, unless the farm has ensilage.

A writer says that the use of paris green for cabbage worms is very dangerous, and we think so, too.

Mulch the rose bushes with barnyard manure after the first freezing. Do the same with the grape vine.

Burn up the leaves that fall in the door yard or throw them in the barnyard. Don't winter-protect insects.

Lay the grape vine on the ground at the beginning of winter, and if it is a tender variety furnish protection.

Unfermented grape juice is, we think, greatly overrated as a nourishing drink, but there is a steady market for it.—Western Plowman.

Thin Cream from Cows.

It does not pay to let cows get very thin in flesh, for if they do both the amount and quality of their milk will be impaired for the ensuing year. An old farmer once said that when grain, and especially corn, was plenty and cheap he could always look for a profitable butter yield from his dairy. There is such a thing as feeding too heavily with corn, thus fattening the cow and decreasing her milk yield. No good farmer is likely to make this mistake. There are very few herds of cows which cannot profitably be fed much more grain than they now receive. It is for this reason that we urge all farmers to grow corn for home feeding. It will be fed much more freely if grown on the farm than if it has to be purchased. —American Cultivator.

HIS CREDULOUS WIFE.

Why He Taught Her to Believe His Tough Stories.

"Mary," said Mr. Bancks to his wife, as he went out with his friend after supper, "if I were you I wouldn't let the children play out much later."

"Why, John, it's not going to rain, is it?" asked Mrs. Bancks.

"No. But this is the season of the year when the mountain lion and the bald eagle are about, and they might carry the children off."

"That's so," said his wife, earnestly. "I read only yesterday of a case of a child that was carried off by an eagle, but that was in Italy."

"It doesn't make any difference where it happened—it might just as well have been here. Eagles fly too high for the naked eye to discern them until they swoop down, and then it is too late."

Mrs. Bancks went to the door and yelled for the children, and Mr. Bancks walked on with his friend, who inquired:

"You don't really believe in those yarns about eagles and mountain lions, do you?"

"No. But my wife does. All summer I have had the sea serpent as an illustration, but it's getting too late in the season for that. So I have fallen back on the other part of the menagerie."

"But what is your object? Why do you want her to believe in such stuff?"

"I'll tell you if you'll promise not to give it away. As long as my wife believes those stories she'll believe mine when I'm detained in town until the cars have stopped running. See?"—Chicago Times-Herald.

Seen from the Elevated Road.

Riding on the elevated road gives one an insight into the different modes of existence of the inhabitants along the line. Here are some things the writer caught a passing glimpse of one day recently:

A woman cleaning windows and her careful and fearful spouse seated on the floor holding on to her feet to prevent her falling to the street below.

A man shaving himself, while a little boy held a highly polished dishpan, which was officiating as a mirror.

Two babies asleep on a fire escape, while their mother was chasing linen up and down a washboard.

A new colony of colored folk in the once fashionable brownstone front quarter of Fifty-third street, between Sixth and Ninth avenues.

A man and woman, evidently play-actors, thrusting at each other with foils.

A woman learning to ride the wheel on a "bike" suspended in her boudoir.—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

A Cruel Husband.

"You ask for a divorce on the ground of cruelty, do you, madam?" asked the judge.

"Yes, your honor," replied the fair plaintiff.

"Do you mean to say that your husband has used bodily violence toward you?"

"Oh, no, sir. He never struck me, but—"

Here the applicant's voice broke as she thought of the indignity, and she sobbed bitterly.

"But what, madam?" asked the judge, kindly. "Tell me what your husband did."

"Why, judge, once he spoke real cross to dear Fido."

And the tender-hearted woman burst into a fresh torrent of tears.—Pittsburgh Chronicle-Telegraph.

"Alaska," Land of Gold and Glacier.

This is the most valuable publication yet issued by any railway company descriptive of our vast northwestern territory. The maps show each day's trip between Seattle, Sitka, Juneau, Dyea and the Glaciers, and of the Yukon gold fields. BUFFALO GAZETTE

DELANO, FRIDAY, OCT. 29, 1897.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE VILLAGE OF DELANO.

DELANO DIARY

—Call on John Brandser for a nobby suit for Thanksgiving Day.

—Dr. Shrader, of Watertown, has got moved into his new house; the finest in the village.

—The Billings restaurant fed 99 people on Fair Day and is wondering what became of the other.

—William C. Lewis has had his residence painted. It now presents rather a pretty appearance on top of the knoll.

—Forrest Gent, at Rockford station, while cleaning a sickle bar, cut his finger badly. He came to Delano for repairs.

—The Delano and Watertown Telephone company seem about to be swallowed up by a bigger concern. Corporation greed is a terrible thing —The Delano Round Elevator shipped from Aug. 1, 1896, to Aug. 1, 1897, 104 carloads of wheat, and 23 of rye. Since Aug. 1, 1897, of wheat 29 cars, and of rye, 1 car.

—Although the weather has been uncommonly fine for this climate and season, people are putting up storm doors, and nailing up cracks in the barns, and prepairing for winter. 'Tis well.

—Frank Speckel contemplates starting up in the butcher business at Watertown, having severed his connection with Frank Cramer. Mr. Cramer will have the services of Mr. Cook in the future.

—When we read of the snow storms and blizzards of Colorado, Kansas, Nebraska, and other free silver states, and behold the beautiful Indian summer weather of Minnesota, we are led to think "There is no place like home."

—The Typhoid Fever patients in this neighborhood are mostly reported as recovering. Several new cases have occurred. A daughter of Mr. Kittock, George Bock, John Steward, and Claus Johnson have been added to the list of patients.

—There is talk of purchasing additional ground for the school. That would be a move in the right direction. The children have almost no play grounds now, but must needs romp over the neighbor's property. Buy them land enough to play on:

—George P. Schaffer's shelving took a squat, a few days ago, under the heavy load of drygoods and notions piled on it. It has been straightened up and fastened to the wall so that it can stand the pressure hereafter. Duke says it will not come down again.

—Some of the young men who went out threshing this fall from Delano will come out behind, financially, after adding the difference between their earnings and their doctor bills to their expense account. Several of them are having typhoid fever. Slough water, which some of the farmers still use, is not healthy for people unaccustomed to it. Every farmer should have a good well of good water.

—Andrew Reider brought news from Rockford station that on Tuesday afternoon a tramp jumped from between cars of a freight train while in motion, near the depot, and was killed. He and the depot agent went to see what it was that fell from the train, and found it was the man. They could not learn his name nor find any body to identify him. He thought the man about 25 years old; short build; small mustache.

—On Thursday night of last week about ten minutes before nine, the regular passenger train time for the evening train west, a freight train in two sections, having broke in two near the middle, went through town at a rate of speed sufficient to frighten ordinary people. A very narrow escape from a fearful wreck was that. Had the freight engine slowed up, or stopped for water the rear part of the train must have been piled up as it struck the front end on the track.

—Two days work for a team and a couple of good men would grade up the alleys between River and Third streets and R. R. Ave. and Bridge streets, and then a few loads of gravel judiciously distributed, would make life pleasant for the hundreds of people obliged to use these thoroughfares. When one has to run his buggy out into a mud hole half up to the axle tree, and drive his horses through a mass of putrid and offensive offal, before reaching the street, or have farmers get stuck when hauling hay or wood, within a few rods of their destination, it is about time that the City Fathers do a little grading.

—We are pleased to learn that at least one member of the school board has arrived at the conclusion that some kind of fire escape should be provided for the upper rooms of our six roomed school house, with one double door to get in and out at. But then he has some children of his own and he knows the danger that awaits them in case the fire alarm should be given. What a panic there would be with a couple of hundred of children shut up in a half a dozen rooms with the hallway, containing the stairs filled with smoke so no one could get out that way. The panic would not only extend to the children, the teachers and the parents but might even reach some members of the board. Build the fire escapes at once.

—Tailor Brandser is working his crew nights now. He is bound to keep up with the procession.

—Several persons from Buffalo and Rockford drove over to attend Othello, by the Sanford Dodge troupe, Friday evening.

—Martin Conzet has moved into his new purchase, the Leon Frazee house, and says he is now a full fledged Delanoite.

—Rev. McCornack, of Howard Lake preached at the Presbyterian church on Monday evening. He left an appointment for next Monday evening at 7:30. He will try to be here every week, until some arrangements are made for a regular Sunday service.

—George P. Schaffer came home from Watertown late in the evening, Sunday berore last, and while putting his horse away without a light ran against a door latch and injured his side. He didn't mind it much at first but since has been laid up with pain.

—On Monday morning at about 4 o'clock, Delano's citizens were awakened from their peaceful slumbers by the fire bell and the loud tooting of an engine which happened to be at the depot, to find a fire in the rear of the Peter Klick building on River street that had just been vacated by Charley Brunkow and which Frank Roban was going to commence repairing preparatory to moving his restaurant into. As there was no fire in the building some claim it was a case of incendaryism. It may have been set through the carelessness of some smoker throwing down the stub of a cigar or cigarette. The firemen soon had a stream on the rear end of the building and quickly subdued the flames. The crew that carried hose to the front of the building had all kinds of trouble getting a stream started and came near not being in it at all.

Personal.

Rev. Ray, of Litchfield, was in town Wednesday evening.

Rev. Mc Cornack, of Howard Lake, was a Delano visitor Monday.

Rev. J. L. Farber visited his farm near Hutchinson this week.

Rev. Nugent, of Watertown, was doing business in Delano, yesterday.

George Rupellius, of Rockford, was seen driving through town Monday.

Presiding Elder R. R. Atchison, preached in the M. E. church Sunday evening.

Dr. Jenner Chance, of the Hamline medical school is visiting Delano relatives today.

C. H. Green drove to Watertown Sunday with a load of ladies to hear Rev. Atchison preach.

Alex and Tom Gilmer came down Sunday, from Graceville, to see their father, H. A. Gilmer, who was sick.

Cal Steward and family were obliged to postpone their journey to the West on account of the sickness of their son John.

Mrs. Dr. A. C. Lewis, of Mt. Vernon, Washington, is expected in Delano Saturday morning for a few days visit with old friends.

James Sherry, wife, and two sons, from the far west are visiting friends and relatives in and about Delano. Jim says eastern Washington is a fine country and climate.

Charles H. Green, Albert Eppel, Paul Plotnik and Frank Zaun, left Friday evening for Herman to hunt. They were all home again on Sunday, but Plotnik, without even a duck.

S. W. Junken, of Buffalo, was a GAZETTE visitor early Monday morning while on business connected with the copyrighting of some books for facilitating the keeping of County Treasurer's business.

Teeth: Dr. Niven will be in Monticello Nov. 6 and 7, at Mr. Trasks. Call on him for any kind of dentistry. 5 1t.

County Cullings.

Mrs. R. D. Topping, of Waverly, has moved to Anoka.

Coolen's hardware store, at Smith Lake was robbed Tuesday night. About $400 was taken.

The Howard case set for the 25th inst., don't seem to keep the track but gets switched off at the slighest provocation. Nov. 8 is the day now set for a hearing.

The Boxell murderers so far as known, go unpunished and unknown. It is a mystery how such occurences can happen in Wright county and the perpetrators not be caught.

Several county papers are trying to prove that Editor Eaton has little brains. Yet the Senator furnishes the texts for a good share of their items, and in some cases the entire article.

The Howard Lake Herald says: A letter addressed to Frank Larabee, asking if he had refused to assist in the prosecution of Howard, was answered, that he had not refused to help.

Every man who has not secured his full citizens payers, and is entitled to them, should attend to the matter at once. Do not wait till next election. Get them when court convenes at Buffalo.

Under the present system of voting, every man should go to every primary election and aid in sending only honest men as delegates to represent them at County Cenventions, and at the County Conventions the delegates should ask for what they want, and aid in sending only good, reliable men to represent them in state conventions.

County politics. No man seems able to tell what is coming at the next election. Several prominent Republicans have been shelved by getting into office. One has a land office, Billy Culkin at Duluth. Lindsley and Lamson had been put up high and dry in post offices. The rest of the crowd don't seem to pull together at all. Perhaps Eaton will capture the chairmanship of the county Republicans, at their first meeting then the county will nominate Moses Clapp for Governor, Hon. A. Y. Eaton for Congress, and we silver folks will have another hard fight on our hands. Of course Wright county politicians wouldn't like this; only a Hobson's choice.

As for Democrats, the woods are full of them. Good men can be found in every township. Many of them have never taken a very active part in politics, for various reasons. But now that several educational campaigns have been carried on, they have been aroused; they have been led to see what our country needs most is good honest men in office. They have determined to take part in the counsels of the country, and if need be, even themselves take an honorable office and fill it honorably if the people agree with them that they are the right men for the place.

Among Our Exchanges.

The Footprints: Fractional currency is among the scarcities here now-a days and it is no uncommon occurence to see men chasing from store to store with a five or ten dollar bill for change.

Duluth Herald: Democratic candidates for the Ohio legislature at Cleveland have signed a pledge not to vote for a millionaire for United States senator. This bars out McLean, Brice, Sorg and others.

John Green, of Montrose, drove over to spend Sunday with his mother at her home in Laketown, and Monday drove over to Chaska, and made us a pleasant call.—Valley Herald.

Valley Herald: The Commercial Club of St. Paul, gave a "prosperity banquet" one evening last week. Bankers and Merchants may have plenty of money, but up this way it is scarcer than ever and collections harder to make.

Thrice-a-week World; In Nebraska Mr. Bryan leads the fight for the fusion ticket. He has been speaking twice a day, and seems entirely hopeful of a victory. The Republicans are pursuing quieter tactics, and are said to have a barrel—or at least a bag—of Eastern money to help them out.

Valley Herald: The woods are full of candidates for Governor on the republican ticket. We hope the country will combine on a good candidate, and down the combine that has dictated the nominations so long. These remarks will apply to both of the great parties.

Brainard Journal: Henry Clews, the well known New York banking and bondholding authority, says in relation to the Cuban question that "the latest symptoms from Washington are favorable," and that "the new situation means postponement." Very likely! We do not doubt that Rothschild, Henry Clews and the devil regard the present attitude of this government as exceedingly favorable.

The Footprints: Bishop McGolrick, of the Catholic diocese of Duluth, in his greetings to the State W. C. T. U., convention of Minnesota, said that religious lines and discriminations should be banished in the great fight against the liquor traffic in which the W. C. T. U., organization was taking the leading part. He attributed the selling and buying of votes at elections, largely, to intemperance, and said that as women are natural teachers of men, the time will come when they can go to to the polls and remedy the evil. His address was interspersed with vigorous applause.

Ida Grove Era, (Iowa). A newspaper in Illinois recently brought suit against forty-three men who would not pay their subscriptions, and obtained judgement in each case for the amount of each claim. Of these twenty-eight made affidavit that they owned no more than the law allowed them, thus preventing attachments. Then under the decision of the supreme court, they were arrested for petit larceny and bound over in the sum of $300 each. All but six gave bonds. The new postal law makes it larceny to take a paper and refuse to pay for it.

Pioneer Press: The "preliminary examination" of a person accused of crime, and about to be committed or bound over to await formal trial, often has a most important bearing on the result of the trial. It seems as if there if anywhere the accused should be permitted to have the benefit of counsel. Hence the forcible ejection of Lawyer Scoval from the mayor's office at Camden, N. J., where his client was undergoing a preliminary examination on a charge of murder, has about it a savor of the inquisition and the star chamber entirely repugnant to American nostrils.

"DEATH IN THE (INK) POT."

A German professor has announced his discovery of the presence of a deadly bacillus in writing ink.—Daily Papers.

A bacillus in ink? We believe it; full long we have noted its might.
A bacillus in ink? Past all question the German professor is right.
For years we've had cause to suspect it, for proofs in a numberless host
From every point of the compass have daily been brought up by post.
And that 'tis a deadly bacillus 'tis not at all hard to believe
When we glance through the large correspondence which we are condemned to receive:
'Tis a direly dreadful bacillus, producing of cases a swarm,
In which cacoethes scribendi assumes its most virulent form.
A'ack! There are few that escape it who once dip their pens in the ink
In order to send us a letter which purports to say what they think.
For facts thereupon grow distorted, and argument looses its strength,
When spread over pages of foolscap at wholly inordinate length.

ROBERT P. PORTER in Truth.

JUST at present the Globe is squeezing the State's Prison Lemon quite hard.

HON. J. H. MANCHESTER, of the Lake Benton News is dead. We had but a slight acquaintance with him. But those who knew him speak only in the highest praise of his life.

JUDGE HOLLAND, at Brainerd, rendered his decision against the rail roads and in favor of the legality of the Anderson law, taxing unused railroad lands. The United States Supreme Court will now have a chance at it.

THE St. Paul Globe has stirred up quite a hornet's nest in its attack on the State Prisons officials. It claims that there is too much cruelty, altogether used by some of those having prisoners in charge. Warden Wolter denies the charges.

HENRY GEORGE, candidate for Mayor of Greater New York died suddenly Friday morning, at his hotel, after a hard days work campaigning. His son, Henry George, Jr. was placed on the ticket in his father's stead by the Jeffersonian Democracy.

OUR Republican friends claim that it was apathy that prevented them from getting more voters out. Apathy on the part of voters in a great country like this where every man's vote counts for just as much as any other man's vote is a terrible thing. The don't care how election goes fellows, are the ruination of any country, where they are in sufficient numbers to affect the result. There is usually a reason for this disinterestedness on the part of voters in any party, and from the claims recently made, the Republicans must father the cause in this election.

FROM the tone of the country press C. K. Davis will have a decidedly up hill job in succeeding himself as Senator next fall. Should the fight grow warm enough among Republican aspirants for Seatorial honors possibly it will result as in the case of the dog, that in crossing the stream saw his shadow with the piece of meat in his mouth. A combination of free silver forces may result in electing an opposition legislature and another man may find his way to Washington to aid in shaping our nations laws. Of what particular difference is it, any way, who represents Minnesota in the United States Senate, so he is competent, and honest and a worker. We want wise and just laws for our country. The country today needs patriotism more than party spirit. The cringing and crawling politician, seeking self aggrandizement, and party power is not the man to whom people pin their hopes of good government in this enlightened age.

Men who will work for all good laws, and against all bad ones, regardless of the party whip, are in demand all along the line.

CUBA don't want autonomy as offered by Spain. In a proclamation by the Cuban Government the following occurs: "After our best chiefs and 150,000 persons have been wantonly assassinated by Wyler we will not offend their memory by surrendering to autonomy." They don't propose to accept autonomy "even in the ample form enjoyed by Canada and the Australian colonies."

Since they have been held off so long and have about ended the dreadful war, they should have about as good as they ask for. There is no use in leaving things in shape for another war right away.

GREATER NEW YORK has shown to the world that people of this country do not believe in royal decent. In refusing to cast their votes for Henry George, Jr., after the death of his father, whose place on the ticket, for Mayor, he took, they showed that it was the individual they were after. They believed Henry George was honest, fearless, and would do justice fearlessly, hence he was their choice. But when Henry George, Jr. was put in his dead fathers place they felt differently. He was unknown to most of them; untried in politics and they would not support him. Sons in all cases are not the equals of their fathers.

Henry George, Jr. has the chance to become one of the leaders in this country. Everybody now knows of him. If he has the agressiveness of his father and will use his talents in proper channels he may acquire the place in the hearts of his countrymen lately vacated by his illustrious sire. But, if when elevated to public gaze, as he has so suddenly been, he does not, by careful and wise moves, make the best use of his opportunities, he will again lapse into the general herd of humanity and may be scarcely heard of again. It depends largely on himself.

Suicide Epidemic.

Suicide has become and epidemic in many parts of this country. People grown tired of life take themselves out of existence. Go to meet their God. It shows a weakness. It shows that they are too cowardly to fight out an existence here. Did they but strive to do good to others instead of seeking alone personal happiness would they not be more contented? Drink, directly or indirectly, drives many unfortunates to untimely deaths. Drink unfits men for ordinary work. They loose their jobs; their families are reduced to penury; themselves to want. They drink to drown trouble; and end in a suicide's grave. Is this the end? Do they not have to face a just God? Do they not have to suffer the penalties of self murderers? Would it not be better for such men to keep sober? Would not they feel more contented to live if they would saw wood from door to door for poor suffering women and children; or sick and afflicted people; even though they got only a scanty living for it, than to take themselves out of the world? Do they not think their example would be better if they worked for the good of their fellow men instead of shirked life's duties?

Last week, St. Paul papers say, two men jumped from the high bridge, 200 feet to the water below, and were killed. One was born in St. Paul, the other in Germany. They drank together and suicided together. One took whiskey the other drank beer; both committed suicide. What a lesson. And still boys and men are following in their footsteps, drinking themselves into drunkard's, suicide's graves. Families are growing up in ignorance and want, because of the lack of care of the head of the family. What an example for a man to leave his children; to leave his friends and neighbors. And yet is it any less suicide to drink until disease is brought on to end one's days, than to fill up and jump into the river? Children are numbered with the suicides. Why do those of tender years, and a life of usefulness before them, end their days by their own hands? Is there not a predisposing cause? Are not they the offspring of minds weakened by disease brought on by the drink habit? Are they not ashamed of their parentage? Do they not fear to face the world as children of old drunkards? This should not be. Children are not to blame themselves for what they can not help. They should act well their part in life. Do what they find to do. They should make the most of life as they find it. They should endeavor to leave the world better for their having lived in it. Trusting in their Heavenly Father they should live as long as they can and do all the good they can.

Not Appreciated.

"Col. Watterson and some dozen of others voted for sound money and pure liquor in Kentucky yesterday.—Dispatch.

"The St. Paul Globe finds unaccountable comfort in the election returns, considering that the National democratic candidates came in a very bad third wherever there were any running,,,--Dispatch.

The St. Paul Dispatch evidently don't appreciate that had the National Democrats not helped them defeat Bryan, Mc Kinley might not now be President. The National Democrats don't seem to belong anywhere. They are neither Democrat or Republican, but want free trade and gold money.

WASHINGTON LETTER.

(From our Regular Correspondent.)

WASHINGTON, D. C. Oct. 23, 1897.

Mr. McKinley and his administration have nobody but themselves to blame for many persons regarding their now-you-see-it, now-you-don't-see-it, manipulation of the Union Pacific Railroad question as a thimble-rigging game in which the people have been bunco'ed. First the sale of the road was to be postponed and then it wasn't. Those who have carefully studied this matter say that the administration deserves no credit for the raise of $3,000,000 in the bid for the reorganization committe for the property, that it was a question with the reorganization committee of loosing all the swag or of giving up enough of it to hush the public clamor which had compelled the announcement that the government would ask the court to postpone the sale of the road for six weeks, in order to give intending competing bidders a chance, and that Mr. McKinley was in too great a hurry to withdraw the application for a postponement of the sale. No interest could possibly have suffered by the postponement of the sale, and the creditors, other than the government, of the road might have been greatly benefitted. Members of the administration may throw boquets at each other over this business, as they try to make the country believe that they accomplished something which deserves praise, but the country has a way of getting at the inside of things, and it will do so in this case.

There must be something about the New York city campaign which provokes men to profanity. Secretary Bliss is not ordinarily a profane man, but he has been using ugly cuss words in public to emphasize his denial of the charge that funds of the Republican National Committee, of which he is Treasurer, were being used in behalf of Gen. Tracy, the Platt-McKinley candidate for Mayor of greater New York. Mr. Bliss should read his Shakespeare, and ponder his comments upon the fellow who protested too much.

The screws have never been turned upon Ohio republicans employed in the government departments harder than during the present week. Many of them having pleaded poverty as an excuse for not going home to vote, Boss Hanna sent a big batch of rail road tickets—something like 500—from Washington to Columbus, Ohio, and return, to his Washington agent, and these tickets have been placed in the hands of those Ohio republicans who had claimed to be too poor to buy their own railroad tickets, and each of them has been informed that by calling at the Hanna headquarters in Columbus in person he can secure round trip free transportation from that city to his voting place in the State. And that isn't all; every one of these men has been given a hint that it will be very unwise for him not to go home and cast his vote for the Hanna ticket. Nothing worse than this was ever done, even in the days when a republican candidate for President unblushingly telegraphed asking the chairman of the National Committee, "How are the departments doing?" Still, there are people who swallow all the stuff about civil service reform that emanates from Mark Hanna's administration.

The great McKinley Cuban policy, which was used at the extra session to prevent the House from taking up and adopting, as it should have done, the joint resolution which the Senate adopted, directing the recognition by this government of the belligerency of the Cubans, has, if the friends of the administration know what they are talking about, been abandoned, and Mr. McKinley will refer the whole business to Congress for solution. This seems an astounding statement to make, but it is the McKinley followers who are making it in Washington. Spain's reply to the McKinley policy, which reached Washington this week, seems to have broken the main spring of the policy, if there really ever was a definite policy, which many doubt. It is semi-officially stated that the communication from Spain will, as a result of an understanding between the two governments, be kept from both the Spanish and the American public until after it has been submitted to Congress by Mr. McKinley. Last spring Mr. McKinley said in effect to Congress: keep your hands off this question; I can handle it without your assistance, and in December he will appeal to Congress for orders as to what he shall do with it. This sort of thing would be humiliating to a sensitive man. Meanwhile everything else has been dropped and Mr. McKinley, John Sherman, Mr. Day and other prominent members of the administration have gone to Ohio to try to persuade the voters to keep their hands off Marcus Aurelius Hanna.

A Gift of the Buffalo.

A cattle-breeder in the Northwest has crossed the buffalo with the domestic cow. The astonishing result is an addition of full 50 percent. to the milk-yielding capacity of the animal.

If the practice shall bear such results generally the profit to the country will be enormous.

The annual production of milk in the United States is 5,210,000,000 gallons. Reckoning it as worth 10 cents a gallon, and addition of 50 per cent. by the cross-breeding of cattle would add no less than $260,500,000 to the annual wealth production.

By all means let our cattlemen push the buffalo experiment.--Thrice-a week World.

Bryan's View.

LINCOLN, Neb., Nov. 3 -- Mr. Bryan today gave out the following statement:

The returns are so incomplete that it is impossible to discuss yesterday's election in detail. The Republicans everywhere indorsed the Republican administration, and in view of losses sustained by them in almost every state it would seem that Republican policies are not being indorsed at the polls. The sentiment in favor of the Chicago platform shows a healthy growth throughout the country. Perhaps our opponents will now admit that silver is not dead. The attempt to secure international bimetallism has proved a failure, and it is now more apparent than ever that the people of the United States must legislate for themselves on the financial question. Free and unlimited coinage at 16 to 1 is nearer now than it was a year ago. High tariff upon a gold basis has disappointed those Republicans who looked to it for relief. Taken as a whole the returns are very encouraging. I think I voice the sentiments of Democrats, Populists and Silver Republicans when I say that the fight will be continued with even more earnestness until the gold monopoly is broken and the money trust is overthrown. The fusion forces increase their percentage in Nebraska and probably their actual majority.

--William J. Bryan.

The Battle Not Ended.

It must be acknowledged that William J. Bryan comes out of the off year contest in his own state with an indorsement that must be as gratifying to him as it is significant. It was calculated that the magnificent prosperity that has overtaken the Nebraska farmers this year would chill their devotion to the Bryan and free silver cause. Nebraska was one of the states that harvested a bumper wheat crop and marketed it at a bumper price. Her corn crop was also phenomenal. The banks of the state are said to be so overburdened with money that they are seriously talking of refusing deposits except from regular customers. The paying off of mortgages is going on rapidly, and this year will witness a marvelous reduction in the aggregate indebtedness of the people of that commonwealth.

But somehow the return of prosperity doesn't appear to have killed the silver craze. Mr. Bryan stumped the state personally, and, although it was an off year, and there was no full state ticket in the field, the fusionists rallied to his support, and won out by pluralities larger than those of last year.

If this result was intended as a vote of confidence in Mr. Bryan, it is a strong one. If it indicates that the silver agitation is to be kept up despite changed conditions then it is a warning to the sound money men that they cannot afford to indulge in lethargy and indifference. The battle of the standards will have to be fought over again, and with an enemy that has displayed wonderful recuperative power. Such a defeat as they encountered last fall ought logically to have shattered the fusion combination and destroyed Bryan's hopes of further leadership. But within a year he comes to the top again in his own state in better shape than ever, and with signs of a marked Democratic and fusion revival in other states. New York city and state are lost to the Republicans; Ohio is close, and Republican majorities are cut down in Iowa, Massachusetts and elsewhere.

These are facts which must be looked in the face. Of course Republican indifference and overconfidence are largely responsible. Enough Republicans doubtless remained away from the polls in all the states to have turned the tide the other way if they had voted. But this is just the danger that will have to be guarded against in future elections. If Republicans expect to retain their hold upon the states which they now control upon congress and upon the presidency in 1900, they will have to brace up and heal their factional quarrels.—Minneapolis Tribune.

Harmless Press.

Emperor Wilhelm should not get excited over press comments. If he lets the press have plenty of lee-way, its opinions will not injure him. As a proof sample we offer the Minneapolis Times, Donnelly's Representative and the X-Rays of Minneapolis, all of which have political opinions that render them perfectly harmless.—Annandale Advocate.

Mr. Satterlee should be a good judge of harmless papers and political opinions.

Independence Incidents.

I am reminded today is the day of the great political fight in Ohio and New York city for the ascendency to political power.

Farmers have been very busy for the last two weeks getting ready for winter as it is liable to set in any time now.

Several men have been in our town of late looking up land. It seems that the farming industry is getting more popular than in days gone by; is getting a deeper hold upon the hearts of the people.

O. W. Lundestrom and C. F. Newstrom, of Lester Prairie were doing business in our town one day last week.

The creameries in our town seem to be doing a good business. The creamery and dairy business has got quite a boom just now and hope it will not be overdone.

I have made mention several time to some of the business men of Maple Plain that Maple Plain would be a good point for some enterprising man to put in a small flour mill with a feed run. People are going from Parker Lake and from below Long Lake to Delano, to mill. This does not hurt Delano but other places might just as well have the trade.

Lutegert and the devil still unconvicted. Law seems to be one thing and justice another.

"There was a sound of revelry by night
And Belgium's capitol had gathered then"

So it will be in Greater New York tonight.

Her beauty and her chivalry—and bright
The lamps shone o'er fair women and brave men.

Mrs. Jane Mc Neal is on the sick list, also Mrs. Sam Briley.

School Dist. 102 has a new well, put down by T. Rader, of Delano.

JOHN H. MCGARY

Kellar's Sugar Company.

Senator Henry Kellar of Sauk Rapids, who returned yesterday from Nebraska, where he went to observe the manufacture of sugar from a lot of beets sent there by him, stated that a deal has been closed with German capitalists in New York to put $500,000 into his beet sugar manufacturing company, and that the plant will be located at Minneapolis at once, if certain concessions are made by the rail roads.—Pioneer Press.

Republicans Loose.

The late election shows that people are not all protective Republicans yet.

Democrats win in New York. The state elected Parker Chief Justice and claim the Legislature.

Greater New York elected Van Wyck, Tammany Democrat, Mayor, by 86,668 plurality.

Maryland, which was captured last election has swung back into line fo Democracy.

Virginia went Democratic by a large majority.

Nebraska, Bryan's home state went from 10,000 to 25,000 for the Free Silver candidates. Fusion was affected and Bryanism endorsed nicely.

Iowa which used to be so tremendously Republican, has been cut down to a mere 17,000 plurality for Shaw, Republican Governor. Legislature in doubt.

Ohio, the home of President McKinley, Secretary of the State, Sherman, and of Foraker and of Mark Hanna is said to have turned down the gold standard and high protective tariff crowd in good shape; leaving other parts of the ticket for state officers in doubt.

Massachusetts is still for gold and protection, and elected Gov. Wolcott.

South Dakota seems to favor the Republicans slightly.

On the whole, it looks as if the Republicans had lost considerable since last voting time, and the effect will be to make them loose still more next time.

The following cities chose Democratic Mayors: Greater New York, Detroit, Buffalo, Albany, Binghamton, Newport, Providence, Rochester and Louisville.

In Pennsylvania, the Prohibition candidate for State Treasurer, "the fighting parson" seems to have proven too big a swallow for his Republican opponent and the chances are that he is elected.

A Havana correspondent of a paper at Barcelona, Spain, states that the killed and wounded of the Spanish army in Cuba since the beginning of the present insurrection, less than three years ago, aggregate between 65,000 and 70,000 men. This number is about one-third of all the forces sent to the island.

And now it appears that some designing rascal has been swindling Indiana farmers by charging exorbitant prices for kernels from an ear of corn of mammoth size, which has been manufactured by neatly joining together several sections of different cobs. As the swindle already has been perpetrated and the swindler is at large and unknown, nothing remains to be done by the victims except to acknowledge the corn.

The richest town in the United States is Brookline, near Boston. Its population is 17,000 and valuation $60,000,000, yet it is governed through the typical New England town meeting. It has a public library containing 45,000 volumes, a $300,000 high school, a $40,000 free bathing establishment, and spends $100,000 a year on its parks and well-shaded streets. Boston would gladly annex it, but Brookline prefers to go on as it is.

January 1 next is the date fixed by federal law when the interstate commerce roads must have their trains equipped with automatic couplers and train brakes. Nearly all the passenger cars have been brought within this provision—some 32,334 out of a total of 33,326 in the country at date of last report being equipped with automatic couplers and 32,965 with train-brake appliances. But hardly a third of the freight cars have as yet come under the law, and the roads are now petitioning for an extension of the time from one to ten years.

The death of Admiral John Lorimer Worden in Washington recalls memories of one of the most thrilling as well as one of the most important events of the war. It was Admiral Worden, then a lieutenant, who commanded Ericsson's ridiculed Monitor when that epoch-making craft defeated the Merrimac below Newport News. He was severely wounded in that encounter and during the rest of the war he had charge of ironclad building in New York. Admiral Worden was almost the last of the heroes of the great conflict.

That the governments of the world are not looking for the millennium of universal peace for some years is shown by the fact that in the British shipyards at the present time no fewer than 87 war vessels, with an aggregate displacement of 318,612 tons, are building. Of these 34 will go to foreign countries to be employed some day, perhaps, against Great Britain. Yet these great engines of destruction are likely to be made worse than useless at any time by the introduction of some new invention which will revolutionize sea power as completely as John Ericsson revolutionized it with the Monitor.

"Time at last sets all things even." "Tom" Moore, the noted poet, visited the United States in 1804; didn't like the country, President Jefferson and the people generally; and on his return to England published sundry verses expressive of his anti-Americanism. Nearly a century has passed, but Moore's bitter diatribes have not been forgotten by the descendants of their victims; and, because of his contumelius treatment of a president of the United States, his name has been omitted from the roll of poets inscribed on the walls of the magnificent new congressional library.

Modern ingenuity is continually discovering ways in which to utilize waste products, and hundreds of such things that a few years ago were thrown away are now a source of profit. The latest discovery of this kind is that locomotive sparks make cheap and excellent fuel. The sparks, which are really half-burned cinders, are collected in the spark-arresters now in use on eastern railway engines, and are consumed in furnaces provided with a special draft. It has been found by the New Haven Railway company that two tons of sparks at 72 cents per ton equal a ton of coal at three dollars.

HENRY GEORGE IS DEAD

Noted Single-Tax Advocate Stricken with Apoplexy.

Was Candidate of the Thomas Jefferson Democracy for Mayor of Greater New York—His Son Named in His Stead.

New York, Oct. 30.—Henry George, author of "Progress and Poverty," and candidate of the Thomas Jefferson democracy for mayor of New York, died at 4:50 o'clock Friday morning in the Union Square hotel of cerebral apoplexy. In his great Cooper Union speech accepting the nomination for mayor less than a month ago, he said: "I'll make this race if it costs me my life. This is a call to duty and as a good citizen I have no right to disregard it on account of mere personal consideration." To-day the cheers of the workers have suddenly been changed to sighs, for, true to his word, Henry George, the apostle of the rights of men, died as he wished to die—in harness fighting for the cause—toward the close of the greatest municipal political contest the world has ever seen.

HENRY GEORGE.

The End Peaceful.

The end was peaceful and he died without pain. This man of mighty brain and undaunted courage was physically frail and the strain of an exciting campaign requiring speech-making at points many miles apart, night after night, was more than nature could stand. He kept it up to the end, and only a few hours before the dread messenger cried halt, Henry George had addressed enthusiastic audiences in three of the towns of the borough of Queens and a still larger assemblage in an uptown hall here.

Henry George's Career.

Henry George was born on September 2, 1839. He received a common school education and then went into a counting room. He was also a sailor and afterwards learned the printers' trade. In 1858 he reached California, where he worked at the printer's case until 1866, when he became a reporter and afterwards editor, working at different times on the San Francisco Times and Post.

He returned to New York in 1880 and went to England and Ireland the following year, where he was twice arrested as a suspect, but afterwards released when his identity became established. Mr. George is best known to the world at large through his writings upon economic questions, notably his work entitled "Progress and Poverty," published in 1879. His other works are: "Our Land and Land Policy," 1871; "Irish Land Question," 1881; "Social Problems," 1883; "Property in Land," a controversy with the duke of Argyle, 1884; "The Condition of Labor," an open letter to Pope Leo XIII., 1891, and "A Perplexed Philosopher" (Herbert Spencer), 1892.

In 1886 Mr. George was nominated by the united labor party for mayor of New York, polling 68,000 votes against 90,000 for Abram S. Hewitt, the democratic nominee, and 60,000 for Theodore Roosevelt, now assistant secretary of the navy, republican.

Big Show Closed.

Nashville, Tenn., Nov. 1.—The Tennessee Centennial exposition closed at midnight Saturday, the event being heralded by the ringing of the chimes in the Auditorium, the blowing of whistles, the booming of cannon and the sounding of horns in the hands of young and old. The total attendance at the exposition since the opening on the first day of last May is estimated at 1,750,000. President Thomas officially announced Saturday night that the exposition will pay out dollar for dollar, and this promptly. The largest day of the exposition was President J. W. Thomas day, October 28. The estimate of attendance by the chief of the bureau of promotion and publicity was 2,000,000, and his limit would have been surely reached but for the senseless yellow fever scare. Not a single casualty has occurred at the exposition during the six months of its existence. The order maintained at the exposition has been simply magnificent.

Firm Asks for Receiver.

Chicago, Nov. 1.—The Werner company, publishers, with offices and plant at Akron, O., and this city, went into the hands of a receiver Saturday. Richard P. Marvon has been appointed. The action was taken at the instance of Paul E. Werner, president, and George T. Rowland, superintendent of the Akron plant, and it is said to be designed to protect the company as well as the creditors. The liabilities are given as $800,000 and the assets at $4,000,000, the company being capitalized for $3,500,000. Some time ago the company negotiated a loan for $1,000,000, to be paid in installments. Nearly $800,000 of that is still unpaid, and $50,000 of that amount is now due. The other payments are to be made in installments of $200,000 in November, December and January, and $100,000 in February.

The Weather Bureau.

Washington, Oct. 29.—Chief Moore, of the United States weather bureau, in his annual report to Secretary Wilson, calls for the appropriation of $1,044,050 for the fiscal year and says this will admit of the establishment and equipment of new stations in important centers of population. Establishment of stations in the southwestern part of the country, embracing Nevada, Utah, Arizona, New Mexico and southern California, where storms frequently originate, is urged. Twenty experimental kite-flying stations are contemplated this year and confidence in the great value of the ultimate result is expressed.

Heavy Excess of Expenditures.

Washington, Nov. 2.—The comparative statement of the receipts and expenditures of the United States shows that the total receipts for the month of October were $24,391,415 and the expenditures $33,701,512, making the excess of expenditures over receipts for the month, $9,310,097, and for the four months of the present fiscal year, $38,009,010.

UNION PACIFIC ROAD SOLD.

Government Will Receive $58,065,748.40—Only One Bid Made.

Omaha, Neb., Nov. 2.—The interest of the United States government in the Union Pacific railroad terminated at 11:45 o'clock Monday morning when, at the foreclosure sale of the mortgage held by the United States, the road was purchased by the committee of eastern capitalists formed for its reorganization. The full amount accruing to the United States from the sale cannot be given exactly, but it is estimated to be $58,065,748.40. It was impossible to determine the full amount at the time of sale, for the reason that the monthly statement made by the secretary of the treasury to the management of the Union Pacific on the first of every month was not available Monday, and it was found necessary to estimate some items, although it is admitted by both sides that the estimates are approximately correct. The amount due to the government is made up as follows:

Principal of debt, $27,236,512; interest paid by the government up to September 30, 1897, $30,830,886.37; interest accrued by September 30 and still unpaid, $296,147.68; interest accrued in October, $95,382.55; total due the government, $58,448,928.45. Against this are the following credits: Cash and bonds in sinking funds, $18,182,466.53; estimated credits for the week ended September 30 and for the month of October, including government earnings and the interest on bonds in the sinking fund, amount not yet credited, $384,180.21; total credit, $18,565,640.74; total debt of the railroad to the government, $58,448,928.61; total credit of railroad with government, $18,565,646.74; balance and amount bid by reorganization committee, $39,883,281.80. The sinking fund bonds sold for $13,645,250.89; total bids by reorganization committee, $53,528,532.76.

After the sale was concluded, Gen. Cowin, as the representative of the government, was assured by the committee that if the amounts were not accurately figured or should differ from the figures given above, whatever may be lacking will be paid by the committee and will in no way be allowed to interfere with the confirmation of the sale. There was no opposition to the committee, and no bids were offered against them.

Under the terms of sale, the purchasers have 90 days in which to pay over the full amount of the purchase money, and that part of the transaction will be carried out in New York in the future. The government has now the sinking fund of the road and the amount of the guarantee check put up by the reorganization committee. This is just about ten per cent. of the full purchase price of the road.

GEN. BLANCO IN COMMAND.

Reaches Havana and Takes Oath of Fidelity to Spain.

Havana, Nov. 2.—On the arrival of Gen. Blanco, the new captain general, the vessels in the harbor and the streets were generally decorated. The wharves were crowded with people, and the troops and volunteers lined the thoroughfares from the landing stage to the palace.

When Marshal Blanco arrived at the palace he was met by the civil and military authorities and by commissioners representing the various political parties, and then proceeded to the hall of conference, where, in accordance with the ritual and ceremonies customary on such occasions, he took the oath of fidelity to Spain.

There is no reference to autonomy in either of Gen. Blanco's recent proclamations, and both have produced a bad effect among all sympathizers with the insurgents. Marshal Blanco, when formally assuming his new functions at the palace, said to the deputations of the conservative autonomist and reformist parties that in order to obtain peace through the new policy it would be necessary for all political parties to unite. To the military deputations he said he would answer war by war, repeating the substance of his proclamation in that respect. He made no overtures of autonomy, nor did he express any preference for any of the Cuban political parties.

Woman's Temple Wins.

Buffalo, N. Y., Nov. 2.—From two o'clock Monday afternoon until 7:30 o'clock the delegates of the National W. C. T. U. convention held continuous session behind closed doors at the Church of Our Father and discussed with much warmth the report of Mrs. Matilda B. Carse on the Chicago Temple. Mrs. Sarah G. Johnson, financial secretary of the Temple, presented her report, of which the following is an abstract. Balance on hand November 1, 1896, $23,129.85; amounts received in gifts November 1, 1896, to October 18, 1897, $14,810.69; interest, $23.89; notes, $500; total, $38,464.43; various expenditures, $9,703.38. Mrs. Carse's report was then adopted. Then came a resolution offered originally by Mrs. Marion H. Dunham, of Iowa, pledging support in the work of raising the money. After passing through a series of amendments and codifications it was adopted as follows:

"That in view of the pledge of support to our leader and from the fact that Mrs. Carse has $123,000 pledged, with promises of $200,000, we pledge our support and cooperation to secure $300,000, to be given to Miss Dow as custodian, to hold until she shall have enough money to retire the bonds."

The Public Debt.

Washington, Nov. 2.—The monthly statement of the public debt shows that at the close of business on October 30, 1897, the debt, less cash in the treasury, amounted to $1,020,563,901, an increase for the month of $8,441,188. This increase is principally accounted for by a decrease of the amount of cash on hand. The cash in the treasury amounts to $831,669,957, against which there are demand liabilities amounting to $623,913,857, leaving the net cash balance in the treasury $207,756,099.

Show a Falling Off.

Sheffield, Nov. 2.—The returns of the export of cutlery from Sheffield to the United States show that they amounted only to $60,000 for the last quarter, as compared with $150,000 for the same period, July, August and September of 1896. This is the worst showing made for the cutlery exporters of this city for seven years past. The exports of steel, however, have increased $25,000, but the total exports of Sheffield have fallen from $500,000 to $415,000.

Great Cargo of Cotton.

New Orleans, Nov. 1.—The steamship Milwaukee sailed Sunday for Liverpool with the largest cargo of cotton, if not the largest general cargo, ever floated. It consisted of 23,850 bales of cotton, 30,200 bushels of grain, 38,818 pieces of staves, 2,300 oars. Her entire cargo was equal to 26,000 bales of cotton. It would take 500 freight cars to carry her cargo, and the train would measure 3¼ miles in length.

TAMMANY TRIUMPHANT.

Van Wyck Elected First Mayor of Greater New York.

New York State Goes Democratic. Ohio Elects a Republican Governor With the Legislature Close. Iowa Goes Republican.

New York, Nov. 2.—Tammany's victory in the first municipal election in Greater New York is a sweeping one. The only question remaining to be settled at 11 o'clock is the one of the plurality by which the entire ticket headed by Robert A. Van Wyck has carried the gigantic municipality. It can scarcely be less than 60,000 and may be larger than that. Van Wyck has polled a vote which falls possibly 40,000 under the combined votes of General Tracy, Republican, and Seth Low, Citizens' Union.

The indications are the Democrats have a small majority of the state assembly. In the greater city it is estimated from very meager returns that the representation will be 51 Democrats and 10 Republicans, while in the upper part of the state there are said to have been changes from Republicans to Democrats in 20 districts. In the last assembly the Republicans had a majority of 78. Conceding all that is claimed by the Republicans the next house will have 10 Democratic majority. State senators were not elected this year. Other estimates give a Republican majority in the assembly of 3.

Estimates of the majority of Parker (Dem.) for chief judge of the court of appeals range all the way from 35,000 to 50,000.

Ohio.

Columbus, Ohio, Nov. 2.—The result in Ohio is so close that it may require the official count to determine the result, especially on the political complexion of the legislature. The Republicans and Democrats are both claiming the state and the legislature with such persistence that it will require the official count at last to get one or the other to concede defeat. Incomplete returns indicate the election of the Republican state ticket by from 10,000 to 12,000, but the result on the legislature is so close that no definite figures can be given on it tonight.

The Democrats claim confidently a majority in both branches of the legislature, but give no figures on the number of state senators and representatives. The Republicans claim 54 representatives and 17 senators sure, or 71 votes on join ballot, 73 being necessary to elect a senator.

Nebraska.

Lincoln, Neb., Nov. 2.—Nebraska today renewed her allegiance to fusion by electing the three candidates on that ticket by pluralities ranging from 10,000 to 25,000. Nothing like complete returns have been received or will be received tonight, but enough are in to measure the result and indicate a greater fusion victory than in the presidential year.

Iowa Republican.

Des Moines, Iowa, Nov. 2.—Returns from about one-fourth of the 2,004 precincts in the state show that the Republican plurality will be about 17,000. These returns are from all parts of the state, including both city and country precincts, and it is believed that the ratio established thereby will be substantially maintained. The ratio of Democratic gain has been at about 23 to a precinct for nearly 500 precincts. That will give the Democrats a net gain in the state of about 47,000. The legislative ticket returns are slow in coming in. The best estimates obtainable here give to the senate 36 Republicans, 12 Democrats and two districts in doubt. Of the members of the house probably 65 out of 100 will be Republican, giving them a safe working majority.

Maryland.

Baltimore, Nov. 2.—The Republicans have elected their municipal ticket in Baltimore by majorities ranging from 4,000 to 6,000, but the state ticket is in doubt, and there is some reason for believeing that the Democrats have carried the legislature and that United States Senator Gorman may succeed himself.

Massachusetts.

Boston, Mass., Nov. 2.—Corrected returns from 348 cities and towns in the state, including the complete vote of Boston, give Everett 14,046; Williams 79,123; Wolcott 164,196. The same cities and towns last year gave Prince 14,248; Williams 103,457; Wolcott 255,767.

But five small towns aggregating less than 400 votes, are necessary to complete the vote of the state. On the basis of last year's vote in these towns, the total will be: Everett, 14,064; Williams, 69,116; Wolcott, 164,544. This gives Wolcott a plurality of 85,358 and the final figures will be within a few votes of this.

South Dakota.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Nov. 2.—Indications are that the republicans have won in South Dakota. Smith (rep) is elected judge in the first district.

The republcans have elected judges in the second, fourth, fifth and sixth districts.

Manna.

In Australia, Tropical Asia and Africa true manna is found on a kind of blue grass. It appears in masses as large as a marble on the nodes of the stems. Nearly three parts consist of mannite, which, though sweet, is not sugar. The manna also contains a ferment which has power to decompose cane sugar without evolving carbonic acid or any kind of gas.

HER SCOLDING LOCKS.

She Tried to Oblige a Friend But She Got Angry About It.

Some people are absolutely devoid of tact. One of these is a youthful matron who, wishing to make her very dearest friend—another young matron—a birthday present, decided on the purchase of a handsome pair of shell side combs.

Nothing could have been more appropriate for the blonde tresses of her friend, and the giver felt much pleased with her selection when she went to call on her and give her the pretty ornaments.

"I thought you would like them," she said, when her friend had admired them and thanked her rapturously, "you will find them so handy to fasten up your scolding locks."

"What do you mean?" asked her friend, in a surprised tone.

"Did you never hear of scolding locks? They are the short ends of your hair that are always flying loose. They bother one so much, but side combs keep them in order, besides being very becoming ornaments."

"So you think I have scolding locks—then I must be a scold. Thanks, awfully, dear, but I don't believe I need any combs. Keep them for your own scolding outfit," and the face of the "dearest friend" clouded with anger.

"Very well, just as you like. Good-by, dear," and the donor of the combs snatched them up and carried them home, where she had a fit of hysterics. And all because she needed a little tact.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Why Some Men Are Weary.

A good many hundreds and even thousands of long-suffering husbands can bear sorrowful testimony to the fact that this is the sort of catechism the wives of their bosoms subject them to every time they put on their hats to go out in the evening:

"Where are you going?"
"Oh, I'm going out for a few minutes."
"Where?"
"Oh, nowhere in particular."
"What for?"
"Oh, nothing."
"Why do you go, then?"
"Well, I want to go, that's why."
"Do you have to go?"
"I don't know that I do."
"Why do you go, then?"
"Because."
"Because what?"
"Well, simply because."
"Going to be gone long?"
"No."
"How long?"
"I don't know."
"Anybody going with you?"
"No."
"Well, it's strange that you can't be content to stay at home a few minutes. Don't be gone long, will you?"
"No."
"See that you don't."

MRS. PETERSON'S STORY.

I have suffered with womb trouble over fifteen years. I had inflammation, enlargement and displacement of the womb.

The doctor wanted me to take treatments, but I had just begun taking Mrs. Pinkham's Compound, and my husband said I had better wait and see how much good that would do me. I was so sick when I began with her medicine, I could hardly be on my feet. I had the backache constantly, also headache, and was so dizzy. I had heart trouble, it seemed as though my heart was in my throat at times choking me. I could not walk around and I could not lie down, for then my heart would beat so fast I would feel as though I was smothering. I had to sit up in bed nights in order to breathe. I was so weak I could not do anything.

I have now taken several bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and used three packages of Sanative Wash, and can say I am perfectly cured. I do not think I could have lived long if Mrs. Pinkham's medicine had not helped me.—MRS. JOSEPH PETERSON, 513 East St., Warren, Pa.

LIFE.

Onward, like the rushing river,
Flows the current of our lives,
Bearing us to unknown portals,
Worlds unseen by mortal eyes.

Sometimes placid as the brooklet,
Murmuring gently on its way,
And as calm and full of sunshine
As the brightest summer day.

Now and then the storm clouds gather,
Gather darkly o'er our head,
Shutting out the light and brightness,
And our hearts are filled with dread.

But with courage, hope and patience,
Let us bravely wend our way,
For the shadows soon will vanish
Into bright and fairest day.

And the morning will seem brighter,
For the dark and cheerless night,
When our hearts so sad and troubled
Longed, but failed to see the light.

THE SHUTTING OF A WINDOW.

BY A. F. KALFUS.

BAL CHICO was the son of a Mexican matadore, and his early associations were not of a kind to develop a stable and law-abiding character. Bal drank because he saw everybody else drink, and red wine brought into action in Bal that courage which the matadore displayed in the arena with sagacity and prudence. Red wine does not mature wisdom, theoretical or applied, and without these, which are indeed sagacity and prudence, courage becomes but pugnacity that amuses or offends. Bal's soon became offensive, and in a brawl in an indecent quarter of his native town he had the misfortune to knife a young grandee of tastes and weaknesses similar to his own, but of influential connections. The wounded youth recovered, but political influence was sufficient to cause his assailant's removal to a penal settlement for 20 years.

Bal obtained no more red wine, but the more he weighed the offense of the knife attack, its provocation and its punishment the clearer it seemed that he was suffering out of all proportion for his transgression. The sense of foul wrong, done because it could be done, burned in upon him as if a brand-iron were held against him, ever glowing and never lifted. For months after he had discerned the immense range of this injustice he lived in a rage impedimental to speech—he became inarticulate.

Slowly his good sense came to the rescue and he became calm that he might live, grow strong of body and powerful through accumulation and meet Don Pico as master. There were men of different nationalities in the settlement, and Bal found that he absorbed words as a sponge absorbs water, and he learned Portuguese, more than one patois of his own land and the dialect of a Peruvian Indian sent from his own province a year before, whom he had saved from imminent atrocity at the hands of a vicious fellow convict. This Indian had a virtue little known to civilization—he was capable of gratitude—and the two formed a mutual attachment that the friendships of civilization may scarcely parallel and which was equaled but by their common hatred of all rulers, their own in particular. This Indian Bal knew to be a snake charmer of extraordinary accomplishments. His gift was not transferable to the younger man, nor did the latter soon discover its singularity, but in time he found that Juan's power over certain reptiles might be expressed as hypnotic. He seemed to impress his own masterfulness upon the serpents and to exert his power upon them at a distance, or to send them to perform some definite mission at a distance and return within a given time, after the habit of human subjects.

Once Bal saw Juan with his pets at recreation. No word was spoken, but Juan looked meaningly at Bal and then at the top of the wall. Bal looked and saw a lizard there, with its head a-tilt and the sun shining pink through its palpitant throat. Then something slipped away from Juan, who watched the top of the wall, as did Bal. By and by a bit of the wall moved—it seemed a bit of the wall—it moved and coiled and leaped, and the little foray was over. Then the devourer slipped back and Juan snapped his fingers and whispered to it.

"Was the lizard hypnotized, too?" Bal Chico asked himself.

This branch of his accomplishment Juan never showed the prison officials when they sent for him to exhibit for their amusement.

The weary years rolled by. "We will live; we must live. We will get even—you and me," Juan whispered to himself over and over; and he whispered it to Bal when he could, with the same imperious suggestiveness that he whispered something to his snakes.

At last Juan's 20 weary years were done; but the "man-witch" had gotten much power. Some he amused when tired of the commonplace, but the many feared him, and when he chose to wander around the settlement clad in breeches, a poncho and a viper, after he was free to go far away, none objected, and few wondered at the whims of so fantastic a being.

When Bal, a young man white-haired now, went out, old Juan awaited him at the prison gates, carrying a close-woven wicker crate, or basket, but neither extra clothing nor the usual snakes were visible, and from that day neither appeared in all that country.

Among the stupendous mountains of Peru gold may be had for the seeking, but death is for the white man who seeks it. When old Juan went back to his mountains and some old acquaintances, with another swarthy man who spoke only as he did and was his friend, their right of occupancy of hut and lands was unquestioned, as were their bartering expeditions to the nearest seaport. But Juan and Bal Chico did not always exchange their nuggets for commodities; oftener, with a wisdom learned abroad, did they demand coin. Juan had come home with his old name of Casma, and Bal Chico had assumed a new name for his new habitation, and the singular fact became known at the town bank that Casma and Chira were thrifty Indian depositors and checked against their account. Casma explained that abroad he had been called Juan Sanchez and Chira had been known as Diego Blas, and that they had made debts which demanded the checks drawn upon them by the Mexican bank of La Hamidad.

Time passed, and Casma and Chira prospered and eventually disappeared from the Peruvian mountains and seaport. Their remaining deposits had been transferred to La Hamidad, and in time the officials of La Hamidad were called upon in person by their unknown patrons, Juan Sanchez and Diego Blas, whose funds had never been drawn upon for debt. Juan Sanchez and Diego Blas were introduced by a resident of La Hamidad, a sailor on the ship that had brought them from the Peruvian port, and their money was duly paid; and a fortune it was for two men of no more expensive tastes than these who left the bank, walked away, and were seen no more in La Hamidad.

In a reputable house in the town where Bal Chico had been a youth and been forgotten lived two old men together—two gray-haired, harmless-looking old men of commonplace names that you have not heard yet, who tended their cacti and blooming vines and the green paroquets that hung among them in a great cage, concocted savory stews, and lived their simple lives largely in sight of their neighbors in the umbrageous garden behind their houses, and whose only recreation seemed to be to frequent the plaza.

From their garden they could see the rear of the house of the high and mighty Don Pico, which rang with laughter of manly sons and beautiful daughters, but the old men were, to all appearances, incurious of the doings at the great house. It was known at the plaza, where everything was known, that Don Pico's eldest son would shortly celebrate his arrival at man's estate and that the betrothal of his eldest daughter had been announced. But the day before the festivities in honor of the former occasion, the son, Don Manuelo, had sat in the plaza with Don Jose, his sister's betrothed, who had left it, it was easily proved, with a merry party of grandees, Don Manuelo waving them a merry good-by. Passers-by saw him sitting there alone, sunken down as if resting, and there he was found somewhat later, dead, evidently by strangulation. There was the usual sensation and more than the usual search for the murderer, who had left no clew.

Three months after this event, the little Innocencia, the four-year-old daughter of Don Pico, was found in a similar condition in the grounds of Don Perez, the father of the betrothed of Dona Theresa, Don Pico's eldest daughter. The residence of Don Perez was but a block from that of Don Pico. As in the case of her brother, the police found positively no clew.

These calamities caused the postponement for one year of the nuptials of Done Jose and Dona Theresa; at the end of which time they were celebrated with all churchly and social ceremonies Upon their return from the wedding journey, Don Jose and his beautiful lady took up their residence at the house of Don Perez. Scarce a fortnight had elapsed when Dona Theresa was found dead in her bed—likewise her husband's bed. Marks upon her tender neck showed that she had been garroted. All drew two conclusions: Don Manuelo and little Innocencia had been garroted and Don Jose was the criminal. His protestations, denials and anguish availed nothing. He was hurried away to prison.

An accident saved his life—the shutting of a window.

Dona Maria Theresa, the sorely afflicted wife of Don Pico, had become the victim of insomnia since these repeated family bereavements, and fancied strange noises in their apartment at night. Don Pico gave heed and listened for himself for a few nights, but heard nothing and attributed the noises to a woman's fears. But Dona Maria Theresa arose one night, because she heard the noise, and shut the window. As she approached the window, hung with vines, one of the house cats jumped from the sill to the thick vines and rustled away among them, and the lady was reassured and slept—slept all the longer and more heavily because of sleepless nights.

THE OLD MEN TALKED AND SMOKED.

When she awoke in the morning, she looked at Don Pico—but was it Don Pico beside her, that purple, swollen face with awful eyes? The lady's reason fled in that awful look, and her screams aroused the household. Investigation seemed at first to offer no clew, but at length, at the back of the top of a large frame containing an oil painting of his lady in her youth, was found a powerful snake whose bright eyes watched the window and all whose efforts were toward reaching it, which he never did, dying as non-resistant as though in a trance.

Don Jose was liberated.

The old, harmless looking men talked and smoked next evening and for many evenings behind their little house, and sometimes boiled their sardines over a coal fire and looked across at the great house of Don Pico and talked—as who did not?

Excitement was gradually repressed after the source of the mysterious deaths was indisputable. The snake had coiled about them all, but Don Pico had strength to struggle and had been bitten instead of only strangled. Some asked why a snake should discern only members of the Pico family, but none could guess the reason.

And far away in the divine beauty of a Peruvian cordillera, two old men look aloft toward the man-shunning condor—two old, brown men, grown harmless and with no uncanny companions—herd with Indian women and brown babies and drink from rude golden bowls, and go down to the sea no more.—San Francisco Argonaut.

MINNESOTA STATE NEWS

A Mystery.

The shooting at Turtle Lake, Beltrami county, is shrouded in mystery and Indian reticence. Couriers found that a game warden and a squaw had been killed. Two Indians who were wounded took to their canoes and traveled as far south as Little Cass lake, where they were met by other Indians. Their statement is that the game warden attempted to seize some muskrat skins. He was asked to leave them alone, but refused, when trouble arose. The Indians' story as to the white man being the aggressor does not bear investigation. The Indians are both wounded in the abdomen, and the bullets passed upwards, showing that the shots were fired while the warden was down.

Fast Service.

An interurban car raced over a mile of track in one minute and thirty-one seconds the other night, between Minneapolis and St. Paul. This included stops, and five watches kept the time. The car was fitted with an improved motor and a powerful brake. Cars thus equipped will be used in the rapid through service that is soon to be established between the two cities. The local cars will lie over on side tracks to allow the limited to pass. Permission to build the required sidetracks has been granted by the Minneapolis authorities, but the St. Paul council is still withholding its consent. Fare on the flyers will be 15 cents.

Plenty of Sisal.

A large purchase of sisal for the prison binder twine factory has been made by Warden Wolfer, who estimates that the new lot will give enough raw material to operate the factory until next spring. The sisal market has been high for some time, but Warden Wolfer purchased 2,000 bales at a greatly reduced figure from the prices quoted a week or two ago. Warden Wolfer figures that the state will have close on to five million pounds of binder twine on hand for next season's demand.

Beets Analized.

Returns from the state experimental farm of analysis of 12 sugar beet samples from Blue Earth county, show a range of sugar from 11.4 to 14.1 per cent and a range of purity of from 75 to 84 per cents. Farmers raising these samples failed to comply with instructions and gave but two cultivations instead of six or eight, which accounts for the comparatively small per cent of sugar, though enough in every case to make the beets a commercial success. The experiments will be continued.

A Test Sale.

The stumpage on section 36-150-36, on the ceded portion of the Red Lake reservation, has been sold by State Auditor Dunn to John Irvine of Minneapolis for $2.00 per thousand, the appraised valuation. The section contains about 2,850,000 feet of pine, and the sale was made by Mr. Dunn to test the state's right to sections 16 and 36 on the reservation. It will be cut this winter, and it is thought the United States government will bring a suit to recover from the state.

A Fatal Error.

In mistake for a deer, J. W. Benson was killed by W. P. Cook at Lake Waubana. Both are widely known residents of Richmond, Ind. Mr. Benson was 45 years of age. A rifle shot pierced his breast in the region of the heart. He died instantly.

A HELPLESS FARMER.

William Stimpson Stricken with Paralysis of His Lower Limbs —Caused by Overwork.

From the New Era, Greensburg, Ind.

Many of our readers may remember an item in this paper a year ago last fall which stated that Mr. William Stimpson, a well-to-do farmer, living near Rugby, Ind., had been stricken with paralysis of the lower limbs, and his recovery was doubtful.

The case which was an unusually severe and complicated one has at last been entirely cured, to the utmost surprise and joy of Mr. Stimpson and his family.

Mr. Stimpson was pleased to relate to a reporter the particulars regarding his case, and his subsequent recovery.

"A year ago last fall," began Mr. Stimpson, "I did a large amount of work. My hired help left me in the middle of corn cutting and I finished the fall work myself, doing an unusual large amount of work. I put up several hundred shocks of fodder, and also husked all my corn. To accomplish this I had to work early and late.

"About the first of December, as I was getting my fall work about done, I suffered a stroke of paralysis, which the physician said was brought on by excessive labor. My left limb was entirely helpless and my right limb was fast becoming so. My physician became uneasy, and after attending upon me for a week or so, he brought me a box of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, saying that he believed they would do me more good than anything which he knew of, as he had used them with great success in a case very similar to mine where all other remedies had failed. The case in question was that of L. Phillips, of Petersville.

"About the time I began taking the second box of these pills a decided change was noticed, and when I had taken two more boxes we discovered that I was actually getting well. You can probably imagine what a relief and feeling of gladness this was to me, after being confined to my bed for nearly two months. Well, I kept on taking the pills according to directions, until I had consumed nine boxes of them, which completely cured me.

"I am sound and well to-day, with not a sign of the returning affliction and can affirm that Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People did me a wonderful good and probably saved me from the grave."

To allay all doubt as to the truth of his statement, Mr. Stimpson made out the following sworn affidavit:

RUGBY, IND., Feb. 2, 1897.

"This is to certify that I do hereby swear that the foregoing statement is absolutely true. WILLIAM STIMPSON."

COUNTY OF BARTHOLOMEW, } ss.
STATE OF INDIANA, }

Sworn to and subscribed before me, a Justice of the Peace, in and for said county in said State. ABNER NORMAN.
Justice of the Peace.

The New Era was also informed that Mrs. Charles Williams, of the same neighborhood, had been cured of rheumatism, and Henry Johnson, of Hartsville, who was troubled with neuralgia, was also cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. It seems that this remedy is in great demand in that neighborhood.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People contain, in a condensed form, all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are also a specific for troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, irregularities and all forms of weakness. They build up the blood, and restore the glow of health to pale and sallow cheeks. In men they effect a radical cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork or excesses of whatever nature. These pills are sold in boxes (never in loose bulk) at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists, or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

PARROTS HAD THE LAUGH.

Instructor of Infants Meets Difficulties in the Park Zoo.

She was a prim, close-fitted looking young woman in a dark dress, and as she walked through the Lincoln park zoo with a body guard of ten mild little girls explaining matters generally, the monkeys yawned and murmured with that tired feeling:

"Kindergarten—seen 'em before."

She paused before the parrot's cage, adjusted her eyeglasses on her classic nose, and prepared to enligten the innocent mind of youth.

"These are parrots, girls. Mamie may spell parrot."

"P-a-r-r-o-t," spelled one of the small maidens.

"'Rot,' Mamie, 'rot,'" said the fair Minerva, serenely.

"'Rot, Mamie, rot, rot, rot,'" yelled the little gray parrot that laughs, and a sympathetic chorus took up the refrain. Minerva reddened, and the maidens giggled.

"How annoying!" she went on. "These birds, girls, have the power of articulation and if carefully instructed are capable of almost perfect ennunciation; but while possessing this gift of mimicry, they have no reason to guide the import of their utterances as the human consciousness has, and consequently are unable to converse intelligently, being simply echoes so far as speaking is concerned."

The big green and red parrot stood on another leg and eyed Minerva with microscopic scrutiny.

"You understand," she continued, "they have no mind and consequently no personality. When discovered in their natural state they are as other birds; but upon being associated with human beings they rapidly acquire the use of the peculiarly shaped larnyx, which, as science tells us, enables them to articulate. The theory has been propounded that at the time of protoplasm—"

But Polly felt ill with baleful resentment. "O, rats!" he broke out. "You ain't so nice."

And the gray parrot laughed in diabolical glee as the kindergarteners were hastily led to where the canaries warbled.—Chicago Tribune.

MURDER POSTPONED.

A Prospective Case for the Coroner, But Nobody Died.

Two flashy colored boys stood in the hot sun in front of the railway eating house and looked at each other with their eyes rolled sideways. "Look hyah, you piece o' dahk meat, I got some bone-handled trouble in my pocket waitin' faw you if you eveh come 'round that baby tryin' to undamine me!"

"Slow up, boy! You's on a slippery road, an' if you don't drive caihful you going to fall right in dat ditch, fus thing you knows."

"Don't get me stahted, coon! Don't 'rouse me! I wouldn't like to do it, but I could jus' lay hold of yo' dahk body and cut it up into rubbah balls. I ain't used dat razah faw whole week now, an' it's gettin' uneasy. I can feel it movin' in my pocket an' sayin': 'Mistah, let me get out an' do someping.'"

"Look heah, you bettah sing dat razah to sleep, 'kase you evah reach faw it you jes' see whole atmosphere full o' niggah wool, striped shirt, and blue cloze. Yes, seh, you'd have to be geth'd up in a basket. I got a piece o' shiny hadwaih in my pocket, an' it sings sweet an' low, and ev'y time it speaks to you it han's you a pound o' lead. Look out faw me, boy!"

"Hush, coon, I really love trouble."

"Don't staht nothin' 'less you want to lose money faw yo' folks. Costs money to plant a coon, yes, seh. You don't get dem sivah-handled boxes faw nothin', no, seh. Got any o' dem papah cigahs, Henry?"

Henry reached for his package of cigarettes, and the traveler, who had been waiting to see murder done, gave an exclamation of disgust and walked into the railway station.—Haberdasher.

An Upper Cut.

Mrs. Murray Hill is a very homely woman. Her husband is absent from the city and her dearest friend, Mrs. Manhattan Beach, called. Mrs. Hill said:

"The last thing my husband did before he went away was to give me a kiss."

"H'm! I should think that would be the very last thing he would want to do."

And now they don't speak for some reason.—N. Y. World.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

Fine Was Remitted.

Judge Campbell had just heard the evidence against a young Mission hoodlum charged with disturbing the peace.

"I think you're guilty, young man," declared the judge. "Funds in the treasury are running low, so I guess I'll have to get in something toward my salary, as I'm getting hard up. I'll fine you five dollars."

"You've got more money than I have," pleaded the prisoner.

"But I haven't. Show up what you've got," and the judge emptied his pockets, which contained just 36 cents in change, on the desk.

The prisoner turned all of his pockets inside out and produced 25 cents.

"You are worse off than I am," said the judge. "Fine remitted. You may go."—San Francisco Post.

Slain by Poison.

Not the poison that the covert assassin administers in the drink, the food, or some other guise, but the poison of malaria shortens the lives of myriads. There is a safe and certain antidote, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, which not only fortifies the system against malaria, but roots out its seeds when they have germinated. Dyspepsia, constipation, rheumatic, liver and kidney trouble are conquered by the Bitters.

A Careful Borrower.

"Pa sent me over to borrow your lawn mower. An' he says wouldn't you prefer to sharpen it yourself?"

"Why should I prefer to sharpen it?"

"'Cause pa says he is so awkward about such things an' he might turn the edge."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Similar Experiences.

Dr. Ayer's

is the name to remember when buying Sarsaparilla. Dr. Ayer's Sarsaparilla has been curing people right along for nearly 50 years. That's why it is acknowledged to be the sovereign Sarsaparilla. It is the original and the standard. The record of the remedy is without a rival,—a record that is written in the blood of thousands, purified by its healing power.

"I nursed a lady who was suffering from blood poisoning and must have contracted the disease from her; for I had four large sores, or ulcers, break out on my person. I doctored for a long time, both by external application and with various blood medicines; but in spite of all that I could do, the sores would not heal. At last I purchased six bottles of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, thinking I would give it a thorough trial. Before the six bottles had been taken, the ulcers were healed, the skin sound and natural, and my health better than it had been for years. I have been well ever since. I had rather have one bottle of Dr. J. C. Ayer's Sarsaparilla than three of any other kind."—Mrs. A. F. TAYLOR, Englevale, N. Dak.

BUFFALO GAZETTE

DELANO, FRIDAY, NOV. 5, 1897.

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE VILLAGE OF DELANO.

DELANO DIARY

—Schnaps and scraps are reported since the cold snap.

—Dr. Ames built an addition to his office this week. a new wood shed.

—The M. E. prayer meeting was held at the parsonage Thursday evening.

—L. M. Maxfield has purchased a new horse from Joseph VanEman. of Buffalo.

—Pumpkins are plenty and fine this season. Pumpkin pie sociables are the go in neighboring villages.

—L. M. Meister has fixed up his hotel barn and given it a new coat of point. It improves the alley much.

—M. E. Quarterly conference for Delano, Montrose and Watertown circuit will be held at Delano, Friday Nov. 12.

—W. D. Freeman has moved in the Winch house for the winter, and Henry Bock now occupies his new hillside residence.

—The District Stewards meeting for Willmar District of the M. E. church, will be held at Litchfield, at 3 p. m., Wednesday, Nov. 10.

—The Watertown and Delano telephone company have, we understand, traded their line for shares in the new line that has Willmar for headquarters.

—From the number of loads of lumber daily leaving town, in every direction, we would judge that people are building more than usual at this time of year.

—Farmers who have not completed their fall work during the fine weather, prolonged longer than usual, need not expect to have much sympathy from neighbors.

—Some of our villagers are in favor of organizing a free silver club at once and beginning a warm campaign for next fall. Nothing like striking while the iron is hot.

—Book and other agents are thick now-a-days. It requires considerable nerve to say no, to all their importunities; consequently many of our citizens are down for $1.00 a month or more.

—If you wish to take a good family newspaper and make your best girl a Christmas present, subscribe for the BUFFALO GAZETTE and Demorest's Family Magazine both one year for $1.75.

—The fine weather of the last few weeks has shortened winter just that much. If it continues many more weeks, coal and wood will be cheaper; hay can already be bought at reasonable figures.

—Good horses are bringing good prices. Old plugs can hardly be given away. Few horses have been raised for several years, and good ones are growing scarce. Foreign countries are buying them.

—John Nietzel shot a big coon Tuesday. He says three or four hunters were through that part of the country hunting squirrels but failed to find the larger game. John saw him in a tree some distance away.

—Next Saturday will be the Delano Fair Day for November. We will probably have a larger crowd in town than usual as farmers are finishing up fall work and will wish to dispose of surplus stock before winter sets in.

—A man peddled a load of rutabagas about the streets one day this week, for 25cts per bushel. They were fine. The farmers in this vicinity don't seem to have so many rutabagas and turnips as they did a few years ago.

—The boys are not jumping on trains as much as they used to be since a couple were arrested for so doing. But Jim Hill's trains daily break the law by fast running through town and standing on crossings; but no arrests are made, —Many loads of fine manure block up the alleys and will have to be removed to some dumping place soon, unless neighboring farmers, whose land would produce double what it does if it had the fertilizer, come to the rescue and haul it away. Roads are good and the weather fine for such business.

—A colonial sociable under the allspice of the Delano Epworth League, will be held at the City Hall, on Friday Nov. 12, at 7:30 P. M.

Program: Tableaux, singing and recitations.

Lunch: Punkin pye. ginger bred and koffee.

On sail, rations of korn, and recipes for punkin pye. YE COMMITTEE.

—Hog cholera is creeping on in our direction. Farmers should be careful to feed their hogs on the good, pure food; not rotten potatoes or other disease producing substances. It is claimed that people who have visited sick hogs may carry the germs to well ones. Don't allow too many strangers or people having sick animals, about your hog pens. If anybody gets sick hogs farmers should not all rush over to see them, and bring home the disease to their own herds. The first sick hogs should be reported to the Board of Health of the town whose business it is to quarantine at once.

County Cullings.

Buffalo has started in to have a monthly fair on the Friday following the first Monday of each month; the first to be held on Friday, Nov. 5.

The Howard case is set for trial in Minneapolis, next Monday Nov. 8 Wright county hopes justice will be done all parties connected with the affair.

The Republican press of Wright county is trying to correll old Eaton, or freeze him out of their party. They seem to have a hard job on their hands. We wouldn't wonder if the next chairman of the Republican County Committee would be A. Y. Eaton.

County officers will be to elect next fall. Pick out the men you think best adapted to fill each county office and do what you can to get them nominated. Attend primary elections, what used to be called caucuses, where you can now vote by ballot for delegates, and urge the placing in nomination of the men you want, the men you know yourself, best qualified for the positions.

At the next election our county votes alone for a Senator and two Representatives; Wright county having been placed in a district by itself. Wright County will elect these men without the aid of Sherburne county as in days gone by. The time to think about who would fill these important offices is now. Waiting until a few days before election and having the nominees picked out by an interested clique, not to be elected, but to be swapped off for less important positions is wrong. Every good straight man should be ready and willing to take positions of trust and honor when the people see fit to honor him with them, and the people should attend primary elections and choose delegates to conventions who will place none but good men on the ticket; every man put up for his fitness for the position, and put up in good faith to receive the votes of honest men throughout the country.

WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

Entirely New. Abreast of the Times. A Grand Educator.

Successor of the "Unabridged."

Everybody should own this Dictionary. It answers all questions concerning the history, spelling, pronunciation, and meaning of words.

A Library in Itself. It also gives the often desired information concerning eminent persons; facts concerning the countries, cities, towns, and natural features of the globe; particulars concerning noted fictitious persons and places; translation of foreign quotations. It is invaluable in the home, office, study, and schoolroom.

The One Great Standard Authority.

Hon. D. J. Brewer, Justice of U. S. Supreme Court, writes: "The International Dictionary is the perfection of dictionaries. I commend it to all as the one great standard authority."

Recommended by Every State Superintendent of Schools Now in Office.

The Hicks 1898 Almanac and Paper.

We are informed that the 1898 Almanac of Prof. Irl R. Hicks is now ready, and judging from its past history, it will not be many weeks in finding its way into homes and offices all over America. It is much larger and finer than any previous issue. It contains 116 pages, is splendidly printed and illustrated on fine book paper, having the finest portrait ever given of Prof. Hicks. It can no longer be denied that the publications of Prof. Hicks have become a necessity to the family and commercial life of this country. His journal, "Word and Works, aside from its storm, weather and astronomical features, has taken rank with the best literary, scientific and family magazines of the age. Do not believe hearsay and reports. See the Hicks Almanac and paper for yourself. You will then know why they are so popular. They are educators of the millions, and unrivaled safeguards to property and human life. It is matter of simple record that Prof. Hicks has foretold for many years all great storms, floods, drouths and tornadoes, even the recent terrible drouth over all the country. The Almanac alone is 25 cents a copy. The paper $1.00 a year with the Almanac as a premium. Send to
